SPECIALS AND MASTERPIECES

SIX RELEASES EACH WEEK

A Great Serial "ROAD O' STRIFE" 15 Parts By Emmett Campbell Hall

Monday, June 28th

Road O'Strife No. 13

"The Man Who Did Not Die"

One Reel Drama

Bewildering events follow one another rapidly in this chapter of the thrilling and mysterious Lubin serial. Gershom suddenly returns to life, regains the famous silver cup, and not only announces that the fortune supposed to be Caleb Jerome's belongs to Alene, but astonishes everyone by telling the weary and indifferent girl, who has just been discharged from jail, that she is Her Royal Highness, the Princess Alene, rightful heiress to her father's crown and the throne of Urania.

Crane Wilbur and Mary Charleson featured

Tuesday, June 29th

"Her Choice"

One Reel Comedy

In this amusing release the action centers about a girl who has three ardent admirers. Betty wants to marry a regular American, but her father favors a count and her mother a lord. Betty succeeds by hoodwinking her parents and playing a hoax on the two titled suitors. In the cast are Mae Hotely, Ed Lawrence, Frances Ne Moyer, Raymond McKee, Jerold Hevener and Ben Walker.

Wednesday, June 30th

"The Path to the Rainbow"

Three Reel Feature

A splendidly written, splendidly acted comedy drama, in which a young but old-fashioned banker plans to wed his ward and then achieves happiness by unselfishly giving her to the man she wants to marry. In the cast are Ormi Hawley, Arthur Matthews, Earl Metcalfe, Herbert Fortier, William H. Turner, Peter Lang and George Bliss.

Thursday, July 1st

"By the Flip of a Coin"

Two Reel Drama

A tense and strong play of army life in India in which two officers love the same woman. One of them, through duplicity, marries her and later this is discovered. The two officers agree to flip a coin—the one who throws heads to kill himself. Again the husband stoops to crooked work, and when this, too, is discovered, the inevitable happens.

L. C. Shumway and Velma Whitman featured.

Friday, July 2nd

"Her Mother's Secret"

One Reel Drama

A charming story of a wealthy man who returns after a twenty years' absence to his home town and falls in love with the daughter of the woman who jilted him many years before. When the daughter discovers he is her mother's old sweetheart she plays a little trick which brings happiness to all concerned.

Saturday, July 3rd

Another Billie Reeves Comedy

"A Day on the Force"

One Reel

After envying with all his heart the life of a policeman, Bill temporarily becomes one by appropriating the hat and coat of a sleeping officer and then his adventures begin, but not at all along the lines that he had imagined or planned. This reel is an unusually funny one, and Reeves has a splendid opportunity to display his ability as an acrobatic comedian and pantomimist.

Freuler Elected Mutual's President

OTHER IMPORTANT NEWS OF THE WEEK

June 23, 1915.

Pd. 56 He-New York 422P 23— Motography, Chicago.

Mutual officerss president and general manager, Freuler; vice-president, Thanhouser; treasurer, Felix Kahn; secretary and counsel, Samuel Field; assistant treasurer, Naulty; executive committee, Freuler, Thanhouser, Field, Kahn, Crawford Livingston. Aitken not a candidate; Freuler's election unanimous. Seligsberg cast vote for board electing Freuler, automatically displacing himself. A. C. Roebuck nominated Freuler, seconded by Livingston. Shortest meeting yet; over at twelve forty-five.

WEDNESDAY, June 23, was an eventful day for the Mutual Film Corporation for on that day the board of directors proceeded with the election of officers for the ensuing year, and as the whole film world knows, interest in that election has been keen for many weeks past.

As MOTOGRAPHY goes to press, [illegible] that John R. Freuler has been chosen as president of the Mutual Film Corporation; Edwin Thanhouser as vice-president, and Felix Kahn as treasurer, a result which was practically forecast at the annual meeting held in Richmond, Virginia, on Wednesday, June 16, when J. W. Smith of New York and S. M. Field of Milwaukee were chosen as directors to succeed Roy Aitken, a brother of H. E. Aitken, and A. P. Gleickman, who was also considered as belonging to the Aitken faction. S. M. Field now becomes secretary and general counsel.

Mr. Freuler, who is president of the North American Film Corporation and vice-president of the American Film Manufacturing Company, is, as the trade well knows, a man of lofty ideals, an advocate of clean pictures, and above all one of the best equipped film men in the country to head such a gigantic corporation as the Mutual. He was born in Monroe, Wisconsin, forty-two years ago, the family later locating in Milwaukee, where Mr. Freuler received his schooling and early business education. He started one of the first film exchanges in Wisconsin, and when that was on a paying basis extended his activities to St. Louis and Joplin, Mo., and other western points, besides establishing the Calumet Film Exchange in Chicago, which subsequently was sold to the General Film Company, when Mr. Freuler immediately opened the Western Film Exchange of New York City. With S. S. Hutchinson, Mr. Freuler organized the American Film Manufacturing Company and was one of those most actively interested in the original formation of the Mutual Film Corporation. In conjunction with Mr. Hutchinson he planned the manufacture and distribution of the continued photoplay, "The Diamond from the Sky," out of which grew the North American Film Corporation, of which Mr. Freuler is also president. It is understood he will immediately take up his residence in New York, to which city he is moving with Mrs. Freuler and their two daughters.

NEW COMPANY ORGANIZED.

As a result of the Mutual election, it develops that another company will be incorporated in New York City within a few days, headed by H. E. Aitken, former president of the Mutual, and in which other offices will be held by Messrs. Kessel, Baumann, Livingston and other prominent directors of the Mutual Film Corporation.

The new organization, it is stated, has amalgamated the services of David W. Griffith, creator of "The Birth of a Nation" and other big feature films; Thomas H. Ince, director general of the New York Motion Picture Corporation and producer of many of the Mutual Master-Pictures; and Mack Sennett, originator and still chief producer of the Keystone comedies. These directors are expected to turn out pictures which will be shown in a chain of theaters where the two dollar scale of high prices will prevail.

The new company is said to be a four million dollar corporation, and associated with Mr. Aitken in it will be a group of financiers, who are making their entry into the financial end of the moving picture business. Though Mr. Aitken has refused to discuss these reports of his new organization he has admitted that a combination will be formed in which Messrs. Griffith, Ince, Sennett, Kessel, Baumann, new Wall street interests and the Western Import Company of London will be the leading figures. Headquarters of the new concern, it is understood, will be in New York City with branch offices in London, Paris, Vienna, Petrograd, Rome, Barcelona and South America, and the new combination will acquire control of a chain of theaters throughout the world with a central house on Broadway, New York, where the attractions will be given their premier showing. All productions are to be put forth on an elaborate scale and presented at the same prices as are charged for the best class of spoken drama.

Griffith to Direct Hopper

DeWolf Hopper is the first of the big American stars to be secured for the new Griffith-Ince-Sennett combination which is to present $2 motion pictures in a chain of theaters throughout this country and Europe.

Late Saturday evening H. E. Aitken, the head of the new organization, completed the deal with Mr. Hopper whereby that famous comedian devotes his exclusive services for one year to a series of spectacular productions which will be handled in person by D. W. Griffith. The contract carries with it a further option on Mr. Hopper's services.

Hopper, it is alleged, will receive a salary of $125,000 a year, and will be seen in some of the finest presentations Mr. Griffith is now planning for early production. The first spectacle in which the tall comedian is to appear will be a screen version of the opera "Don Quixote," with Mr. Hopper in the title role. One of the foremost composers in the country will synchronize the score to suit the adventures of the redoubtable knight of Cervantes fancy, together with his inimitable aid, Sancho Panza.

Mr. Hopper, at the Algonquin Hotel, Sunday, confirmed the report of his engagement. "I have refused many offers to go into moving pictures in the past for several reasons," he said, explaining the new move. "My principal motive in refusing was the fact that many of my colleagues had been treated very badly by the picture producers. These men were inclined to secure well known players and use their names and fame, but would surround them with mediocre support and put them out in miserable picture stories. But when I saw Mr. Griffith's production of 'The Birth of a Nation' I realized that there was one man who had the poetry and the art to realize the dramatic possibilities of the camera. The dignity and poetical fancies of that production are enough to arouse one's enthusiasm. The new work appeals to me tremendously."

Mr. Hopper's engagement will mean a series of semi-operatic screen successes which will give new life and color to the stage. He will be seen in productions of "Wang," "Panjandrum," "The Merry Wives of Windsor," "Robert Macaire" and in all probability the cream of the Gilbert and Sullivan repertoire. These will all be developed along the lines which are noted in everything Griffith creates.

Mace With Keystone

Popular Fred Mace, who was one of the chief comedians of the Keystone Company at the time of its formation, paused in Chicago on Monday, June 21, while en route to Los Angeles, long enough to admit that he is going West again to assume a position as comedian and director with the Keystone Film Company.

Mr. Mace in his new connection will once more be associated with his former Biograph partner, Mack Sennett, as well as with Ford Sterling, Mabel Normand, Roscoe Arbuckle and other former Keystone associates.

Under the banner of the new gigantic corporation of which it is said Harry Aitken is to be the head, with Mack Sennett as one of the leading figures, it is understood that the Keystone Company will manufacture and release multiple reel comedies in which such popular stars of the legitimate stage as Eddie Foy, Raymond Hitchcock, Sam Bernard and others of like caliber will be featured. Mr. Mace will undoubtedly be cast in these big productions and may assist in the direction of some of them. The news of his rejoining the Keystone Company will be hailed with delight by exhibitors the country over, for his work in the first Keystones ever released is well remembered by all exhibitors. Mace will be welcomed by all of his old associate players on his return.

Mutual's New President Talks

With the election of John R. Freuler to the presidency of the Mutual Film Corporation, a man who has made a big success as a theater owner becomes the head of this organization of independent manufacturers. Mr. Freuler has, for years, conducted a chain of profitable theaters in the West.

The Mutual, therefore, will devote its activities to the selling end of the business in a vigorous fashion as Mr. Freuler is determined to perfect his plans of distribution so that exhibitors will be given every facility to conduct their enterprises profitably.

Mr. Freuler discussed the situation immediately after the meeting which resulted in his election as president.

"The relation of this organization to the film business combines the responsibility of distributor and jobber as well as wholesaler. Our chief task is merchandising our products so that we may all secure a reasonable return for our money. Hence the necessity of doing everything possible in the interests of the exhibitor or retailer that he may secure returns without which this business cannot be conducted successfully from either the manufacturer's or distributor's standpoint. We want to do for the retailer, everything that will prove of benefit to him. We want the exhibitor to be put in a position where our service will be helpful and will neither begin nor end with simply supplying him with films.

"I feel that there is a responsibility on this organization in the way of helpful suggestions in conducting the exhibitor's business. We want to help the exhibitor make his theater more attractive, to arrange his program so that the public will be pleased to patronize his place and continue to do so.

"We must remember that the public is the final judge and that the exhibitor must, of necessity, reflect the attitude of his patrons. Therefore, it will be the duty of the Mutual to see that the regular program is strengthened in every way. We will supply not only an attractive list of one-reelers and two-reelers, but we will see to it that the subjects are sufficiently varied so that the exhibitor will give his patrons an interesting arrangement comprehending both drama and comedy in like proportions.

Perkin's Pep Producer—(TWO REELS)—SELIG—DECEMBER 20.—Percival Perkin is peddling Perkin's Pep Producer, a marvelous fluid, guaranteed to make one feel like new. He arrives in Bloom Center, where his sales are numerous, and not until after he has left do his customers realize that they have been victimized. For a longer review see another page of this issue. N. G. C.

Hartney Merwin's Adventure—SELIG—DECEMBER 20.—Hartney Merwin believes there is no adventure or romance in present day life and places a bet with his companions that he cannot get away from the conventional, and Hal Dart, his chum, plots with his sister Grace, to give Merwin the adventure he seeks. Grace meets him, but refuses to give her name and conducts him to a cottage where he sees a band of supposed counterfeiters, and summons the police, and after a battle he rescues Grace and carries her to safety. Enroute home they visit the club and tell the men they were married immediately after Merwin rescued Grace. The boys win the bet, but Merwin believes that the joke is on them because he won a charming wife.

On Her Wedding Night—(FOUR REELS)—VITAGRAPH—DECEMBER 20.—Featuring Edith Storey and Antonio Moreno. On the night of his wedding John Klendon is talking to Helen Carter, his fiancee, on the phone when he is mysteriously shot by a veiled woman. Henry Hallam, a guest, is an amateur detective and wealthy, and takes up the case. There is only one clue and that is a bit of paper with the scrawl "It was I——." inclining the police to the suicide theory. The next night Hallam finds a man lying on Broadway whose features remind him of when he was in Spain with the Carters, and he remembers a Spanish beauty casting threatening looks at Klendon. Helen enters settlement work to forget the whole affair, and is lured to an upper room in a tenement by a dark-visaged woman who pretends her baby is sick, and there finds herself confronted by a dead child, a crazy woman and a locked door. The woman tells Helen of how Klendon had refused to legitimatize their child by marriage and that he had thrown her over for Helen, and then she attempts to throw a vial of vitrol into Helen's face. Helen is rescued by Henry Hallam, who is accompanied by the man he had found in the roadway, and the Spanish woman swallows the acid and dies almost immediately, while Carlo explains the meaning of the missing note. The missing letters make it read "It was I—nez (Inez"). This was the Spanish woman's name, and the mystery now cleared, Hallam leads Helen away and shortly afterward the two find happiness as man and wife.

Levy's Seven Daughters—VITAGRAPH—DECEMBER 20.—Featuring a strong cast. While on a business trip Levy meets Straus, who brings him home to introduce him to his seven sons. Levy, who is childless, gets envious and announces that he has seven daughters and all good-looking. On his arrival home he and his wife are shocked to receive a note from Straus saying he is bringing his seven sons to pay him a visit. Levy gets seven of the girl clerks in the store to pose as his daughters, and when Straus and his seven sons arrive, things begin to hum. The next day Levy tells Straus he will have to support seven daughter-in-laws in addition to his seven sons.

The Patent Food Conveyor—VITAGRAPH—DECEMBER 20.—Featuring Kate Price and Charles Eldridge. Thatsim, who lives in a flat where the kitchen is four rooms away from the dining-room, cannot keep a cook any length of time, and is about to lose another one when Itsky, the inventor, happens in. Itsky invents a contrivance on the spot to make her work easier. It is a long conveyor belt with a windlass at each end, stretching from the kitchen through several rooms to the dining-room. An electric bell signal is used to communicate with the cook. It works fine, but, unfortunately, when Thatsim's rich uncle and aunt dine with him the signals get mixed up and havoc follows. A couple of burglars break into the house, and in the intervening rooms see savory dishes passing through the conveyor. The cops are called and a burglar chase ensues, and after it is all over Thatsim finds the will left by his uncle, and learns that he has lost an inheritance of $1,000, but doesn't care when the police hands him $2,000 reward for catching the burglars.

Packer Jim's Guardianship—(TWO REELS)—BIOGRAPH—DECEMBER 21.—Featuring Ivan Christy, Zoe Bech, W. C. Robinson and Robert Nolan. Packer Jim is a newcomer and frontiersman. He sets off toward Fourflush and sees a little girl seated on a horse in front of an Indian chief, who is a member of marauding Indians. Packer gives chase to the child and manages to kill the Indian and then takes the little girl to her home, where the dying father gives her into Jim's care and entrusts to the frontiersman the records of his claim in the hills. Claim jumpers stake Bill Pape's claim and to remove evidence of his possession they set fire to the cabin. Packer Jim manages to get back to Fourflush, where he receives notification that Pape's title to the claim is clear and then he sends for the little girl to be his solace while he recovers from his wounds.

The Danger of Being Lonesome—(TWO REELS)—ESSANAY—DECEMBER 21.—Featuring Bryant Washburn, Nell Craig and John H. Cossar. John Adams craves the company of his wife, but she having great social aspirations has little time for him. One night she gives a musical, and Adams, being lonesome, goes to a cafe. He is attracted by a child, who is trying to earn money by playing her violin. He takes her home with him. When he arrives he finds his wife in the embrace of a musician whom she has engaged to play at her musical. He later discovers him to be the father of the little violinist. Adams escorts the father and child to their home, where the mother is found murdered. The father is killed in a fight with her slayer. Adams then takes the child home with him.

The Bandits of Macaroni Mountain—(Kalem—December 21.—Featuring Bud Duncan and Ethel Teare. Mr. Doughbags falls in love with the fair Concha while touring in the Macaroni Mountains and, unknown to him, Concha is a decoy for Trovatore the Terrible, who is a full fledged member of the bandit's union. When Trovatore and his band get Doughbags into their hands he is surprised when instead of being frightened when Concha betrays him into the outlaw's hands, he merely reaches forth and disarms them, and they flee. Mrs. Doughbags comes in search of her husband and in revenge the outlaws capture her and hold her for ransom, and she falls madly in love with Trovatore. Mrs. Doughbags discovers a harmless looking switch which she throws in and the next instant she feels her head bumping against the clouds, and when she comes down she lands atop of Concha and Mr. Doughbags who are spooning, and grabs hold of Doughbags with murder in her eyes.

The Tides of Retribution—(Three Reels)—Biograph—December 22.—Featuring Jack Mulhall, Vera Sisson, Gretchen Hartman, G. Raymond Nye and Edward Cecil. Tom Larkin comes to the little town where Jim Carpenter lives with his pretty wife, Nellie. Larkin, realizing that Carpenter has invented a marvelous engine, he schemes to ruin the model and steal the plans, and as a result there is an explosion and Carpenter's wife is blinded. Larkin gets away with the plans and assumes the name of Penner and goes to an obscure village, where he meets Virginia Shirley and breaks her heart. She becomes famous as a music hall artist under the name of Madame Laverne and the outbreak of war causes her to leave Paris and sail for America. Larkin takes the same boat, as also do Carpenter and his wife, they having gone to Europe in the hope of having Nellie's sight restored. Virginia learns from Carpenter how Larkin stole his invention and she plans a double vengeance upon her betrayer, who doesn't recognize her. She plies him with wine and manages to get Carpenter's original plans and then brings the two face to face. There is a fight which is ended by the captain of the vessel, who takes command of the situation and forces Larkin to sign a confession, and when Virginia signs her name as witness Larkin then recognizes her.

The Cecropia Moth—(Split Reel)—Edison—December 22.—Instructive and interesting photographs of this moth. From the time it is hatched until it becomes a beautiful butterfly, a period covering two years, constitute about 575 feet of this picture: On the same reel with:

Animated Grouch Chaser—Edison.—An enjoyable animated cartoon by Raoul Barre. Kid Kelly and his dog go hunting and the unruly kangaroo make for laughter.

Canimated Nooz Pictorial No. 3—Essanay—December 22.—Cartoon by Wallace A. Carlson. This is a split reel release containing five hundred feet of animated cartoons as a burlesque on the topics of the day. Among the subjects reviewed this week are: Colonel Roosevelt at his country home; the great preparations that are being made for the expected overflow of riders on the 1916 water wagon; Arthur Anthracite, candidate for the Alabama legislature, makes a stand for wide open chicken coops a great issue in his campaign; and General E. Speaking of the English army is decorated by King George for capturing a flock of weeny-wursts from the German commissary department. The remainder of the reel contains scenes taken in the Canadian Rockies.

A Bushranger at Bay—(Two Reels)—Kalem—December 22.—An episode of the "Stingaree" series. Featuring True Boardman and Marin Sais. Kentish, recently arrived from England, discovers in Ethel's locket, which she has dropped, a portrait of Stingaree and suspects that she is in love with the bushranger. Later he is a passenger on the stage coach which is held up by Stingaree, and when the bushranger departs with the stolen mail bags, Kentish follows him, after sending a note to the police inspection with instructions that it should be opened at six o'clock should he fail to return with the mail bags. Kentish approaches Stingaree and tells him that unless the mail bags are delivered to him at once his identity will be made known. It develops that Kentish had known Stingaree prior to the outlaw's exile from England, and then the bushranger helps the man reach the spot where the stagecoach is to pick him up.

Beyond All Is Love—(Three Reels)—Lubin—December 23.—Featuring Francis Joyner, Helen Greene and a strong cast. In the Prologue we see Stuyvesant Hardy, who is a drug fiend, leave his wife and boy, and during his four days' debauch his wife dies. This shock braces him and saves him from the drug. The story tells of Will Hardy, Stuyvesant's grandson, who to relieve pain is given a drug and in this way contracts the drug habit. Later after leaving college he goes into his father's law office and is compelled to live Jekyll and Hyde existence. On one of his debaucheries Will meets Edna Murray and becomes enamored with her, not remembering his sweetheart, Virginia Wells, whom he loves deeply when in his normal senses. Later Virginia runs into Will while in the company of Edna and Kerry, a crooked ward heeler, and seeing them go into a house tells Will's father where he is hidden. With detectives the father goes and rescues his son, and when the drug wears off Will realizes what drug has brought to him and Virginia's love triumphs.

The Blade O' Grass—(Three Reels)—December 24.—A comedy drama directed by Burton George. Leoni Flugrath, Charles Sutton and P. H. O'Malley are prominent in the cast. After his wife elopes with another man John Ward with his little daughter makes his home in a cabin in the Maine Woods. There she grows to young womanhood. She forms an attachment for a young man from the city, but Ward puts a stop to this by ordering Winthrop to leave the woods. Later Dorothy visits her aunt in the city, where she renews her acquaintance with Winthrop. Tiring of city life she returns to her father. Winthrop follows her there and as the result of a heroic act wins her father's consent to their marriage. For a longer review see another page of this issue.

Cartoons in a Sanitarium—Edison—December 24.—Cartoons by Raoul Barre. The love-sick young man pretends illness to be near his sweetheart, a nurse. At the sanitarium he keeps the patients who demand so much attention of the nurse quiet by showing them the Animated Grouch Chaser, and they become absorbed in watching the antics of Kid Kelly and the other sketches.

Is Christmas a Bore—Vitagraph—December 24.—Featuring Mr. and Mrs. Sidney Drew and Mary Maurice. Paul Pantoum Punctual tells his wife they are going to cut out all Christmas foolishness this year. When his mother arrives and brings him a silk muffler he hurts her feelings by refusing it and is so disagreeable that she doesn't stay long. With her last words, "You might have wished me a Merry Christmas—there won't be many more for me," ringing in his ears Paul wakes up to find it was all a night-mare. Mother is really waiting downstairs and, hurriedly dressing, Paul goes down with his wife and gives the little lady a regular bear hug, and then Mr. and Mrs. Punctual do a war dance of good old-fashioned Holiday happiness.

The Oriental's Plot—Kalem—December 24.—An episode of the "Ventures of Marguerite." Marguerite Courtot and Bradley Barker featured. Marguerite and Bob rescue Bertha from Gungha, who has held the girl a prisoner. Bertha tells her benefactors that she knows the whereabouts of an old painting which tells where a fortune is concealed. Later Gungha again captures the girl and Marguerite is also entrapped. Bob tries to enter Gungha's den, but he is overpowered and bound. He manages to give an alarm which summons the police. When the police come the Hindu and his accomplices are dragged away. Bertha brings the painting to light and later Marguerite has Bob take an old blunderbuss from her wall and orders him to aim toward a certain spot over the fireplace and shoot. This he does and it is found that a key suspended by a fine wire hangs from the muzzle and over a tiny hole in the floor. When the key is inserted in this hole, a secret trap opens up and the treasure is discovered.

The Woman with a Rose—(Three Reels)—Essanay—December 25.—Featuring Lillian Drew, Ernest Maupain and a strong cast. Adele Clinton poses for a picture for her husband, who is an artist. The picture is exhibited and called "The Woman with the Rose." Lechison sees the picture and wishes to buy the woman, while Czerny, a musician, appreciates art and wants to buy it for its beauty. Lechison leases a studio and advertises for a model. Adele sees the ad and hoping to help her husband, who is down to his last cent, she applies for the position and is accepted. Not until Lechison tries to make love to her does she realize the trap that she has stepped into. She screams, and Czerny, the musician goes to her aid. He kills Lechison. Adele is accused of murder, but her husband, to shield her, confesses his guilt. Adele then declares she committed the crime. Czerny comes forward with his confession, and Adele is freed.

The Boy at the Throttle—Kalem—December 25.—An episode of the "Hazards of Helen" series, featuring Helen Gibson. Bobbie Layson, the son of a station engineer, climbs into a cab of a freight engine and pulls the throttle. Helen is ordered to derail the runaway and thus prevent it from running head-on into the approaching passenger train. Lyson, fearing for his son's life, phones her not to send the engine into the ditch, and a small truck suggests a way out of her dilemma. Helen gets the car on the track and speeds down the grade to the end of the siding where she opens the switch and flags the passenger train. She then speeds to the Melius bridge and reaches it before the runaway train. Climbing to the topmost girder she then hangs suspended by a rope and as the onrushing train roars across the bridge she drops to the top of a freight car and in a few seconds the runaway is brought to a stop.

No Smoking—Lubin—December 25.—Featuring Billie Reeves as Wilkens, a tobacco fiend, who, remembering that his Aunt Julia, owner of a bundle of coin, dislikes smoking, when he asks her to come and visit him decides to bar tobacco from his home during her stay. She finds a stray bundle of ashes lying about and he tells her that he uses it for tooth powder. Later when he carelessly sticks a cigarette in his face he is forced to swallow it when Aunt Julia turns about and he tells her it was a lady finger. He sneaks away into the den to steal a smoke and Aunt Julia comes in and almost catches him. Finally he thrusts the burning cigar into his pocket and shortly after his trousers burst into flames and Aunt Julia, discovering the deception, leaves with her bank roll undisturbed.

The Sacred Tiger of Agra—Selig—December 25.—Dr. Harris and his daughter, Jennie, incur the gratitude of Omah, a native in the jungle. The Sacred Tiger of Agra is released by a vindictive servant. Dr. Harris dies and Jennie is left with Omah to protect her, and Rajah Hamurii purchases the doctor's land and plots to secure her for himself. Omah and Jennie flee to the jungle, where they come upon the Sacred Tiger, who is put to sleep with a powerful drug. The Rajah overtakes Jennie and when she offers to restore the tiger if he will provide a guide to escort her to the settlement the honor of the Rajah forces him to agree to this.

The 13th Girl—(THREE REELS)—VITAGRAPH—DECEMBER 25.—Featuring Arline Pretty, Julia Swayne Gordon, Robert Whitworth and Arthur Cozine. Lottie Evans, a beautiful girl of the sweatshops, is offered a position of the 13th girl in a wonderful fashion show given by the department store firm of Daymond and Sons. Jo Daymond, the junior partner, becomes infatuated with the girl's beauty, and Lewis De Freece, the artistic advisor of Jo, also falls in love with her. Jo is engaged to a wealthy society girl unknown to Lottie, who is a Rescue-Home patroness and settlement worker. Lottie refuses to go with Jo and as a result she loses her position in the store, and one night she meets him and gives in to his pleadings, and after that her family is secured from want and she is happy in the thought that after Daymond, Senior's death, Jo has promised to marry her. He is forced to marry Ethel Gibson, and the first Lottie knows of it Lewis De Freece walks into the fashionable apartment where she is living and hands her a bill of sale for the place, intimating that it includes her. Later the affair gets into the papers, killing Jo's father and Jo ends his life, while Lottie and Ethel becomes lifelong friends and companions.

Mutual Program

The Winning of Jess—(TWO REELS)—CENTAUR DECEMBER 9.—Starring Margaret Gibson and the Bostock animals. Charles Robbins, deserted by his wife, goes to Arizona with his child. After a terrible night fighting the pumas in the desert, he leaves the baby girl on the doorstep of the Crosby home. Robbins builds himself a hut in the woods nearby and for years plays the part of guardian angel to "Jess Crosby" without ever revealing his identity. Jess is wooed by Tom Gunn, a cowboy, Robbins' brother and his son John arrive at the Crosby's. John is attracted to Jess and Tom calls "the tenderfoot" to account. This angers Jess and she promises to marry John. However, a strenuous battle with pumas results in the worthiness of Tom, the saving of the hermit from death, and the reunion of the two Robbins brothers. Then Tom looks forward to marriage with Jess, while John finds himself established as the girl's cousin.

Seeing America First—(SPLIT REEL)—GAUMONT—DECEMBER 14.—In the first half of this reel the Mutual traveler conducts a visit to the steel mills of Pittsburgh. The second half of the reel is devoted to:

Keeping Up With Joneses.—"Pa" is so well intentioned in his desire to help "Ma" get ahead of their social enemies, the Joneses, that it seems almost cruel to make him fail. This is one of a series of comic cartoons drawn by Harry Palmer.

The Ace of Death—(THREE REELS)—RIALTO—DECEMBER 15.—Featuring Stella Hammerstein. Through love for her sister's husband, which changes to hate on being repulsed, Theresa Castellar causes him to be dealt the "ace of death." Before fleeing to America, however, Theresa sets her sister's child adrift at sea, robbing her of a precious diamond necklace. Paula then goes to America and haunts the gambling houses in search of Theresa and her associate, Belton. At last the chance for Paula's revenge comes, Doris, a girl whom she has saved from suicide, being the tool. However, in the discovery that Doris is her own child, Paula forgets revenge, allows her enemies to escape and determines to live the rest of her life for her daughter.

Cissy's Innocent Wink—CASINO—DECEMBER 19.—Deacon Crabapple brings back Cissy, his young wife, from the city. Unknown to him, she is afflicted with a nervous trouble which takes the form of an unconscious wink. Her husband thinks that she is flirting with the whole parish. Complications follow and it is not until the deacon threatens to shoot every man in the congregation that a doctor clears up the scandal of Cissy's flirtatious conduct.

The Bankhurst Victory—(TWO REELS)—RELIANCE—DECEMBER 19.—Featuring Irene Hunt. The famous Kaffire diamond has been placed in the vaults of J. Jacard & Son, jewelers. Reginald Mason, manager of this company, conspires with Jim Hanson to steal the gem. Mrs. Mason pleads with her husband not to commit the theft, but with no results. She then slips out and talks to Hanson. The next morning Mrs. Mason's body is found in the shrubbery and her husband is accused of mureder. Remar, a famous detective, finally catches the murderer and the other two persons connected with the jewel theft and restores the gem before its absence has been noticed.

The Necklace of Pearls—THANHOUSER—DECEMBER 19.—This story has to do with the efforts of two crooks who have stolen a valuable necklace while on the passage from Europe to America and concealed it cleverly beneath the ribbon of a cat. The thieves are defeated by the little daughter of the woman who has lost the pearls.

Making a Man of Johnny—BEAUTY—DECEMBER 20.—Featuring John Sheehan, John Steppling and Carol Halloway. John, a wealthy bachelor, falls in love with Carol, a sprightly bathing girl. John's sister writes that her son Johnny is too good to be true and asks John to make a man of him and he tells his bathing beach sweetheart that his nephew, an awful simp, is coming to visit him. Johnny proves anything but a simp and he and Carol become friends at first sight and when she tells him what his uncle said he arranges to act the part of the simp he is supposed to be. Johnny asks his uncle if he were in love with a girl and there was another fellow, what he would do and his uncle answers: "Marry her, you simp"! Johnny follows the good advice and when Carol and he are wedded they return to uncle's presence and Johnny thanks him for making a man of him.

The Clean-Up—(TWO REELS)—AMERICAN—DECEMBER 20.—Featuring Winnifred Greenwood and Frank Borzage in the story of how gambling in a city is left run by a wealthy politician until he discovers that his own daughter is in the clutches of a leader of a gambling house and then through the aid of the girl's lover, a newspaper reporter, he cleans up the city. For a longer review see another page of this issue.

When William's Whiskers Worked—FALSTAFF—DECEMBER 20.—In this comedy, William, the girl's father, is forced to give his consent to the marriage of his daughter through the workings of misfortune. William's whiskers hold him in good stead, for, penniless and far from home, circumstances force him to make his whiskers work in a side-show as a beared lady. His daughter's beau saves him from this undignified occupation and agrees to keep "mum" on consideratiin that he gets the daughter.

Ambition—(THREE REELS)—THANHOUSER—DECEMBER 21.—With Gladys Hulette and Howard M. Mitchell. A strong, determined man personifying Ambition wins the daughter of a distinguished banker through sheer force of personality. The "Man of Ambition," who is a newspaperman of ability, takes a chance to mount higher on the ladder of fame, although it means the ruin of his father-in-law. However, a former suitor of the girl sacrifices his fortune to save her father. The daughter, learning the cause of their misery, throws over the man and accepts her old suitor who has stood by them in the hour of need. Then the "Man of Ambition" rises to achievements, but not happiness.

The Mystery of Carter Breene—(THREE REELS)—CENTAUR—DECEMBER 22.—Featuring Crane Wilbur. When Carter Breene is found dead—the result of stabbing—circumstances point to the guilt of Margery, Breene's adopted daughter. Allan Dare, who is interested in the girl, does all in his power to save her, while Darrell Shane, who is trying to force Margery to marry him, uses the circumstances to further his ends. The identity of the real murderer comes as a surprise to all concerned, for it is none other than Arthur, Breene's wayward son, who has recently been disinherited by his father. Shane, who has suspected Dare, is nonplused at the result, and he realizes that he has no further grounds for threats to Margery.

Toodles, Tom and Trouble—FALSTAFF—DECEMBER 23.—Tom is in love with little Toodles' young aunt, and to please the baby's mother and thus indirectly please his sweetheart, he takes Toodles out in the park. Leaving his charge asleep on a bench, he takes a stroll with a friend. Meanwhile an officious gentleman takes the child and tries to find its parents. Returning to the bench, Tom sees a ferocious dog seize what he thinks is the helpless form of Toodles but what is in reality only a doll, as he finds after some hair-raising adventures. He finally recovers the child, returns home and receives modestly the thanks due for the care of the infant.

Yes or No—AMERICAN—DECEMBER 24.—Featuring Alfred Vosburgh and Nell Franzen in the story of a young girl who receives a letter from her sweetheart telling her to either answer his proposal by "yes or no." She has visions of a happy home and their wedded life if the answer is "yes" and has visions of her stage career if she says "no." She finally decides that the answer should be "yes" and writes him telling him this.

The Pitch of Chance—(TWO REELS)—MUSTANG—DECEMBER 24.—Featuring Helene Rosson, Jack Richardson, Lizette Thorne and Frank Borzage in a story of a young gambler who wins in a hand of poker a girl from another gambler. The girl makes him feel sorry for his action and he takes her back to the gambling town the next morning. She later is the means of saving his life and he finally tells her he wants to really marry her. For a longer review see another page of this issue.

That Country Gal—Beauty—December 25.—Featuring Neva Gerber, Lucille Warde, William Carroll and Nan Christy. When the country girl's aunt, cousin and uncle receive word that she is coming to the city to visit them, they are horror-stricken. She proves, however, to be a vivacious, stylish and pretty young girl, and her uncle, not recognizing her, starts a flirtation. All sorts of complications arise until the girl has uncle, aunt and cousin literally eating out of her hand and they all break their necks to wait upon the once despised rural relative.

Author! Author!—(Three Reels)—Mustang—December 25.—Featuring Art Acord, Rea Berger, Chief Big Tree and Larry Peyton in a story of Marcellus Peckinpaw, who insists on directing the film version of his celebrated book and incurs the enmity of Montague, the director of the company. Through Peter Lone Wolf, Buck Parvin rids the company of the author's presence and receives $50.00 as a reward. For a longer review see another page of this issue.

Hunting—Casino—December 26.—While Lord Fitzroy and Count de Gorgonzolli, two impecunious gentlemen, are at lunch with Gladys, the plume on that lady's hat becomes ignited from a candelabra and she demands that it be replaced. After exhausting all means of running down a plume, the two decide to go hunting. But the most they get, however, is the novelty of being arrested by the game warden, while Reginald Astorbilt buys Gladys a plume and makes her a fast friend.

Lord John, younger brother of the Marquis of Haslemere, is famous as "John Hasle," author of detective romances. In America, the rehearsals of the dramatization of one of Lord John's books have been called off by Julius Felborn, the manager, at the instance of one of his close friends, Roger Odell. Lord John finally comes to America, discovers the reason for Odell's animosity toward him and offers to solve a mystery which closely concerns Odell and his sweetheart, Grace Callander. Two of Grace's former lovers have been mysteriously done away with by someone to whose interest it is to keep Grace unmarried. Grace is not willing to expose Roger to the same fate. Lord John ultimately discovers that Mirian, Grace's sister and the unsuspected wife of Paola Tostini, an Italian, is the culprit. Her guilt being established, Marian eludes her captors and jumps out of a window to her death.

Stage Struck—Joker—December 18.—With Max Asher—When a show troupe arrives in town, Jane sees the performers, falls in love with the tenor of the opera and turns down her country lover. The latter tries to prevent Jane from doing anything rash, but his efforts are not needed, however, as it turns out that the tenor is married to a wife of no sweet disposition.

Love and a Savage—Nestor—December 20.—With Eddie Lyons and Lee Moran. Betty decides to be a missionary in a savage land. This pleased her father and mother, but not Eddie, who, for fear of losing her forever, proposes that she marry him. But she refuses. He enlists the aid of his friend Lee. The latter dressed, or undressed, as a savage, is taken to her home by Eddie, who tells her that he is a real savage and will be good for her to practice missionary work on. Lee is a good actor, and in no time Betty comes to the conclusion that missionary work is not to her liking, and phones Eddie the good news.

Christmas Memories—(Three Reels)—Gold Seal—December 21.—Featuring Ella Hall and Robert Z. Leonard. Little Sunshine is an orphan child of the mountains, who is being brought up by Rev. Baker. Robert Harding, a clubman, sets up a camp in the mountains and meets Little Sunshine. They marry soon later and return to the city. Here the girl has a hard time to get along, and her husband becomes piqued at her inability to conform with the conventions of his accustomed existence. Finally Harding returns home to find that his wife has disappeared. He throws himself into a whirl of dissipation in an endeavor to forget. Some months after Little Sunshine has returned to her mountain home, the kind minister learns that his former charge is about to become a mother. Harding feels the sting of remorse for his actions toward his wife and becomes disgusted with the life he is leading. He seeks out Little Sunshine, and there is a happy reconciliation as they both fondle their first-born.

Graft—(Two Reels)—Universal—December 20.—Second episode of the series serial entitled "The Tenement House Evil," written by Hugh C. Weir and Joe Brandt. Bruce Larnigan is elected to the office of District Attorney, and immediately sets out to better the tenement house conditions. The Trust Syndicate, whose members own most of these properties, plan to discredit Bruce by luring him to a certain notorious house, and then having him arrested. Their plan fails, however, and the District Attorney learns the leader of the Syndicate. This man's children are trapped in a burning building. Bruce rescues them and Maxwell Dow then promises to aid him in bettering the conditions. Learning this the Syndicate prepares to fight vigorously both the deserter and the zealous reformer.

When Love Laughs—Imp—December 21.—Matt Moore and Jane Gail. David and Jane are in love, but each is suspicious of the other. Jane employs Bessie to meet David and put him to the test by inducing him to make love to her. David gets John to help him in a like manner. John persuades Jane to elope and Bessie persuades David to elope with her. John and Bessie, however, who have always been lovers (unknown to the audience) rig up a scheme whereby they bring David and Jane to their senses.

The Great Fear—Laemmle—December 22.—Larry Moore, who has a small grocery store, is in love with Peggy O'Grady, but, while she likes Larry, she is fascinated by the better dressed fellows who go in for "swell times." Peggy's mother, who takes in washing, one day ruins a shirt. As she cannot afford to pay for it, she is greatly troubled. Peggy, however, tells her that only a "cheap skate" would oblige her to make it good, for the shirt was worn out anyway. It turns out that Ed, the man who has taken Peggy out in a taxi and become quite familiar with her, is the owner of the shirt. He refuses to pay for his laundry. Later, Peggy, learning Ed's real character, forces him to pay her mother. Larry then throws him out of the store, and Peggy, who has been perilously near the downward course, finds consolation in the true love of Larry.

From Beanery to Millions—(Two Reels)—L-Ko—December 22.—When Alice's father dies he wills her to a cafe owner, to whom he is indebted, and Alice is forced to work in the cafe. She is befriended by a young man who is heir to an immense fortune and becomes his wife. The father, however, disinherits his son for marrying against his wishes, and they live in extreme poverty. Later the young people's child is injured by an automobile in which its grandfather is riding. A reconciliation takes place and all go to live in the father's house. The cafe owner, who is now a butler in the father's house, forces Alice to open the safe. But the automobile in which the villain attempts to escape blows up, and when he comes down the money and jewels are recovered.

One Hundred Years Ago—(Two Reels)—Laemmle—December 23.—Rupert Julian and Dorothy Davenport. Humphrey Lane is a lifelong friend of his neighbor, Mr. Gilbert. They strongly favor a marriage between Lane's son, Rodney, and Gilbert's daughter, Evelyn. The son and daughter have no objections as they are in love already. The betrothal is soon celebrated, but immediately after, the two fathers have a violent quarrel and heartlessly separate the young people. Gilbert's pride makes him obdurate and he will not allow Evelyn to even see Rodney. Evelyn dies of grief. When Rodney goes to Gilbert to apologize for his father, he is too late. Gilbert, overcome with remorse, shoots himself, after recording the outcome of his pride in his diary, and leaving it as a warning to his descendants. One hundred years later, this warning is read at the needed moment, and prevents another pair of lovers from being forced apart by pride.

Howard's Monarchs of the American Forest—(SPLIT REEL)—POWERS—DECEMBER 23.—A vaudeville act consisting of the feats of some trained black bears. The cumbersome beasts are put through their paces by Mr. Frank Howard, assisted by his wife. The animals manifest the result of long and skillful training.

The Terrible Truth—REX—DECEMBER 24.—Old Dave Phelps and his partner, Tom Sanford, are doing very well with their prospecting. Tom is in love with Mary Ann, Phelps' daughter, but the latter believes she loves Steve, a loafer and hard drinker. However, she learns that Steve is unfaithful and, in a moment of pique, marries Tom. Finally, after a struggle between Tom and Steve, by which Tom convinces the girl of the strength of his love, Mary Ann realizes that her real love is for him, and not Steve.

The Tail of the "C"—(THREE REELS)—VICTOR—DECEMBER 24.—Mary Fuller and Paul Panzer. Ever since the arrival of Mary Carpenter and Peter Cooper at a seashore hotel, the latter has yearned to be acquainted with the former. Through a mistake in valises, Peter has learned that the girl is interested in a certain Professor Von Munsternberg's works on astronomy. Since Mary will have nothing to do with him as Peter Cooper, he decides to impersonate the learned professor. This works very well, and Peter makes a hit with Mary, thanks to her superficial knowledge of the heavens. Finally the real professor appears on the scene and unmasks the imposter. Peter, however, puts himself in a better light by capturing a robber. After he convinces her that it was his only chance of winning her, she relents and pardons the way he has betrayed her confidence.

When Rogues Fall Out—(THREE REELS)—BISON—DECEMBER 25. — With Helen Holmes. The president of the S. L. Railway obtains a franchise for his company. Frank Hynes, an acquaintance of Helen Holmes, is a friendly visitor to the house, but in secret, is trying to get his hands on the franchise. Through the aid of Ben White, a dope fiend, Frank Hynes finally steals these papers. White is a cleaverer thief than Hynes believes, for, before delivering the papers to him, White has photographed them. When Hynes turns on his helper and has him sent up for ten years, White escapes on the way to prison, later meets and becomes acquainted with Helen, and she is instrumental in eluding Hynes and getting the copy of the papers to her father. Hynes is finally arrested and White is given his freedom. As the story ends, White is on the way toward leading a better life with the assistance of Helen.

Greed and Gasoline—L-KO—DECEMBER 26.—With Reggie Morris and Gertrude Selby. Two lazy tramps scheme to make some money. One pretends to be hit by Reggie's auto. He is taken to the young peoples' home, where all of his extravagant whims are satisfied out of sympathy and fear of a law suit. Finally, the tramp's fat side partner arrives, and they try robbery, with the result that the victory is on the side of the police.

Stronger Than Death—(TWO REELS)—REX—DECEMBER 26.—With Louise Carbasse. June Lathrop, an orphan, under the guardianship of Rupert Spaulding, a rejected suitor of her deceased mothers, falls in love with John Henshaw, a young surgeon. June, however, realizing how truly her guardian loves her, feels she can not do other than accept his proposal. Not long after their marriage Rupert dies. June's promise to him that she would not marry again causes her untold grief, for Henshaw still presses his suit. One night the girl falls from the balcony and sustains concussion of the brain. It happens that Henshaw, now a celebrated surgeon, operates upon her. While under the anaesthetic, Rupert comes to her in spirit and releases her from the promise. When regaining consciousness, June finds that the spirit-dream has been true, for the document which bore the promise is in ashes, as in the dream.

Rosemary—(FIVE REELS)—METRO—DECEMBER 20.—Featuring Marguerite Snow. The elopement of Dorothy Cruikshank and her lover is broken up by a violent thunder-storm, and they are compelled to seek shelter in the house of Sir Jasper. Dorothy's parents, who pursue, also stop at the same house, and it is through the genial Sir Jasper that the parents are reconciled to their daughter's lover. Sir Jasper comes to love the girl, but, realizing his age and unfitness for such a tender young girl, he does not take advantage of Dorothy's admiration for him. Rather does he subjugate his yearnings and see Dorothy and her lover happily married. For a longer review see pp. 1292 of last issue.

Paramount

Mr. Grex of Monte Carlo—(FIVE REELS)—LASKY.—Featuring Theodore Roberts, Dorothy Davenport and Carlyle Blackwell. The plot deals with the efforts of three great continental powers to form a treaty, the object being to isolate England so as to leave her at the mercy of her enemies. The British Secret Service having obtained information regarding the meeting of the representatives of the three great powers, sends Lord Huntersley, a diplomat, to the rendezvous, which happens to be Monte Carlo, and at the same time Richard Lane, a young American millionaire and friend of Huntersley's, arrives at the same place. Lane has fallen in love with the daughter of a Mr. Grex, who is in reality the Russian representative, Grand Duke Augustus Petroff, and his daughter being Grand Duchess Fedora. Lane forces Fedora to declare that she loves him and by persistent spying he finds out what the terms of the dangerous treaty are and finally decoys the three plotters on board his steam yacht, where he sends Lord Huntersley in upon them, remarking, "England will be extremely interested in this." The three representatives of the powers are set ashore and a wedding between the wily American and Fedora on board the Yankee's yacht ends the tale in satisfactory fashion.

The Beloved Vagabond—(Six Reels)—Pathe—December 17.—Gold Rooster Play founded on the novel by Wm. J. Locke. The picture, in natural colors, was produced by Edward Jose, and features Edwin Arden in a cast which includes Katherine Browne-Decker and Bliss Milford. Gaston de Nerac returns from France and prepares for his marriage to Joanna Rushmore. Through the perfidy of another suitor he loses her. After a period of recklessness he and Augustus Smith set out on a vagabond journey. He returns and meets Joanna, but they realize that they are not for each other. Paragot then finds something in a cottage that he failed to find in a mansion. For a longer review see another page of this issue.

Triangle Program

Released Week of December 19.

Jordan Is a Hard Road—(Five Reels)—Fine Arts.—Featuring Frank Campeau, Dorothy Gish and Owen Moore in an emotional drama of the Canadian Northwest in which Frank Campau is cast as an ex-convict and Dorothy Gish his daughter, who grows up not knowing who her father was. When the bandit returns to the town his daughter is still kept in ignorance of who he is, although he protects her, and finally because of her love for Sheldon, an Englishman, which part is played by Moore, is killed in order that they may be united. For a longer review see page 1143 of the issue of November 27.

The Winged Idol—(Five Reels)—Triangle-Kay-Bee.—Featuring Katherine Kaelred and House Peters in a story of how a woman of strong personality meets and recognizes in a millionaire who is rapidly "going the pace" her soul mate and leads him from degradation only to lose him to his wife and little daughter. For a longer review see page 1143 of the November 27th issue of Motography.

Crooked to the End—(Two Reels)—Keystone.—Featuring Fred Mace and Anna Luther in the story of a station master in a Wells Fargo Express office, his daughter, an engineer who loves her, and two crooks who plan to get money shipped by a wealthy man. All of the highly exciting incidents which follow can only be appreciated when seen on the screen. For a longer review see page 1289 of the issue of December 18th.

Fatty and the Broadway Stars—(Two Reels)—Triangle-Keystone.—Featuring Roscoe Arbuckle as a cleaner around the studio. The humor consists of his breaking up of the scenes in which the various stars are working. Many stars also appear in this comedy. For a longer review see another page of this issue.

A Price For Folly—(Five Reels)—V. L. S. E. —A Blue Ribbon Feature, with Edith Storey and Antonio Moreno. The story tells of a young man who is infatuated with an actress. His father warns him to change his mode of living, but Jean pays little heed. In a dream he sees himself brought to utter ruin by his wild living. To spare his wife a broken heart because of her son's behavior the father kills her and then he dies from shock. Financially ruined, the actress spurns Jean and later, when he is mortally wounded in a duel with his rival for her favor, she laughs at him. When he awakens, Jack resolves to reform. For a longer review see another page of this issue.

Father and the Boys—(Five Reels)—Broadway Universal—December 20.—Digby Bell is featured in the comedy adapted from George Ade's famous comedy drama of the same title, a full review of which appears on another page of this issue. N. G. C.

World

Sealed Lips—(Five Reels)—Equitable—World —December 13.—Directed by John Ince, and featuring William Courtnay as Henry Everard, who is imprisoned for a murder committed by his friend Cyril Maitland, a minister, and who as a consequence is scorned as the seducer of Alma Lee, the girl whom Cyril has ruined. Many years later Maitland makes a public confession of his guilt. The story is impressively dramatic and convincing. The production and acting is admirable. In the supporting cast are Adale Ray, Arthur Ashley and Mary Charleson. For a longer review see another page of this issue.

Miscellaneous

The Burglar and the Lady—(Five Reels)—Sun Photoplay.—Featuring James J. Corbett and Claire Whitney. The play opens with the legal separation of Henry Banfield and his wife who have two children, both boys. One is given over to the mother's care and a life of poverty, and the other remains under the guardianship of the father and reared in the lap of luxury. The poor lad becomes a thief and rises to notorious eminence as the most daring burglar of the age, a social Raffles of engaging personality. The other boy becomes a minister of the gospel and a friend of Mr. Harmon, a wealthy banker. The minister is in love with Norma, Harmon's daughter, who does not reciprocate his affections. Raffles is successful in winning Norma's love, however, and with the aid of a confederate, he loots the mansion of various jewels and later robs the Harmon bank. Later John Banfield discovers that the burglar is his brother and Raffles escapes and decides that for the girl's sake he will turn over a new leaf and the final scene shows the lovers sailing away on a steamer to other lands.

The Waif—(Five Reels)—Aurora.—Featuring Matty Roubert as a waif who performs a service for Henry Irvington and is invited by the old actor to share his meager board and lodging. The two are poverty stricken and on the verge of starvation when the waif applies to Bradley, a famous manager, for work, and to prove his ability the boy gives some imitations of well-known actors and is engaged to star in a juvenile play that he is producing. Bradley prepares a moving picture version of the play and a series of the scenes are taken at the Bradley mansion and Mrs. Bradley invites the waif and Irvington to tea. To interest the boy she tells her own baby was kidnaped a few years before and describes the peculiar birthmark that the child had over its heart. The waif, who is ignorant of his parentage, has such a birthmark and is at once recognized as the lost child.

COMING METRO EVENTS

METRO Pictures are practical pictures made by showmen and for showmen.

Metro stars are real stars with established artistic reputations.

Metro costs are visible on the screen, in the pictures, and to this fact the rich scenic investiture of the scenes bears eloquent witness.

Metro vitality, the living, breathing strength of life, is the keynote of Metro's success because Metro pictures are not only artistic, they are alive.

We invite a critical comparison of our pictures with all the others in the field and suggest that you ask the exhibitors who are making our success theirs. We want you to make us prove it.

How Triangle Plays Hold Their Place

It is said that dramatic critics tire of the plays they see; that their sense of appreciation is dulled with repetition, and that constantly increasing power is demanded by them in the plays they review as the weeks roll on.

It sounds reasonable, but—

Is it not interesting and also highly significant when the critics of great cities keep on insisting that Triangle Plays are increasing in quality?

Listen to this—

In "Double Trouble," the top notcher at the Knickerbocker Theater this week, Douglas Fairbanks exceeds his performance in "The Lamb" by a wide margin. "Double Trouble" is somewhat in the melodramatic comedy class, and there is enough melodrama, real comedy, with pathos thrown in for good measure to please anyone. —N. Y. Mail.

"Weber and Fields" in "The Best of Enemies" are seen in a clever plot of the chap who disappears and manages to have his rival accused of his death. Even if it were not generally an excellent comedy, two scenes would make it worth while to see. To see Lew Fields as a prisoner try to ingratiate himself with a murderous looking juror is to be tickled clear down in the midribb.

—N. Y. Evening Sun.

If the tale of the jaded critical senses be true, does not this speak eloquently of the Triangle Quality?

They're Worth a THOUSAND a Night to New York Theatre Managers—What Are They Worth to You?

MR. and MRS. VERNON CASTLE

The Foremost Dancers and Fashion Leaders in a Melodrama Written Around Their Lives

Everybody knows the Castles and everybody wants to see them from the wealthy right down. Everywhere they go they are a hit. As stars in "Watch Your Step," the great musical comedy success, they made dramatic history and satisfied the most exacting box office demands.

Here in a perfectly produced and acted six-part drama, full of "go" and vim and life, they bring to you the opportunity to capitalize all the publicity and popularity in your territory for yourself.

Get Your Territory

"The Whirl of Life" is a play with enough romance to delight the youth; with enough homely philosophy to satisfy the elderly folk; with enough excitement to make even the youngest gallery fan shout himself hoarse.

This is not press talk. This is a digest of just what happened in the Globe Theatre, New York, when the play was shown.

The WHIRL of LIFE

Story by Vernon Castle Adapted for Screen by Catharine Carr Produced by Oliver D. Bailey

Before asking for this picture analyze what it is that to your mind will make the ideal feature to make money for you. Big stars, a big play, powerful scenes, good photography, exceptional direction, enough of the soft things of life and a trace of villainy. They are all in this feature. Do you want it?

Wire if interested. Territories are going rapidly

THE CORT FILM CORPORATION

LONGACRE BUILDING John Cort, President NEW YORK CITY

☞ Figure the least that your territory ought to bring you with this headliner. Note that such careful buyers as A. Caille & Co., Majestic Theatre, Detroit, Mich., have acquired the State of Michigan. The Celebrated Players Film Co., Chicago, have acquired Illinois and Wisconsin. The Authors Film Co., Inc., has acquired greater New York, New York State, Pennsylvania and New Jersey. Possibly by the time this is on the press, other territories will be gone. This is not the opportunity to delay. A wire is the thing to acquire an option for you.

The Vernon Castles have made money for legitimate theatres, vaudeville theatres, dance houses, restaurants. Their name attached to shoes and other clothes have sold them. Don't you think their motion pictures should do as much for you?

A photoplay embracing a theme never before attempted in cinematography, and stupendous in its execution!

The action is laid in the semi-tropics of Florida, the desert wastes of Arizona, the awe-inspiring mountainous regions of interior Georgia, the canyons of Colorado, the decks of a three-masted schooner and an ocean-going liner, and the parlors of refined New York.

As a standard by which all our releases may be judged, it was made without regard to cost with an incomparable cast of stage and film stars, and is the last word in dramatic intensity.

"Peg-O-My-Heart"

Says:

"I know that no actor or actress, however talented, can be expected to play every and any part equally well. I know for me the unworldly, unsophisticated, modest, retiring maid seems to come most naturally and most pleasing to me. I think I can play that sort of a part best. That is why I am delighted with my casting with as my gruff-good-hearted old father in

The Antique Dealer

The second Premo release, following Nat C. Goodwin in "The Master Hand," which recently appeared on the World Film Program and booked so widely. Cyril Maude has in this five-reel production an opportunity to give to the motion picture public just the sort of part which in "Grumpy" has been so popular on the legitimate stage. The rest of the supporting cast includes such eminent names as Montagu Love, Margot Williams, Lionel Belmore, Walter Craven, Will T. Carlton, Mrs. Cooper Cliff, Charles Francis, and others.

The direction is by Harley Knoles, whose work in "The Master Hand" has placed him as one of the four greatest directors in America today. This is the opinion of all those great critics who have witnessed that production.

If you are interested in any phase of the distribution of "The Antique Dealer" we should be pleased to hear from you.

EASTMAN KODAK CO.,

poration distributing 'The Diamond from the Sky' my experience has been that the exhibitor who adopted the majority of the suggestions that we made has been very successful in handling this record-breaking continued photoplay. I advocated from the beginning that exhibitors be generous in the use of heralds and facsimile $10,000.00 checks. It is significant that those who adopted this form of arousing public interest have seen the result in bigger box office receipts. I want to appeal to the selfish, yet natural side of the exhibitor—that side is the box office end of it.

"The regular program of the Mutual Film Corporation will be strengthened in every possible way. I am one of those who believe that the moving picture business is one of volume. It has been so successful because it has brought to millions a form of entertainment that is interesting and instructive. Big investments have been made in staging moving picture plays and the money has come back to the manufacturer with interest because of a fact that enables an organization like Mutual to distribute many prints of these pictures. When you consider that on an average of 18,000,000 people every day go to the picture theaters in this country, the importance of this volume angle will be apparent.

"It is my intention, as soon as possible, to supply the exhibitors all over the country except in perhaps two or three metropolitan centers, with a plan of model exchanges. It is my purpose to establish these model exchanges wherever practical, on the ground floor. This is done entirely for the convenience of the exhibitors. In this way, the Mutual will be able to display its merchandise to advantage so that exhibitors may see exactly what we intend furnishing them along with the films.

"I want our representatives to sell the theater men service plus merchandise. There is a responsibility on the representatives of Mutual beginning before the delivery of the film and not ending either with the showing of the story on the screen. In other words, it is my desire that a spirit of co-operation prevail throughout all Mutual offices and I will work to that end."

Organize to Fight Censorship

Censorship is a menace to the very foundation of liberty and freedom, and for the purpose of devising decisive and determined efforts to combat this preposterous evil a meeting of manufacturers and distributing companies was held on Monday, June 14, in the executive offices of the V. L. S. E., Inc., at 1600 Broadway, New York city.

J. Stuart Blackton presided, and after hearing statements from J. W. Binder of the National Board of Censorship, supplemented by remarks from the different men present, two committees were appointed; one for the purpose of forming plans for a manufacturers' organization, and the other to devise means for the repeal of the obnoxious Ohio censorship law.

Walter W. Irwin of the V. L. S. E., J. W. Binder of the National Board of Censorship and Paul Gulick of the Universal Film Manufacturing Company, were appointed a committee of three to take up the Ohio censorship law matter.

The question of forming a manufacturers' association was placed in the hands of J. W. Binder, Winfield Sheehan of the Fox Film Corporation, Frank Bannon of the Edison Company, Arthur James of the Mutual Film Company, Ferdinand Singhi of the Lubin Manufacturing Company, Paul Gulick of the Universal Film Manufacturing Company, and Walter W. Irwin of the V. L. S. E.

The proposed manufacturers' organization is to be formed with a single object, the fighting of unjust censorship. It is proposed that the organization will have no other object or interest.

In addressing the meeting, Mr. Irwin, who has for many years been in close touch with the legal side of the film industry, summed up the situation and outlined the plan of action.

In part he said:

"We, engaged in this industry, have been so engrossed and occupied that we have permitted ourselves to sit quietly by and allow prejudice, malice, ignorance or jealousy of success on the part of one or a few individuals in part to destroy our business without so much as even a feeble protest.

"We have voluntarily submitted to proper regulation and I don't know of another large industry to so conduct itself in this respect. Every other great industry employs a strong, acting, energetic lobby. This is legitimate and proper unless made otherwise, but, more to the point, each of them employs a publicity agent in every large center of population in order that the public may be acquainted with their side of the case, and by virtue of the weight of public opinion, see that justice is done them.

"But the motion picture business is not in a class with these industries except in size and importance, for never in the history of business has there been any industry, save this, which has voluntarily sought regulation; which has itself recognized that its interests and the interests of the public are one and the same, and which has consistently kept in mind the morals of the public and its duty to the public; and now it is being condemned in certain localities simply because of its size and success, and we are being subjected to intolerance and injustice.

"But now we have arrived at the place where thousands of dollars are destroyed by the stroke of a knife wielded by one, or possibly two or three, ignorant, prejudiced, narrow-minded, intolerant or jealous people.

"Now, we are in a particularly strong position to stop this business. It is much easier to stop it or check it than it is to eradicate it after it has gone to a certain degree. It is much easier to prevent legislation than to repeal it, and we are in a strong position to accomplish our end, first, because we submitted voluntarily in 1909 to self-regulation; second, because with the exception of possibly 2½ per cent of the pictures produced, we have lived up to that self-imposed regulation; third, because our pictures are of a high degree of morality; and fourth, and strongest of all is the fact that the newspapers see the hand-writing on the wall, which is that it is just one step further toward usurping the liberty of the press. Therefore, in any campaign we undertake, the newspaper publishers will be heart and soul with us.

"Gentlemen, we owe a duty not only to ourselves, but to the public. The question of censorship goes to the very fundamentals of liberty, of freedom. My suggestion of the way to handle this is to employ publicity agents in all of the large centers of population, who will scrupulously watch the knife of the censors, and when it is improperly wielded, as it must be in most cases where pictures have been passed by the National Board, to take up the fight in the press.

"Once a censor has been criticized properly and soundly he or she will be much more careful in his or her method of carving thereafter, and once we have the public with us, censorship bills will be impossible, for no legislature dares advocate improper legislation except where his constituents are asleep.

"We have been depending upon the personality and efforts of one man, Mr. Binder. Capable as he is, excellent as his work has been, it is too big a job for any one man. He is a good general, but as yet he has no army. What we ought to do is to begin our campaign in every large center of civilization and fight for our rights, not for more than our rights, but to see to it that our rights and our liberty, our freedom, are not trampled upon, and that our money is not taken from our pockets without justice, in other words, without due process of law."

Bill Not Yet a Law

Senate bill No. 382, providing for state censorship of motion pictures in Illinois, has been passed by both houses of the legislature, and now only awaits the signature of Governor Dunne to become a law.

Both national and local film interests have joined in protests to the governor against his signing the bill, and several of Chicago's leading daily newspapers have likewise cautioned the governor against signing the bill that is so evidently unconstitutional, since it provides for double taxation and menaces the personal liberty of the citizens of the state of Illinois. As Motography goes to press, the governor has not yet signed the bill.

"The Beloved Vagabond" to Be Colored

The Pathe officials had their first look last week at their next six-part picture, "The Beloved Vagabond," adapted from Wm. J. Locke's novel of the same name, and it was pronounced by all who saw it to be one of the best pictures they had ever seen. Edward José, who produced it, has shown a rare artistic talent in his selection of backgrounds and in every detail of his direction.

Edwin Arden, as "Paragot," has interpreted that wilful, big-hearted, irresponsible character in a way that leaves nothing to be desired. He easily dominates every scene he is in by the force of his personality, and the subtle niceties of his conception of "Paragot" will long remain in the minds of those who see the picture as an example of the very best in photoplay acting. He is very ably supported by Bliss Milford and Katherine Brown Decker. Pathe will send "The Beloved Vagabond" to France to be colored, and it probably will not be released before August.

Entertain Notables

Messrs. Lasky, Goldfish and De Mille, all of the Lasky studios, on Saturday, June 12, gave a reception and dance at the Hollywood hotel of Los Angeles in honor of Geraldine Farrar, the famous opera star.

From a social standpoint the function is alleged to have been one of the most important ever recorded in the field of motion picture activity, as the list of important guests reads almost like a directory of famous Broadway theatrical companies. In addition to Miss Farrar and Mayor Rose of Los Angeles, the following were present at the dinner: John Drew, Raymond Hitchcock, Julian Eltinge, Mary Pickford, Fannie Ward, Charlotte Walker, Laura Hope Crews, Flora Zabelle, Blanche Ring, Julia Dean, Blanche Sweet, Alexandria Carlyle, Francis Ring, John Mears, Mr. and Mrs. Morris Gest, Mrs. David Belasco, Mr. and Mrs. Sidney Farrar, Mr. and Mrs. Adolph Zukor, Owen Moore, Carlyle Blackwell, Pedro DeCordoba, Orrin Johnson, Hale Hamilton, Frank Mills, Mr. and Mrs. Frank Reicher, Mr. Hector Turnbull, Jack Dean, Tully Marshall, Marion Fairfax, Mr. and Mrs. Jesse Lasky, Mr. and Mrs. Sam Goldfish, Mrs. Lasky, Sr., Theodore Roberts, James Neill, George Melford, Alfred Hertz, Louis Gottschalk, Thomas Meighan, Ralph Kellard and Mr. and Mrs. Wilfred Buckland.

During and after the dinner, many of the stars entertained those present and the succeeding dance was especially brilliant. Geraldine Farrar and John Drew did a one-step which was the hit of the evening.

From the Master Producer's Standpoint

BY S. S. HUTCHINSON*

HUMANITY first. Will this thing, whatever it is—comedy, drama, stupendous production—appeal to the human race? That is the question I turn over and over in my mind prior to every undertaking of the American Film Manufacturing Company. If the logical answer is yes, then I am sure I am right. I go ahead. At the head of big film undertakings, stands the great picturized novel, "The Diamond from the Sky." I applied the test—humanity first—to this vast production. It stood up under the strain. Eight hundred thousand dollars—a fortune huge in itself—was invested on the strength of the test. The success of "The Diamond from the Sky" has furnished proof of the test's infallibility.

S. S. Hutchinson.

One reading of Roy L. McCardell's great script—the script for which I turned over to him the $10,000 prize—was enough to assure me that the novel had the punch—the elements that would appeal to everybody in every class of life. A problem of great magnitude confronted me, the problem of putting this punch on film, the problem of keeping the human interest intact so that audiences would see it as the author himself conceived it.

William D. Taylor—Bill—the man who never says "can't"—was the solution to this problem. William D. Taylor is director of "The Diamond from the Sky." The quiet genius of the man, his tenacious persistency—his vast knowledge of human nature—those are the characteristics of the fellow who solved the baffling problem. It takes a man like Taylor to make a stupendous thing like "The Diamond from the Sky" a big success. There is only one man like Taylor in the business. That man is Taylor himself.

He comes of good old Irish stock—was born thirty-seven years ago on Irish soil. For fifteen years the so-called legitimate stage knew William D. Taylor well. He played with famous Fanny Davenport—with Sol Smith Russell—with Kathryn Kidder. He played leading roles in stock in Castle Square in Boston, in Philadelphia, in Portland, Ore., and in Seattle.

The dominant note of "The Diamond from the Sky" is adventure. Adventure is an inborn characteristic of the American race. William D. Taylor was able to direct the great adventure scenes in "The Diamond from the Sky," because he has been, and is today, an adventurer. He has been prospecting in the Klondyke; he has ridden the range in the Argentine.

*President, American Film Manufacturing Company.

He knows adventure, and knows it first hand, for he has lived the life. Yet he has his side of domesticity. He loves old furniture. It is his hobby. Taylor has made an exhaustive study of the subject and knows, with a dealer's precision, the period characteristics of almost any piece that can be shown him. In "The Diamond from the Sky" I gave him free range—told him to go the limit—in the matter of furniture settings for the many interior scenes. His vast knowledge of the beauty values of Chippendale, Louis XIV, Elizabethan, Jacobean, Sheraton, and the many other types of period furnishings, was a big factor in holding fast to realism in "The Diamond from the Sky," with its unusual demands in this direction.

William D. Taylor.

Taylor knows what he wants, and he gets it. He has that remarkable factor—an Irish trait—of inspiring those near him with his dynamic enthusiasm. He knows good acting and is quick to praise it. He is an adept at transferring his ideas to the brains of others, and in the way that keeps his workers in the proper frame of mind. His quiet efficiency inspires confidence. His inventive mind, always alert for the spectacular—the logically spectacular—stamps him at once as the man who knows.

Continuity in pictures—that is a passion with me, and with Taylor as well. I demanded in "The Diamond from the Sky" a smooth continued story. I warned against the episodal hodge-podge, for from observation I know that that is not what the public—humanity—wants. I explained to Taylor what I wanted. He went out and made good.

Continual co-ordination of author and producer I found to be the factor making for artful continuity. Roy L. McCardell is in Santa Barbara. He and Taylor work hand in hand. The result is shown in the film. "The Diamond from the Sky" stands supreme in the world of motion pictures. Its continuity is as near perfection as is possible to attain.

Jaccard Weds.

Announcement was made at Universal City lately that Helen Leslie has married Jacques Jaccard, the director chosen to take charge of the Lake Tahoe studio. The couple will leave shortly to take up active work in the northern studio, followed by the best wishes of their scores of friends.

Mary Returns to New York

Mary Pickford, accompanied by her mother, and her director, Allan Dwan, and a supporting company, passed through Chicago on Wednesday, June 23, en route from the Los Angeles studios of the Famous Players to the New York headquarters of that company. Miss Pickford has been in California since last November, during which time many of the recent screen triumphs in which she has been starred by the Famous Players, as well as a number of the subjects in which she will shortly be presented, were produced.

A novel incident connected with the trip is that Miss Pickford and her company will enact a feature film story en route from California to New York. A special story was devised for this purpose, so constructed that the plot begins in the West and terminates in New York, where the subsequent scenes will be produced.

Upon the arrival of Miss Pickford and Allan Dwan, preparations will be made for another unusual production, starring Mary Pickford. This will be an elaborate photo-production entitled "Miss Jinny," a tenement story from the pen of Edith Barnard Delano, the author of another forthcoming Pickford production, "Rags," to be released August 2.

New Queen of Beauty Crowned at Universal City

Fully twenty thousand people were assembled to watch the selection of the Queen of Beauty at Universal City, the most beautiful girl in the United States —as many as could get in front of the stage. The judges sat on a raised dais and the sixty girls passed in single file before them. It was a sort of survival of the most beautiful. First each girl was introduced personally to the assembled audience, then she made her bow to the judges, who were as follows: H. O. Davis, director general of the Panama California Exposition at San Diego; chairman, Max Wierozeck; A S. Kestllyi; Mrs. Antonio Melville and Mrs. Maud Davis Baker, all well known artists of Los Angeles.

It was a difficult thing to eliminate from the contest so many beauties and the artists labored late into the night and went into private and executive session before a choice was made. Fortunately for them and for the continuance of the friendly and good natured rivalry which has existed since the train left Universal beauties parading the streets in Los Angeles.

Chicago, the decision was apparently satisfactory to all the other contestants and the spectators. The decision of the judges was as follows: the winner, Queen of Beauty, to whom the great loving cup is to be given, Miss Ruth M. Purcell, of Washington, D. C., winner of the contest conducted by the Times in that city; Second, Miss Clara M. McAbee, of Frederick, Md., winner of the Baltimore News contest; third, Miss Universal beauties arriving at their hotel in Los Angeles.

Agnes Cheney, of Concord, N. H., winner of the prizes in the Boston Herald and Traveler contest; fourth, Peggy Dolan, of Newark, N. J., winner of one of the prizes in the Greater New York Evening World contest; fifth, Jean Mac Nicol, winner of the Minneapolis News contest, and sixth, Opal Crumbliss, winner of the Omaha Daily News contest. All of these received very honorable mention, and the first two will be offered moving picture contracts, and so will the other four in all probability.

A deputation of the Universal City officials was on hand to receive them, including Happy P. Caulfield, general manager of the Pacific Coast studios and Patrick A. Powers, treasurer of the Universal, who has been at the Coast for a few weeks. On the train, looking a little pale from the strain of having breakfasted, dinnered and suppered with sixty-one assorted beauties for a number of days, were President Carl Laemmle, Joe Brandt and Nat Rothstein.

At the city hall Frederick Griffin, president of the Los Angeles City Council, acting for Mayor Rose, welcomed the beauty party and in a felicitious speech, assured the girls that it pleased him to present them with the keys to Los Angeles. Then followed a parade through the streets to the Clarke Hotel, led by the cow boys and cow girls of the Universal ranch.

The Board of Judges which selected Miss Purcell from some thousands of entrants in the Times contest consisted of Mrs. Christine Memmeck, Henry D. Siebor, architect, Paul Brulot, sculptor, Madame Alkul Khan, wife of the Persian charge d' affairs, Miss Hazel Mackaye of literary and social note and Miss Ruth Jones, society editor of the Washington Times.

Miss Purcell was employed as a typist at the headquarters of the American Federation of Labor, whose officials and employes gave her a "shower" of traveling requisites just before her departure. From the heads of the organization down to the janitor there is supreme gratification over the news from Los Angeles. The lucky girl will be offered a position as actress with the Universal Film Company and her name will be heralded to the four corners of the earth in the event of her acceptance. She will be taught the art of motion picture acting and in every way aided to climb the ladder of fortune. Her beauty of soul and mind, as well as beauty of face, will be developed, until she becomes the woman consummate.

In spite of the intimately known characteristics of the heart feminine there was remarkably little jealousy or rancor in the hearts of the girls who had not been selected as the supreme beauty. All were warmly sincere in their congratulations to the chosen one.

V-L-S-E Program

During the month of July, the V. L. S. E. program will offer four features each in five parts, that include two comedies and two dramas, and will present two distinguished stars of the speaking stage in the persons of Frank Daniels and Tyrone Power, and two screen favorites in Romaine Fielding and Bryant Washburn, and Edna Mayo, who is already as popular on the screen as she was on the stage.

For the week of July 5, the Lubin contribution is "The Valley of Lost Hope," by Shannon Fife, produced under the direction of Romaine Fielding who essays the leading role. This is an elaborate, spectacular drama, and is reported to be a picture that will strongly appeal to all classes of audiences.

"Crooky Scruggs," scheduled for release July 12, is a Vitagraph production, staged under the direction of C. J. Williams, in which the inimitable Frank Daniels will make his initial appearance on the "Big Four" program. This feature, which is in five parts, is from the play by Paul West, and as Mr. Daniels is said to be even more funny on the screen than on the speaking stage, this feature should be a liberal contribution to the world's laughs.

"The Blindness of Virtue," by the Essanay Company, will be released July 19, and Edna Mayo and Bryant Washburn will make their second bow to the "Big Four" followers. It will be remembered that "The Blindness of Virtue" created a profound impression when it was produced as a spoken drama. Its appeal is direct and pointed, and now that it is offered as a film play, the mission of this great story will be carried forward on a gigantic scale.

Charles Hoyt's greatest American comedy, "A Texas Steer," is the Selig contribution for the week of July 26. In this play, Tyrone Power, whose reputation is known to every one, will be seen in the leading role. "A Texas Steer," on the stage, was the most successful of the many successful Hoyt comedies, and in securing it, the Selig Company made a valuable addition to the greatest of plays to be offered to motion picture patrons.

Lubin Discusses Future Features

Siegmund Lubin this week addressed the V. L. S. E. representatives through a front page article that appears in the company's private publication. As statements to the "Big Four" representatives from as high an authority as Mr. Lubin, the remarks will be of especial interest. Mr. Lubin says:

"The formation of the V. L. S. E. was an epoch-making event. It has placed the producer and the exhibitor on a much more intimate and co-operative basis. It has given the public a program that has never before been equalled. What the 'Big Four' family has done so far is as nothing to what we plan for the future. On these plays we are all working earnestly with a common goal ahead—'perfection.'

"Speaking for the Lubin Company, I can assure you that we are using every energy to make the very best attractions we know how for the V. L. S. E. program. There are three important assets necessary for the making of the higher type of pictures: A well equipped production organization—good plays—capable players. Collectively and individually we have all of these. The Lubin organization has been greatly enlarged to give us scope for what we have planned ahead. We are making some of the greatest plays ever written. We have under contract an imposing array of internationally known actors and actresses. Nothing is left to chance.

"There will be comedies featuring such players as Marie Dressler, Tom McNaughton, Billie Reeves and others; dramas from many lands; plays dealing with all phases of life that are interesting and suitable for the screen; educational pictures; novelty features—in fact, we plan to give our pictures the broadest possible latitude, and to give to each one a wealth of thought and detail, that will make them valuable contributions to the V. L. S. E. program and a credit to the House of Lubin."

Dorothy Farnum

Howard Chandler Christy, the renowned artist, has an eye for types of female beauty: he has discovered and presented to the public innumerable girls of personal gracefulness whose popularity on magazine covers is boundless. And some of them have found their way into pictures. Amongst these latter, prominence should be deservedly given to graceful Dorothy Farnum who is playing in the forthcoming World Film production, "The Cub."

Dorothy Farnum.

Miss Farnum is a happy accident both as a model and as a motion picture artist. Mr. Christy one day wandered into a movie house, quite unconsciously. There he saw a beautiful girl. He was so impressed by her possibilities as a model that he asked permission to paint her. Permission was granted and Dorothy Farnum's beauty has been made famous all the world over. Her beauty has led her into Maurice Tourneur's picturization of "The Cub," which will soon be released on the World Film Schedule.

San Jose to Entertain

The Chamber of Commerce of San Jose, California, has notified the Selig Polyscope Company that a cordial reception awaits the tourists of the Selig Exposition Flyer when the trains arrive in that city the morning of July 14. The visitors will be taken via the automobile route through the beautiful Santa Clara Valley, the home of the prune industry. There are eight thousand plum trees to be seen. The civic organizations of Denver, Salt Lake City, San Franfrisco, Los Angeles, and San Diego have notified the Selig Company that special entertainments are to be accorded the guests when they arrive at the above-named cities.

To Supply Live Topical Films

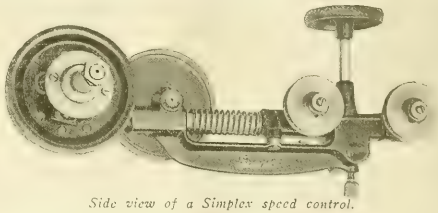
M. B. Claussen, president of the American Correspondent Film Company, Inc., on being interviewed in his private offices, at 30 East Forty-second street, New York City, described the purposes of his company.

"We are not exhibitors of films, nor are we renters, nor have we any film renting organization throughout the country," said Mr. Claussen. "We are merely an agency to supply political, sensational, industrial and educational news to newspapers, to film organizations and to film renters of reliable standing, who are interested themselves in putting cinematographic news before the public.

"Of course, we do not want to claim that our organization is absolutely perfect and complete right from the beginning, but I think we have made a fairly good start. In fact, we have been able to get our correspondents officially admitted to the German and Austro-Hungarian war fronts and the first genuine, we might say official, pictures are just in.

One of our correspondents, A. K. Dawson, is now at the Italian frontier, another one of our correspondents, Fritz Arno Wagner, who is well known in this country through having made sensational pictures in Mexico for Pathe, is making pictures for us at the German fronts. Edward Lyell Fox, author of 'Behind the Scenes in Warring Germany,' who has brought us the first official pictures, is going back to Europe for us at the end of this month.

"We are making arrangements to have a correspondent in England and France and another in Italy. These arrangements are just about to come to a satisfactory conclusion. Mr. d'Emery, another representative of ours, is now crossing South America and we expect his first pictures within a very short time. Furthermore, we have appointed various resident correspondents in different countries, all of whom will send us interesting pictures very soon.



The body of the late C. J. Hite was brought to Chicago on Friday, June 18, from New Rochelle, N. Y., where it has reposed in the vault since Mr. Hite's sudden death last year. The body was interred in the Hite lot in Oakwoods cemetery.

Simplex's Variable Speed Control

There's a new improvement on Simplex projectors which consists of a most efficient mechanical speed controlling device, which eliminates the old and unsatisfactory method of regulating the speed of the film through the projector by means of the electrical device or rheostat.

The invention is the creation of the fertile brain of Frank B. Cannock, consulting engineer of the Precision Machine Company, which manufactures the renowned Simplex de luxe projector. It is well known that Mr. Cannock is also the inventor of the Simplex projector and the many improvements which have been added to the machine since it was first placed on the market about four years ago.

The new speed control is extremely simple in construction with a minimum number of wearing parts, which are readily interchangeable. The handle is readily accessible from the right hand side of the machine where the operator stands, and enables him to exercise full and instant control over the speed of the picture, by a slight turn of the handle, which operates a friction disc against two external discs, thereby either diminishing or increasing the amount of speed.

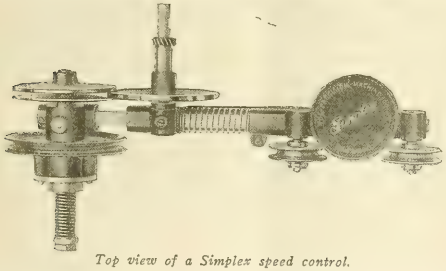
There are no adjustments to be made, even in installing the device on the machine, nor are any adjustments required while it is in use. At no matter what angle your machine is placed, or no matter how much you rotate the mechanism and lamp house on the pedestal, the relative position of the motor drive to the mechanism and the motor remains the same. There are absolutely no adjustments of any kind necessary.

The transmission is intended, of course, only for motor drive and is used with constant speed motors, both alternating and direct, and eliminates the motor troubles of the past, which have been particularly prevalent when alternating current is used.

When it is desired to change from hand driven machines to motor driven, simply loosen up the set screw (Part No. M-360½) three turns which holds the motor drive pulley shaft in the lug on the base of the mechanism frame. The driving shaft on the speed control, which has a small gear on it, is then inserted into the hole in the lug on the base of the mechanism frame.

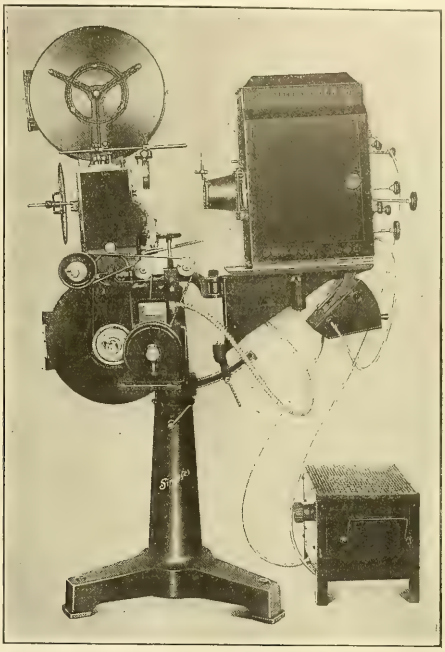


In attaching the device, it is very important that care should be taken to mesh the gear on the shaft of the speed control with the main driving gear on the mechanism (Part No. A-6). The set screw (Part No. M-360½) should then be tightened. At the same time, the idler pulley shaft on the pedestal fits into the opening on the right of the speed control and is tightened with the knurled head-screw from underneath. But the set screw, to hold the driving shaft, should be fastened first. Fasten the right end of the speed control at whatever position it takes on the idler pulley shaft on the pedestal. Do not force it into position as it may cause the gear on the speed control and the main driving gear to bind, and eventually ruin them by wearing. The important thing is to see that the two gears mesh properly and the remainder of the speed control will take the position which will give best results.

To install the device on motor driven machines, you have to remove the motor drive pulley on the main driving shaft (Part No. P-750) also the idler pulley (Part No. P-751) on the pedestal shaft. Place the speed control on the machine in the same manner as described above for changing from hand driven machines to motor driven.

The present D. C. motors can be used by making a slight alteration in them, but in the case of alternating current, the new constant speed inductive type of motor is provided. This abolishes the commutator type of motor and means lower maintenance costs and longer life of motor.

The arrangement of the belt for the speed control is shown in the accompanying illustration better than could be described in a few words. The illustration amplifies the above description for placing the speed control on the machine.



The new speed control also means a considerable saving in power as tests have shown that it will only require about 8 per cent of the motor power, leaving 92 per cent available for driving, which really means a saving of 50 per cent of power as compared with previous control, and a considerable saving as compared with other types of controls.

The device has been thoroughly tested in one of the largest theaters in New York City and has proved, beyond a question of doubt, to meet all that has been claimed for it.

Any speed from 40 to 120 revolutions of the crank shaft per minute can be secured instantaneously at any time during the performance. It means another big stride in the improvement of the motion picture art and has to be seen and used to be appreciated.

The Simplex variable speed control is considered to be a "governor of speed," not a power unit, and when an exhibitor is running film depicting everything from a funeral march to a horse race, he will realize what a valuable addition to his equipment this control is going to be.

The new variable speed control equipment can be placed on any of the Simplex machines now in use, and beginning June 15 has been furnished with all regular Simplex equipments without extra charge.

Jane Cowl with Universal

The latest acquisition to the movies is beautiful Jane Cowl. The Universal Film Manufacturing Company will release on July 12 from its seventy-two distributing centers a five-reel film adaptation of the late Justus Miles Forman's popular play and novel, "The Garden of Lies" with Jane Cowl in the leading role. As a play it was put on by Sir George Alexander in London and scored an immediate success. Prominent in the cast in support of Miss Cowl are William Russell, Violet Horner, Ethelbert Hale, Philip Hahn, David Wall, Claude Cooper and Adele Carson.

Final Arrangements Completed

Final arrangements are now being completed by the committee for the national convention to be held in San Francisco July 13 to 16. Chairman M. E. Cory has just returned from Los Angeles after having completed arrangements for the attendance of most of the prominent screen favorites at the grand ball, which closes the convention, Friday night, July 16. The attendance of the following players is definitely assured: Blanch Sweet and Carlyle Blackwell of the Lasky Company; House Peters, William Hart, Bessie Barriscale and Marguerite Thompson of the New York Motion Picture Company; William Duncan, Myrtle Gonzalez of the Vitagraph; Mary Alden, Mae Marsh, Lillian and Dorothy Gish of the Majestic; Katharine Williams and Tom Santchi of Selig; Charles Chaplin of Essanay; Ruth Roland and Thomas Allen Rector of Balboa; Ford Sterling, Owen Moore and Mable Normand of Keystone; Beatrice Michelena of the California Motion Picture Company; Francis Ford and Grace Cunard, Bob Leonard and Ella Hall, Herbert Rawlinson and Anna Little; Cleo Madison, Al Christy and the entire Kerrigan company from the Universal. In addition to the above stars, Mr. Lasky is trying to induce Geraldine Farrar to attend and has placed a private car at her disposal for the trip if she will consent to make it.

D. W. Griffith, the world famous director, has consented to address the exhibitors during one of the business sessions of the convention. Carl Laemmle, president of the Universal, will be at the convention the entire week and will make an address at one of the business sessions. Col. W. N. Selig will also be in attendance and give the boys some good, fatherly advice. Col. Selig plans to make the trip from Los Angeles to San Francisco to meet the Selig Special and will return to Los Angeles immediately after the close of the convention.

The floor space has all been contracted for and the committee is now trying to arrange additional space for those who neglected the matter until the last minute. A great many concerns have also doubled the space originally contracted for.

Gov. Johnson has consented to make the welcoming address at the opening session of the conventin. The governor and Mayor Rolph will both be present at the dance and officiate in leading the grand march and introducing the screen favorites.

Hotel Manx has been selected as the official headquarters and those expecting to attend the convention are urged to write or wire the committee immediately regarding the desired reservations.

An attractive souvenir advertising program has been issued and contains greetings and expressions of good will from many in the trade who found it impossible to arrange an exhibit.

Bernhardt Films on the Way

Somewhere, on the vasty deep, between the shores of La Belle France, and the continent of North America, is a precious package of negatives, consigned to the Photoplay Releasing Company, Chicago, of which A. M. Gollos is president.

For three months frantic efforts have been made to get this negative across, and the first attempt was made to ship it via Copenhagen, but the sailings were irregular and uncertain. Then, an attempt was made to ship it out of Liverpool, again out of Cherburg, but in neither instance would Lloyds cover the precious package with insurance. Finally, the owners of the negative and the copyright, and those seeking control for the North American continent, paid a king's ransom to the American Express Company, and to Lloyds, to get the negative to America as best they could. It is thought that the package left in a fleet of merchantmen out of Bordeaux, and that it will arrive, impounded as to duty, in New York sometime the coming week.

In a word, the negative acquired by the Photoplay Releasing Company is that of "Madame Sarah Bernhardt at Home." It is a graphic, stirring, telling two-reeler, taken in whole on Belle Isle, France. It depicts the greatest and most sympathetic of living actresses among her home ties, her pets, her foibles, her indulgences, and her love for all that is good, and great, and pure in nature. It shows the Divine Sarah in the abandon that characterizes her when with that which is near and dear to her.

The Photoplay Releasing Company has acquired the rights for the continent of North America to this motion picture, of the most marvelous woman ever committed to film.

The negotiations on behalf of the owners of the copyright, composed in equal parts of Madame Sarah Bernhardt and the Belgian Red Cross Society, were conducted by William F. Connor, who has controlled the tours of Madame Bernhardt in 1913-1914, and is to direct the impending tour which opens in New York City on September 18.

Arthur Housman Leaves Edison

Arthur Housman, one of the most universally popular comedians on the screen, left the Edison Company on July 1. Mr. Housman's versatility enables him to play drama, light comedy, and slapstick comedy with perfect ease. Most of his screen appearances while a member of the Edison stock company for the last few years, however, have been in comedy; being co-star with William Wadsworth in the "Waddy and Arty" series, and featured in a number of one and two-reel comedies which he practically carried with his own humorous characterizations. One of his best pictures was "The Basket Habit," in which he played the part of a monocled, shrinking Englishman, and which was featured on the program of the New York Theater on Broadway on the day of its release.

Let's Kill a Proofreader!

Through an unaccountable slip J. A. Berst, vice-president and general manager of the Selig Polyscope Company, was in the last issue of Motography also referred to as president of that organization. The error is such a glaringly obvious one that in one sense an explanation is unnecessary, though in justice to President Selig and Mr. Berst we wish to give as widespread publicity to the correction as the error received.

On Wednesday last D. W. Griffith's great spectacle, "The Birth of a Nation," passed its two hundredth performance at the Liberty theater in New York City, setting a record for the first $2 motion picture production which will likely stand for a long time. Special arrangements have been made to continue the run through the summer season and advance reservations for the next eight weeks can now be arranged.

MORE ABOUT COLOR.

Two weeks ago we learned that a beam or pencil of white light is split up into many colors or hues when it is made to pass through a glass prism. We also learned that if such a split pencil is made to pass through a second prism placed behind the first prism but in reverse position, the various hues will be made to blend again to produce the original white light.

If on the contrary another prism be placed behind the first, but in the same position, the effect will be to further split up the beam of light and separate the colors or hues still more. Similarly a whole series of prisms may be placed in a row, or rather in an arc or circle, as shown in Fig. 45, which represents a part of a modern "spectroscope," or rather what was a modern spectroscope a few years ago.

The spectroscope derives its name from two Latin words "scope" meaning see, and "spectrum," which is the scientific term for the artificial rainbow produced in the laboratory either by a prismatic or some other form of spectroscope. In Fig. 45, A is one end of what is called a "collimator" tube, which contains a lens like a condensor, to make the rays of light which come through a slit, parallel. These parallel rays then enter the first prism and are refracted and dispersed, after which they enter the second prism and are further refracted and dispersed, and so on, until, when they emerge from the last prism, they have been spread out into such a wide band that the scientist at the other end of the telescope, B, can see some very interesting things.

SPECTRUM AND SPECTROSCOPE.

The most noticeable appearance after the colors themselves, is a series of dark lines which cross the spectrum at right angles and at irregular intervals.

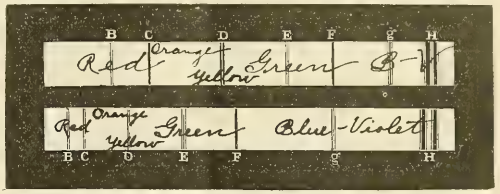

Fig. 46. Grating Spectrum (upper) and Prism Spectrum (lower).

Viewed by means of a prism spectroscope they appear as indicated in the lower row in Fig. 46, and if we look sharp we can with a good spectroscope see hundreds of lines besides these most prominent ones.

FRAUNHOFER LINES.

About a hundred years ago, one of the first scientists to see them was named Fraunhofer, so that the lines which he first saw and named after the letters of the alphabet, have since been called "Fraunhofer lines." He, like many other investigators, was much puzzled as to what could cause such a distinct but apparently irregular breaking up of the spectrum, but being investigators rather than philosophers, they started in to find out. They reasoned that there must be something peculiar about the source of light itself, and so they began to test the known sources of light.

They knew that different chemical substances, when heated very hot (to a degree known as "incandescence") radiated light of different colors, so when they saw the lines marked D, in Fig. 46, in the yellow part of the spectrum, and they knew that common salt made a yellow flame when heated to incandescence, they naturally turned the spectroscope on a salt flame thinking that they might see there also the black lines that they found in sunlight.

And what they saw was and still is one of the most marvelous sights that scientific research has ever revealed. Instead of the twin, dark lines in the yellow part of the solar spectrum they saw a pair of bright lines in exactly the same relative position. This looked like magic added to mystery and supplied many a thrill to the eager students who thus found themselves on the very threshold of some of nature's most profound secrets. This revelation was, of course, followed by comparisons with many other substances, with the result that a great majority of the hundreds of dark lines in the solar spectrum were identified with the bright lines given off by terrestrial substances.

CHEMICAL SPECTRA.

Then followed a systematic search for the cause of this wonderful correspondence, and it was not long before it was discovered how dark lines could be produced in the laboratory. Some busy investigator let some uniform white light shine through some vapor of common salt (or sodium chloride) and lo and behold, instead of the erstwhile bright yellow lines, there were two dark lines in their places, and exactly in the same places that are occupied by the dark lines in the yellow part of the solar spectrum.

Then it was easy to takes the next step, and pass white light through all other vaporizable substances the result being an artificial solar spectrum with most of the dark lines in identical relative positions. What, then, is the answer? Surely there must be somewhere between us and the source of the sun's light a lot of vapor corresponding to that made in the laboratory, and further investigating proved that this vapor is the sun's atmosphere. Therefore the light coming from the body of the sun itself is the same as from any glowing solid or liquid. That is, it would give a so-called "continuous" spectrum if it were not for the fact that it has to pass through the sun's atmosphere before it reaches the earth.

ABSORPTION SPECTRA.

Well, the sun's atmosphere is composed of about everything on earth and some few things besides, so by the time the excessively bright and pure white rays which are radiated by the incandescent body of the sun get through his atmosphere en route to the earth, they have been filtered or sifted, as it were, until all the rays of certain wave-lengths (and thousands of different wave-lengths) have been absorbed so that they never reach the earth.

Now when the scientist looks at sunlight through his spectroscope, he of course finds gaps in the spectrum where these rays would otherwise have been. In order to determine just what the sun's atmosphere is composed of it is only necessary to compare the dark lines with the artificial dark lines produced by known substances in the laboratory. Thus the astronomer was brought into this new field of research, and of course there is no limit to the astronomer's investigations. So they soon built telescopes with spectroscopes attached, and for more than fifty years past it has been possible for an astronomer to glance through an instrument so equipped and tell you just what substances are present in a star (which is merely another sun a long ways off) from which the light which he analyzes has been coming toward the earth at the rate of ten million miles a minute for several centuries. (It takes less than nine minutes for light to reach us from the sun and about one and one-third seconds from the moon.)

TWINKLE, TWINKLE, LITTLE STAR.

When an astronomer makes such observations, however, he uses more modern apparatus than the primitive prism spectroscopes such as employed by Fraunhofer. And this leads us to one peculiarity of the prism. The rays of light of various wave-lengths are not dispersed to the same extent, so that the violet part of the spectrum is too long in proportion, as indicated in the lower diagram of Fig. 46.

In this figure the absorption lines produced by sodium are marked D. Similarly the H lines are caused by hydrogen, etc. It will be noted that both the upper and lower diagrams have the same lines but differently spaced, the upper, or "diffraction" spectrum being the "normal" one. How, then, is such a diffraction spectrum produced? First, let us get acquainted with diffraction itself. In Fig. 47, e represents an object having a very sharp edge a, past which a beam of light from the lens L goes to the screen b. To avoid confusion this light should be of simple color as, for instance, primary red. Now if we look closely at the shadow cast by the sharp edge, we shall find that it is not as sharp as the edge itself but that some of the light seems to have been bent around the corner, as it were, so that the upper part of the shadow is not quite dark. Still closer inspection reveals a series of narrow bands or lines as shown at B, which is a front view of the screen b.

DIFFRACTION SPECTRA.

Now let us change the light from red to green. The same general effect is noted except for the fact that the shadow bands are not so wide or far apart. Similarly violet light makes still narrower bands, and this is just where the diffraction spectrum comes from. We know that all of the hues are made up of these three primary colors combined in various proportions. Suppose, then, that we could throw these three series of color bands (Fig. 48) on top of each other. It is readily seen that there would result a combination series of bands of every hue. Well, this is just what a diffraction grating spectroscope does, and it adds the effect of so-called "interference" on account of the grating having lines so close together that waves of light coming through adjacent lines actually interfere with each other, changing each other's wave-lengths and hence causing new hues.

Gratings have been ruled with as many as 50,000 lines to the inch by a special machine designed by the late Professor Rowland of Johns Hopkins University, but since his death no one has been able to build another machine for the purpose, although his old machine is there for them to copy. His successors know what to make but they cannot discover his secret of how to make it.

HOW NATURE GOT A SECRET BACK.

Gratings usually have either 14,000 or 28,000 lines to the inch, and most of those in use today are photographic copies of those made by Prof. Rowland twenty years ago. The part of his machine which no one is able to duplicate is a screw of very fine pitch for guiding the diamond point which scratches the lines upon glass, and this unfortunate loss serves to emphasize the infinite attention to detail which makes up the life-work of the true scientist. He devised the machine, and the method of making it, as one of the incidental procedures in the course of his every day work, and his only oversight was that he underrated the human incapacity of his assistants and successors even to understand his work after he had completed it. So he took back to nature one of the secrets that he alone had been able to wrest from her.

Prism spectroscopes are still in use for many purposes, for however superior the grating spectroscopes may be in some respects, the prisms let about ten times as much light through. This brings us to another extremely refined branch of photography—the photographing of things invisible to the naked eye, and even of things which the eye aided by all the instruments in the world cannot see. When an astronomer wishes to know what a certain very faint star is made of, he doesn't even look at it, but looks up its location on the sky "map" (just as a navigator looks up his destination), and then turns his telescope by adjusting certain "stops" on the "right ascension" and "declination" circles of the mounting, and pressing a button to start a motor. Then, when the telescope is pointing to the proper spot in the sky, and the spectroscope is properly adjusted, with the sensitive plate in place, and the shutter open, it would seem that all he would have to do, after starting the "driving-clock" would be to set his personal alarm clock and go to bed.

PHOTOGRAPHING THE STARS.

For we are assuming that it will require several hours to get a satisfactory "exposure." Unfortunately, however, it is just as necessary for the astronomical photographer to remain on the job as it is for the motion-picture camera man to attend to the cranking of his own camera. It is true that the stars of heaven are not so fickle as those of earth, and even if the exposure occupied years instead of hours, there would be no noticeable change in the subject. But it is not the stars that are unreliable and need watching, but the machinery that moves the telescope so as to keep it pointing in the right direction while the revolution of the earth is continually carrying the observatory toward the east.

The driving-clock may be the best of its kind, but the degree of precision required is continually being set at naught by slight vibrations of the earth and differences of temperature, etc., and so the astronomer's work has just begun. The photographic telescope is a twin, one of which takes the photographs, while the observer glues his good eye to the eye-piece of the other, and stays there all night, with a correcting lever in each hand, so that he may prevent the slight errors of the driving-clock from continuing long enough to spoil the picture.

Perhaps he does not even see the star whose picture he is taking, but if he sees one of its apparent neighbors it will suffice, for although this apparent neighbor may be a few million billion miles away, and although both of said neighbors may be moving through space in different directions at the rate of several thousand miles per minute, the astronomer knows that even if he stayed at the telescope the rest of his natural life those two seeming neighbors would still seem to be in the exact same parts of the same neighborhood.

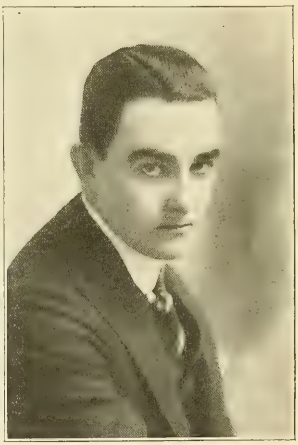
Warren Patrick Passes



The innumerable friends of Warren A. Patrick, Chicago representative of the New York Clipper, were amazed to hear on Friday last that Mr. Patrick had been found dead in the bathroom of his home on Chicago's south side that morning, his death occurring shortly after he had returned home following a mysterious disappearance of some days.

Though the coroner's jury rendered a verdict of suicide, Mr. Patrick's most intimate friends are of the firm belief that his death was brought about by accident, and his mistaking a deadly drug for a harmless beverage.

Mr. Patrick was known to the theatrical fraternity and the motion picture trade the world over through his long connection with the Billboard, the Show World and the Clipper, with all of which journals he was connected in an editorial capacity. He numbered his friends by the hundreds, and his death will bring sorrow to them all. The funeral services were held from the Hamburg Chapel, 4649 Prairie avenue, on Sunday, June 20, and later that day the body was taken to his former home in California, Missouri, for interment. Mr. Patrick, who was a thirty-second degree Mason of McKinley lodge, a member of the Strollers, secretary of the Showmen's League of America, and chairman of the board of governors of the Reel Fellow's Club of Chicago, is survived by a wife and daughter, to whom, as well as to his other relatives, Motography, along with Mr. Patrick's host of other friends, extends sincere sympathy in their hour of bereavement.

Courtleigh in New Serial

William Courtleigh, Jr., who is to be featured with Lillian Lorraine in the new Balboa made serial, "Neal of the Navy," to be released by Pathe, was born in Buffalo, N. Y., March 8, 1892. His father is so well known as to require no comment. Born into a theatrical atmosphere the young Courtleigh took naturally to the stage and made his maiden plunge at the tender age of five years, appearing in his father's "East Lynne" company. From then on for a number of years he continued with his father, leaving when he was ten years old to get some schooling. His education was continued through one year at the University of Chicago. His first job, he laughingly tells, was riding after cattle in the Chicago stock yards, but he could not long resist the lure of the stage, for being offered an engagement with a stock company in Bridgeport, Conn., he eagerly seized the chance. Engagements at the Harlem Opera House in New York, with Robert Mantell, and in stock in Los Angeles, Atlanta and Milwaukee followed. His more recent engagements were with Ethel Barrymore in "Her Picture," "The Nightingale," and with H. B. Warner in "Under Cover."

Correcting an Error

Through error, Motography referred last week to Frank McMillan, who has been visiting the home office and factory of the Minusa Cine Products Company in St. Louis, as head of the E. E. Fulton Company, whereas, Mr. McMillan should have been called general manager of that concern, since the trade well knows that E. E. Fulton, himself, heads the firm which bears his name.

Edison Makes Important Changes

Meteoric indeed is the career of Duncan McRae in motion pictures. Scarcely a year and a half ago entering the film world from the legitimate he made an immediate impression on screen memorable impersonations. But a month ago he produced for Edison, which company comprises his entire motion picture experience, his first picture and acted in it—"Through Turbulent Waters," surely a test critical when the suspenseful nature of the story and the fact that it was a four-reel feature are considered. Almost immediately after the presentation of this picture, Mr. McRae's appointment as director general was announced at the Edison studio.

Duncan Mac Rae.

The creation of director general marks a distinct change with the Edison company as it places the destinies of that company in the hands of two, one—Mr. McRae—to devote his entire time to supervising and generally directing all the productions and the centering of Mr. Plimpton's time more on the purely business end of the studio management though he yet will exercise an overseeing hand over the whole studio. Previously, Mr. Plimpton's time has been spent both on the "floor" and at the business executive's desk, but the greatly increasing cares, since that company has gone in for weekly three and four-reel features on the regular program and the production ultimately of longer features, especially released, made the selection of a director general necessary.

Despite Mr. McRae's short experience in films, he draws from a long and successful career as actor, director, and manager, most of which was gained in the best English companies and theaters. 'Twas most natural that Mr. McRae should choose the theatrical profession as many of his family have occupied distinguished positions in it, numbering among those being the eminent Sir Charles Wyndham, his uncle, and Bruce MacRae, his brother.

Along with this change are the appointments of Albert Kelly, of the scenario department, as assistant to Director John Collins; Charles McGee as assistant to Director Langdon West; and that of Bernard Durning from assistant directorship to assistant stage manager. Mr. Durning's rise from the bottom step has been rapid.

Artistic Vitagraph Booklet

The Vitagraph Company has issued folders announcing the new Vitagraph Blue Ribbon Feature "The Sins of the Mothers." It is a most artistic and appropriate folder and contains reproductions from the posters advertising the $1,000 prize film drama "The Sins of the Mothers."

Federal Films Start

A new film company has been started by Al Ray, the well-known gloom dispeller, and it will produce one-reel comedies under his personal direction. The first comedy of this company has already been completed. It is entitled "Nothing But Love," and is said to contain many new and original ideas. The exteriors of this picture were taken around Fort Hamilton, and many of the officers and soldiers appear in it.

It is the plan of this company to release a one-reel comedy weekly, most likely on the United program, as a deal is under way, by which that organization will handle the output of Federal Films. The company has left for Coney Island, where the exteriors for the second release, "His Jealous Wife," will be taken.

Several of the best known comedians have been signed by the company, and many more are expected to sign within the next two weeks. Besides studios in Bay Ridge, Brooklyn, the company will build winter quarters in Hollywood or Los Angeles, California. Austin Bartz, the traveling representative of the company, has left for the coast to select a site for the studio. Al Ray has promised to get the best possible material for his stock companies, and the highest prices will be paid for scenarios with original plots.

World Film Re-Arranges Divisions

For the better control of its business the World Film Corporation has now definitely arranged its territory into five divisions, the eastern, the east central, the west central, the western and southern.

The eastern division, of which George J. Shaefer is manager, includes the offices at New York, Boston, Philadelphia, Washington and Buffalo. Denham Palmer, the east central division manager, was a salesman only a year ago. He now has charge of the offices at Cleveland, Detroit, Cincinnati, Indianapolis, Pittsburgh. W. R. Scates, west central division manager, is in control of the offices at Chicago, St. Louis, Kansas City, Omaha and Minneapolis. The western division manager, W. W. Drum, has charge of the offices at San Francisco, Los Angeles, Seattle, Denver and Salt Lake City. E. Auger, southern division manager, has charge of the offices at New Orleans, Atlanta, Dallas, Memphis and Oklahoma.

New branch offices have been opened at Newark, N. J.; Memphis, Tenn., and Oklahoma City. This now gives World Film a total of 26 offices in the United States.

Nifty Advertising Folder

From the William L. Sherry Feature Film Company, Inc., of 130 West Forty-sixth street, New York, MOTOGRAPHY has received a nifty little folder advertising the South American travelogues being issued by the Paramount Film Corporation.

As one first glances at the little booklet, the pharse, "All Ashore That's Going Ashore" greets his eye, and in turning back the flap he is faced with an invitation to take a trip around South America with a party touring that wonderful country. Opening the book still farther one finds a short and snappy description of the Paramount travel series, together with a time-table covering the trip as far as the sixth stop. The back of the little folder bears the well known Paramount trademark and the whole is printed on yellowish brown paper in green ink.

Elmer Booth Killed

The film world heard with regret confirmation of the rumor that Elmer Booth, long prominent as a comedian, met death in an automobile accident in Los Angeles on Wednesday, June 16. Tod Browning and George Seigmann, both well known photoplay directors and actors, were injured at the same time. All three were employed by D. W. Griffith at the Mutual Film Corporation's Hollywood studios. Browning and Seigmann are both in the California Hospital, and it is hoped that their injuries will not prove serious. Booth leaves a mother and sister, who live in Los Angeles. The accident was due to a heavy fog. The car, driven by Browning, collided with a street work-car loaded with iron rails. Browning did not see the rear lamp on the street car.

Elmer Booth.

Elmer Booth was born in Los Angeles, where he qualified, on his graduation from St. Vincent's College, as an authority on physical culture, oratory and elocution. These three subjects he taught for some time before Oliver Morosco persuaded him to go on the stage. Later he appeared under Charles Frohman's management with Arnold Daly in "The Boys of Company B." With Douglas Fairbanks in "The Cad" he made a pronounced hit, and in "The Gentleman of Leisure" he was declared by Alan Dale to be "The best stage burglar Broadway has seen to date—he lives his part instead of acting it." He created the name part in "Stop Thief" and became a popular favorite. During his summers he worked under D. W. Griffith in motion pictures, and appeared with Mary Pickford and May Irwin in film dramas. He also made a name for himself as a magazine writer.

Last winter Mr. Griffith persuaded Booth to abandon the speaking stage for the films. He has appeared exclusively since then in the Mutual's Komic productions and had built up a considerable following when his untimely end overtook him. He is deeply mourned, not only by those who are watching his last appearance in "Mr. Wallick's Wallet," but by the motion picture trade the country over.

"Roxy's" New House

S. L. Rothapfel, managing director of the Rialto theater, now in course of construction at Forty-second street and Broadway, New York City, has begun with an army of decorators, architects, electricians, artists, and designers of all sorts to arrange definite plans for the theater's interior and exterior embellishments, which he says will be on a scale never before attempted in any theater in the world.

From plans already practically approved, it may be stated that the exterior of the theater will be an absolute novelty in the line of architecture and will constitute one of the most outstanding pictures of beauty that New York has ever seen. The organ to be installed and over which Dr. Alfred G. Robyn, the well known composer, will preside, is said by Dr. Robyn himself to be the largest of the orchestral type ever constructed. The music, as always in Mr. Rothapfel's enterprises, will be a dominant feature of the entertainment, for there will be as well an orchestra of thirty-five men under the direction of a well known conductor.

In electric lighting and effects the theater will be far and away in advance of anything that has ever been constructed, and Mr. Rothapfel is looking forward to the opening in the early fall as an occasion when he will show the public the most beautiful theater they have ever seen.

Mr. Rothapfel is shortly to leave for a tour of the United States, during the course of which he will visit some points of particular natural beauty and from which he will seek inspiration for some of the scenic effects which he will have installed in the Rialto.

Santa Barbara Celebration

Irving Cummings, starring in "The Diamond from the Sky," has been selected as the best type for impersonating Thomas Jefferson in Santa Barbara's Fourth of July celebration. The opening feature of the patriotic exercises will be a perfect reproduction of the historic scene when the Declaration of Independence was signed. Director Henry Otto has been chosen by the Chamber of Commerce to stage this event and so far as known it will be attempted as never before. There will be a reproduction of the room in the old Philadelphia state house and from "Flying A" players will be assigned the roles of famous men that have passed into history. Down to the minutest detail of costumes and quill pens everything will be perfect. While the Declaration is being signed, after having been read by Jefferson, every whistle and bell in Santa Barbara will herald liberty.

In a tableau to immediately follow, Miss Winnifred Greenwood will appear, as the Goddess of Liberty. "Flying A" cowboys will take part in the joint race meet and rodeo in the afternoon. President S. S. Hutchinson expects to be back in Santa Barbara with his family to attend the celebration.

Changes in Eclipse

The Eclipse Film Laboratories, Inc., have leased the plant formerly conducted by the Commercial Motion Picture Company at Grantwood, New Jersey. With the improvements and the additional equipment installed by Charles J. Hirliman, the Eclipse superintendent, the company is in a position to turn out with dispatch five hundred thousand feet of positive printing per week. As a protection to the manufacturers' negatives the Eclipse Company has constructed two giant concrete vaults capable of holding six hundred thousand feet of negative and positive film.

In order to handle local orders promptly and to keep in touch with the trade, Manager E. M. Roskam has opened up a New York office at 220 West Forty-second street, Room 1005, where orders can be delivered and collected by the factory autos, which make hourly trips from the laboratories.

Popular Vitagraph Star

Mrs. Sidney Drew, a distinguished member of the Vitagraph stock company, forsook an enviable position on the concert stage to become a star in the field of expression dominated by the camera. She was born in Sedalia, Mo., April 18, 1890, and christened Lucille McVey. Her father, Charles Frederick McVey, who was also born in Sedalia, is one of the descendants of Absolem McVey, a pioneer of the West, who was a relative of Henry Clay and Thomas Benton. Her mother, before she was married, was Lucie Bapple, and is a very clever artist in oils.

Mrs. Sidney Drew.

Mrs. Drew's schooling was obtained in the public and high schools of Sedalia and as a student in the Sedalia College of Music and Nebraska Wesleyan School of Expression, receiving well-deserved degrees from both colleges. When she decided to adopt a profession, she chose the concert stage as the best adapted to her talents. While Mrs. Drew has had practically no experience on the legitimate stage, she spent six years as an entertainer, in America and abroad, under the direction of the Redpath Lyceum Bureau, and became recognized as one of the foremost child dialect readers in America.

A restlessness that demanded a change of vocation resulted in her making application to the Vitagraph Company for a position as a member of its stock organization, and again her judgment stood her in good stead, as she was not only given a part but was fortunate in being cast as one of the principals in a comedy being directed by Sidney Drew. A mutual interest attracted these two players and resulted in the present combination of these most popular artists in the field of silent drama.

The Motion Picture Lyceum Bureau

The Motion Picture Lyceum Bureau, Inc., Continental and Commercial Bank Building, Chicago; Fred Lincoln, president; F. C. Mintie, treasurer; A. L. Huston, secretary; is a new moving picture enterprise for the production, release and rental of what the concern designates as "wholesome pictures." Judge Willis Brown, founder of the Parental Court Laws in the State of Utah, is supervising all of the productions of the bureau as the head of the National League of Wholesome Pictures. This body is not censorial, but rather critical. Judge Brown is conducting a page in the Sunday issue of the Chicago Herald, entitled, "The National Youth Achievement Movement."

The purpose of the new organization is to make or purchase films which will be rented to schools, churches, lyceums and chautauquas. Tom Carrigan, who has been in the motion picture field as an actor for sometime, is producer of the company in its studios at Salt Lake City. Mr. Lincoln is at present the manager for the Sullivan-Considine circuit at Denver.

The company has recently financed Dr. Frederick T. Cook on a trip to the Himalaya mountains for the purpose of getting some scenic pictures.

Michigan Convention

Bay City, Michigan, was chosen as the place for the 1916 convention of the Michigan Motion Picture Exhibitors' League at the session held in Lansing on Wednesday, June 9.

At this year's convention the association arranged to take up with the moving picture exchanges the problem of bringing about the standardization of films supplied to Michigan exhibitors. No legislative matters were discussed, but it is understood several questions will be taken up at the Bay City convention next year, among them being changes in fire regulations to make them less stringent, though retaining all of their protective features.

The election of officers resulted as follows: president, B. L. Converse, Owosso; first vice-president, August Kleist, Pontiac; second vice-president, C. C. Newman, Charlotte; third vice-president, Joseph M. Neal, Lansing; secretary, A. J. Moeller, Howell; treasurer, George Thatcher, Bay City and national vice-president, L. R. Simpson, Bay City.

Release Dates Changed

George K. Spoor, president of Essanay, announces that "The Blindness of Virtue," the six-act feature written by Cosmo Hamilton, will be released one month earlier than at first scheduled. The date now set is July 19. "A Bunch of Keys," Charles Hoyt's comedy, which was booked for July, will not be released until later. Both these photoplays, released through the V. L. S. E., have been completed by Essanay.

"The Blindness of Virtue" is one of the most dramatic photoplays yet produced. It deals with the sex problem and caused a stir of comment when produced on the stage. It was criticised by some for its advocacy of teaching the truths of motherhood to young girls. But all advanced educators praised it for opening the eyes of parents to the necessity of teaching their daughters the perils that beset their paths, in order that they might avoid them.

Edna Mayo, as Effie, the minister's daughter, who has grown to young womanhood in innocence and without the slightest knowledge of the fundamental truths of life, is exceptionally fitted for her part and portrays the character of the happy, care free girl, with a vividness and reality that holds the interest of all. Bryant Washburn, as her sweetheart, plays his role with his characteristic understanding of character.

Peaceful Rafferty, the pet creation of Charlie O'Hara, is now the basis of a popular song written by Ernest Ball and J. Kernan Brennan, and published by Whitmark and Sons. While Rafferty appears in films the Rafferty march song will accompany him throughout his funny antics on the screen. This the All Celtic figures will enhance the value of the series greatly for when the song has become popularized as it eventually will the bookings for Rafferty pictures will be greatly increased.

Vitagraph Star

Eleanor Star Woodruff, a popular Vitagraph player, and a human dynamo of a thousand horsepower in energetic force in her work as a motion picture actress, was born in Towanda, Pennsylvania, September 12, 1892. She was educated in the public schools of Philadelphia, later graduating from the National School of Oratory and the Ludlam Dramatic School. While in her early teens she showed dramatic ability and a fixed determination to adopt the stage as a profession resulted in her studying to make herself proficient in her chosen profession.

Eleanor Woodruff.

She sought and secured an engagement with the Orpheum stock company, playing in Philadelphia. Success came slowly but surely and a gradual succession to parts that required greater ability to interpretate followed in "Beverly of Graustark," and an important part in "The Five Frankfurters."

Miss Woodruff joined the Vitagraph Company as a stock member in January, 1915, and was immediately assigned to play leads, in a company sent to Texas, under the direction of Lionel Belmore.

Bourgeois Joins Universal

Paul Bourgeois, known in the moving picture world and on the vaudeville stage as one of the most fearless of animal trainers, has joined the Universal's forces at Universal City, Cal., where he will produce wild animal pictures under Henry McRae's direction. Mr. Bourgeois has worked with his lions, tigers and other wild animals for Pathe Freres in Paris and in New Jersey, and also with the Baumont, Solax, Blache, Eclair and Vitagraph companies. It is his ambition and intention to produce pictures, while with the 101 Bison company, in which, instead of demonstrating merely the fearlessness of the trainer, the animals themselves will be induced to perform daring feats. Mr. Bourgeois will do most of his animal stunts with tigers.

"I consider the tiger the most intelligent of all the wild animals," said Mr. Bourgeois recently. "Certainly they are the most vicious, once aroused, but I would rather work with them than with other less intelligent animals despite the danger."

The Headline Amusement Company, organized to produce one-reel fun films exclusively, announces that Will Archie, the famous little comedian, will pose for the next five years. All the stars of "Midgetdom" are being placed under contract to support Mr. Archie. This will be the first and only all star cast of Liliputians ever organized.

Washington Screen Club

Washington, D. C., is likely to make permanent its organization known as the Screen Club, which heretofore has been a social body consisting largely of Washington exhibitors and members of the League, with now and then an exchange man dropping in; but if its present plans go through, the organization will become a permanent one, with regular officers and a monthly meeting.

At the last gathering of the Screen Club at Washington, held the last week in May, more than fifty sat down to dinner and participated in the discussions of the evening. Harry A. Crandall acted as president pro tem and introduced George W. Smiley, the traveling representative of the Washington Pathe office, as toastmaster. Mr. Smiley called on Oliver Allenbaugh of the Metro Film Service; Mr. Wickham of the Dixie theater; Dr. William P. Herbst, ex-president of the Washington League; J. A. Koerpel of the General Film Company; Norman Luchs; Robert H. Campbell, Jr., of the Olympic theater; H. Irvine of the Rudolph Wurlitzer concern; Herbert Osborn, local manager for Pathe, Inc.; Ben E. Drum of the World Film Corporation, and George Mann of the Paramount Picture Company, all of whom gave interesting talks.

Rothacker in Limelight

Watterson R. Rothacker, general manager of the Industrial Motion Picture Company of Chicago, breaks into print in the Friday, May 28, issue of the Real Estate Advertiser, which is the real estate trade journal of Chicago, for Mr. Rothacker has a front page story dealing with the important subject of selling real estate by means of moving pictures, and conclusively proves the power of the motion picture screen as an advertising medium for the real estate man. The employment of moving pictures strengthens the advertiser's position with the public, for it is a frank declaration and sufficient evidence that his proposition will stand for pictorial proof and is presented on its merits.

As The Years Go By

As the initial motion picture vehicle for the well known theatrical star, Cyril Maude, the Oliver Morosco Photoplay Company has selected, "As the Years Go By," conceded to be the biggest production ever attempted at the Morosco-Bosworth studios.

The drama embraces the world wanderings of a poet-souled adventurer and will accordingly present scenes typical of every clime and people. One of the innumerable details taxing the resources of the directors is the special train which will take a small army of principals and extras to the Imperial Valley for the desert scenes alone.

New Branch Managers

Walter J. Pratt has been appointed manager of the Toronto office of the Picture Playhouse Film Company, Inc. A. G. Buck has been engaged to look after the company's interests in St. Louis and vicinity, operating from the company's headquarters in the Mound City. Mr. Pratt has been employed in the New York office for several months. Mr. Buck recently joined the concern after a long period of service with the Blinkhorn Photoplay Company in Chicago.

New Metro Stars

The activities of the Metro Pictures Corporation and its five producing allies are assuming wider proportions with each fleeting week. Within the past few days many new engagements have been obligated by the directors of the Metro Company and the heads of the five allied concerns. General Manager Rowland of the Metro Company announces the acquisition of numerous new plays, among which are "Pigs in Clover," "Richard Carvel," "Rosemary for Remembrance," "The Purple Lady," "Baccaret," and "The Silent Voice," all of which have been procured during the past week and alloted to stars on the Metro roster.

Ralph Herz.

Five new players of stellar position have been procured and installed at the head of special casts for immediate work in Metro productions. Emmy Wehlan, the famous Viennese actress, last seen at the Casino theater under the management of the Liebler Company, will make her appearance for B. A. Rolfe in the principal role in Charles Horan's romance, "When a Woman Loves." Miss Wehlan recently returned from a long tour of Continental Europe, where she is a prime favorite. A well-known male star will play opposite Miss Wehlan in "When a Woman Loves."

Gail Kane.

For the Popular Plays and Players, Gail Kane will make her appearance on the Metro program in the production of Clyde Fitch's famous play, "Her Great Match." Miss Kane was last seen in George M. Cohan's picturesque play, "The Miracle Man," and before that starred for two years at the Astor theater in Cohan's other success, "Seven Keys to Baldpate." Edmund Breese is working in the final scenes of his second screen effort for the Popular Plays and Players in Robert W. Serviss's famous poem classic, "The Spell of the Yukon," while Ann Murdock began work this week in the screen version of Charles Frohman's stage play, "A Royal Family." This will be Miss Murdock's first appearance on any screen. William Nigh, until a few weeks ago associated with the California Motion Picture Corporation, joins the B. A. Rolfe forces this week and will have charge of the production of "A Royal Family." Charles Horan will stage "When a Woman Loves." Herbert Blache will produce "Her Great Match," with Gail Kane, while Jack Noble will direct "The Purple Lady," in which Ralph Herz and Lois Meredith appear.

Ralph Herz and Lois Meredith will appear also under the Rolfe banner in a screen production of Sid Rosenfeld's successful drama, "The Purple Lady." Emily Stevens, last seen in a Rolfe production, will make her second appearance on the Metro program in Rolfe's production of "The Liars," in which she will be supported by Hamilton Ravelle. "The Liars" is an original manuscript possessing many valuable situations, admirably adapted to Miss Stevens' talents.

The above productions are now about to go into work at the various Metro studios at Thirty-fifth street, Sixty-first street, Fort Lee and Los Angeles.

Speedway Pictures to Be Shown

President Aaron Gollos of the Photoplay Releasing Company has at tremendous expense secured the exclusive motion picture rights at Speedway Park, Chicago, where the world's automobile race will be staged on June 26. Mr. Gollos already has three camera men at the park photographing the pits, racing cars, their drivers and mechanisms at close range, and also will secure close-up views of the officials and other dignitaries of the race meet.

On Saturday several thousand feet of film photographing the race itself will be secured, the cameras all being stationed at the most dangerous places of the park, where, if a spill occurs, it will be caught by the camera. Two thousand feet, including the snappiest negatives, will be shown at the Majestic Theater on Saturday night, the same day as the race, Mr. Gollos having arranged for speedy development and printing of the negatives, thus enabling him to project the first picture within probably less than five hours after the race ends.

World Film Gets a Perpetual Contract

World Film Corporation, through its San Francisco branch, has secured a unique contract; a few thousand similar would make a motion picture manufacturer rich beyond the dreams of avarice. It seems that Mr. Locher has signed up the Movie Theater, Polk street, San Francisco, for four World Film features per week indefinitely. In other words, he is to run a straight World Film program as long as he can obtain it. To the money drawing powers of World Film features there could not be better testimony.

H. A. D'Arcy, Lubin publicity man, is enjoying one of the first vacations that has been granted him in years. Mr. D'Arcy has laid business cares aside, temporarily, and is making his headquarters at Creekside House, Catskill, New York, where he is thoroughly reveling in a chance to enjoy nature at its best, and choosing recreations to his liking, though it's a safe gamble that the ever busy Hugh will find time even there, and despite the fact that he is on a vacation, to do much in a literary way, both in the form of short stories and poems, as well as scenarios.

Centaur Elects Officers

At a special meeting of the board of directors of the Centaur Film Company, of Bayonne, N. J., held in the company's offices, the following officers were elected: David Horsley, president; James Horsley, vice-president; Chester Beecroft, secretary; J. T. R. Proctor, treasurer, and George J. Lounsberry, assistant treasurer. Chester Beecroft was re-appointed as general manager.

The semi-annual report showed an advance in business transacted over the previous report. Three new inventions of David Horsley's, viz., the double exposure camera, the Horsley step printer and the full reel duplex printer with automatic light shift, were reported completed. This double exposure camera has already demonstrated its wondrous capabilities and, commencing with the June 25 release, will be used in the production of MinA films. The Horsley single printer has been in successful operation in the Centaur factory for three months, and the duplex automatic printer will be ready for use at the Centaur in two weeks.

The new studios at Horsley Park, adjoining the Bostock Arena in the heart of Los Angeles, were completed last Saturday and two companies under the direction of Milton H. Fahrney commenced productions.

Lubinites to Rhode Island

A company of Lubin players will leave for Newport, R. I., shortly, to begin the filming of a number of special society and naval pictures. Last summer a Lubin company spent several weeks at the fashionable resort and secured some unusually interesting dramas, in which the United States navy played a very important part.

The company will be headed by George W. Terwilliger, the writer and director, and will include Ormi Hawley, Hazel Hubbard, Earl Metcalfe, Herbert Fortier, William H. Turner, Arthur Matthews, Eleanor Barry, Mae DeMetz, Edward Luck, P. T. Volkman, William Cooper and others. A special studio will be constructed in Newport, so that the company will be able to film the necessary interiors there. During the summer the company will cruise along the New England coast in a yacht on a hunt for picturesque backgrounds.

Contest May Affect Cast

Exhibitors may note that motion picture audiences on the average the country over are choosing as the most popular women in their respective states women who do not weigh more than 124 pounds and who are not taller than five feet five inches. Of course in the West the leaders in the "Runaway June" contest for free trips to the California expositions are somewhat heavier and taller, but the figures given are the average.

One exhibitor who saw these figures, as compiled from returns made to the Reliance Motion Picture Corporation, thought that this tendency in popular fancy could easily be taken advantage of by exhibitors and producers of moving pictures.

"To my mind," he said, "it means that the public is interested in what are comparatively little women. Hence, it is logical to deduce that the public is interested in the doings of such women.

"To make the suggestion entirely practical, we might put it this way: An average of photoplay audiences throughout the country likes best those motion pictures in which little women—that is, women five feet five inches in height and weighing 124 pounds—appear. Exhibitors in making their bookings should bear this in mind, while film manufacturers should remember this in assembling the casts for their features."

A development of the "Runaway June" contest which may surprise some exhibitors is that the photoplay public is about equally divided as to women with fair complexions and hair, or women with dark. About half of the present state leaders are the former and, of course, the other half the latter.

Lovey Marsh

Marguerite Marsh, the auburn haired motion picture favorite who was recently seen in the "Runaway June" series has been persuaded by her friends to change her name and take her own name, that of Marsh. It took a great deal of persuasion to get Marguerite to take her own name and up to the last would not consent to drop the name of Loveridge, until it was explained to her that Marsh was a much easier name to remember. Instead of retaining the name of Marguerite, this popular little actress will be known as Lovey Marsh. Every one has called her Lovey ever since she has entered the motion picture world and after she was told that she would be called Lovey Marsh she at last consented to change her name.

Lovey Marsh.

Lovey Marsh will now be advertised in the forthcoming Griffith Mutual Master-Pictures under her new name, and when you see this name you will know it is the dear little red-head that you formerly knew as Marguerite Loveridge.

Novel Publicity Idea

The Old Mill theater, Dallas, Texas, has created a reputation for itself for putting out novel advertising and publicity matter to draw the crowds. The latest publicity idea is a mechanical device in front of the theater, used in connection with the presentation of the Bosworth, Inc., production, "Betty in Search of a Thrill," which has attracted considerable attention. It is in the form of a globe of the world, revolving, with a tiny automobile at the summit. Inside the car is a little doll and below is a card reading, "Betty in Search of a Thrill." The idea for this novelty was conceived by Ben Lewis, the house manager. E. H. Hulsey is general manager of the Old Mill and Herschel Stuart is manager of the publicity department.

Film Forces Arm to Attack Censorship

IF LARGE bodies move slowly the motion picture business is entitled to considerable inertia. It has taken a long time to get started on any real anti-censorship campaign, but at last some activity is evident.

The meeting of manufacturers and distributors recently held, when two committees were appointed to begin the work of fighting censorship, is significant of a decided change of spirit. The constant gnawing of the canker has finally reached the quick.

The formation of a manufacturers' association for the sole and only object of fighting unjust censorship is a work that should have been undertaken long ago. The censors have waxed fat and strong while the big film interests slept; but even so, it is not too late. The vast resources of the industry, its extraordinary facilities for publicity, the well-known energy and determination of those who have made it what it is, all argue that the new association must succeed in its purpose. For we have always contended that censorship has grown only because its advance was never impeded, never met with any opposition. A fortress without defense can be taken by an army of weaklings. The forces of censorship could have been routed long ago by even a small showing of resistance. Though they are constantly getting reinforcements, an organization of such tremendous power as is potential in the new association, backed by right and justice, should make short work of the parasitical growth which neglect alone is responsible for.

Those who have read MOTOGRAPHY's persistent and constant attacks on censorship will not need the further analyses of the evils of censorship which were presented at the organization meeting. It is easy to pile up indictments against the censors and the principles by which they work—the only difficulty we find is in knowing when to stop, that the arraignment may not lose force through unwieldiness and verbosity. But there is one point, repeated at the meeting, that will bear reiteration; Of all the big industries, that of motion pictures is the only one that has not only invited regulation, but has actually insisted upon it and effectually co-operated with it. As a result the motion picture today needs censoring less than any other thing that is presented to the public. All the state and municipal censorial bodies now in existence could be wiped out without any loss whatever—indeed, with a positive gain to the public and the picture art.

We used to wonder, in our artless way, why the public officials who advocated censorship did not recognize and acknowledge the known ability of the National Board of Censorship as being sufficient. It must be apparent to everyone that the active censors of the National Board know more about the morals and ethics of pictures, and their effect upon the mind, than the political censors of Pennsylvania and Ohio and Chicago and elsewhere can ever hope to learn. But it is becoming quite evident that censor boards are not appointed through even a mistaken sense of public duty; they exist because politicians constantly demand new sources of revenue and patronage to appease their appetite for spoils.

There is absolutely no excuse for official censorship of pictures by nation, state or city. We have said that for a long time, all alone; now the most reputable newspapers of the country are saying it, too; and soon the public will be saying it. All of which is encouraging because it shows the beginning of the end of a benighted and ignorant condition which has fostered unwholesome and useless growths. Another year, illuminated by the publicity of truth, should see an end of espionage and tribute as practiced upon and demanded of this great business.

The Value of Cartoon Films

CARTOON films, or "animated cartoons," are expensive to make. The cameraman must make his exposures tediously, one at a time, while the pay of a very high-priced artist goes on accumulating. That goes far toward equaling the usual expense of maintaining a company of players. But good things generally cost money. If they didn't everybody could have them and then the zest and flavor of them would soon go.

Not every artist is competent to make animated cartoons. Those who have the technical ability cannot always find worth-while material, guaranteed to please the critical public. Those who can fill all requirements are bound to be in demand and consequently to get good prices for their time and talent.

The usual motion picture pleases because of its fidelity to real life. The cartoon film pleases because it is nothing like real life—because it presents actions that could not possibly happen in a manner which could not possibly exist. So there is no true parallel between the regular film and the cartoon film. The animated cartoon is still primarily a cartoon, a drawing with the breath of life in it. It is made infinitely more attractive by its motion; but the fact that it is a motion picture is still incidental. It is a motographic vaudeville stunt, and a good one.

The people like cartoon films. Probably they would not relish a steady diet of them, nor would it be wise to give even one exclusive program of them. But as one number in the evening's entertainment, one part of a properly mixed program, they are as valuable and as attractive as any other kind of picture, from the heaviest mystery drama to the most uproarious comedy, enacted by a hundred players.

So it would be a mistake to discard the animated cartoon because its cost seems out of proportion to the simplicity of the result. The people may not appreciate the tedium of their production; but they realize the wonder of the accomplishment and pay it full tribute. So let us not stint the output of motion cartoons, but take full advantage of what the public has proved its fondness for.

Illinois Still Has A Chance

GOVERNOR DUNNE, of Illinois, has not yet signed the state censorship bill which lies before him. More than that, he offers to grant short hearings to the opponents of those bills which are still unsigned. We need not impress upon those film people who are within a few hours' travel of Springfield the importance of instant action.

With so much evidence in existence (which, we assume, has been carefully collected and filed by the picture people) proving the error of the censorship principle, there should be little difficulty in convincing the governor that to authorize a state censorial body would be a grievous mistake. Most of the big daily papers, as well as this and other trade papers, have carried excellent editorial analyses of the situation, which should be brought to the attention of the state executive. The blunders of existing official censor boards make far too voluminous a record for careful study in the brief time available; but this part of the subject should not be ignored on that account. In fact, no stone should be left unturned in the final effort to save the state of Illinois from this folly of retrogressive legislation.

We have the utmost confidence in the newly awakened defensive spirit of the motion picture interests, and in their ability to accomplish what they set out to do. So we look for the governor's veto on the Illinois censorship bill.

Government Imposes Additional Tax

According to Consul F. T. F. Dumont of Rome, Italy, cinematograph admission tickets are taxed at the rate of one cent on tickets costing from two to ten cents, two cents on those costing from ten to twenty cents, and four cents on all costing over twenty cents. This tax was levied by the government to raise necessary money.

Just A Moment Please

We learn with much surprise that the inimitable Jas. S. McQuade is rather indignant over a statement recently made in this column to the effect that he was recently hit by an automobile but was not killed. All right, Jim, have it your way. You were hit and are dead. Let this be your epitaph.

WHADDAYA KNOW ABOUT THIS?

When Madison Square Garden, New York, opens as a three-ring picture show the press department alleges a registration desk will be discovered where those in the audience who desire to become motion picture actors and actresses may set down their names. "These names," the press department continues, "will be forwarded to responsible manufacturing concerns who will go over them carefully and select the desirable ones." Now what chance would girlies like Elsie Janis have under those circumstances, in view of the fact that Elsie's mother's name happens to be Bierblower?

(PART ONE)

Helene Domes, the girl telegraph operator at Lonlyhurst, came to the Jumbo Film Corporation's studios with Sue Brette and, after the necessary introductions had been made, related a few of her adventures to an attentive audience. "Being a key pounder at such an out-of-the-way station as Lonlyhurst is no fun," began Helene. "The very first week after I began work there a section hand tried to kiss me, and when I resisted him grew angry and tied me up in the little telegraph office. A message commanding me to flag the Cannon Ball Express, due at 7:61, came sputtering over the wire and there I was bound and helpless, unable to carry out the command. Knowing my failure to deliver the message might mean death to hundreds I deliberately overturned an oil lamp in the telegraph office about three minutes before the Cannon Ball Express was due, thus setting fire to the $20,000.00 station but undoubtedly saving the lives of the passengers, since the trainmen stopped the Cannon Ball to extinguish the fire. A week later I learned of a plot to rob the express car on the Oshkosh Limited and there being no other means for me to reach the scene of the contemplated robbery I climbed aboard a hand-car and went thundering down the track. Seeing me coming and knowing my mission, 'Dirty Face Dan' and 'Daredevil Desmond,' the train-robbers, maliciously threw a stick of dynamite in the path of the flying hand-car, believing it would explode exactly as I crossed the spot and that I would be blown to atoms. With my hair in a braid and a grin on my chalk-like lips I sped toward what seemed certain death."

Some Current Releases Reviewed

Essanay's "The White Sister"

Reviewed by J. C. Garrett

"THE WHITE SISTER," a superb production adapted from F. Marion Crawford's well-known novel, was released on the V. L. S. E. program in six reels through the Essanay Company on June 21.

With Viola Allen, the actress who made this play most successful when it was staged some years ago, in the stellar role of Princess Angela Chiarmonte, and Richard Travers, the ever popular Essanay actor, in the role of Lieutenant Giovanni Severi, Princess Angela's lover, ably supported by an all-star cast, this picture is wholly enjoyable.

The photography is excellent with remarkably complete interior settings and very good fade-outs. The scenes laid in the court yard of the convent, showing the old well and the entrance to the church and hospital, are beautifully laid out. One of the most satisfying artistic scenes is the one in which Miss Allen in the garb of a "White Sister" comes to her old home and wanders over the lawn where bushes heavily laden with luxuriant white blossoms form an artistic background.

The story, with which many of us are familiar, begins with the return from a sitting at a famous artist's studio of Donna Angela Chiarmonte with Giovanni Severi, a young officer who is in love with her and her aunt, the Marchesa, to find that her father has been killed.

The Marchesa, who is in love with the officer, takes charge of the castle. She destroys a will which left all of the property to Angela and later because there had been no civil marriage the property all reverts to her. The Marchesa then takes the title of Princess Chiaromonte, while Donna Angela goes to live with a former nurse.

Giovanni is ordered with his regiment to Egypt. His love for the girl overcomes his sense of duty to his country and he writes a resignation in order that he may stay with her. He goes to Angela and tells her of his intentions, but she tears up the resignation, telling him that his duty is to his country and that she will wait for his return.

Word comes from Egypt that Giovanni with all of his troops has been slain. Angela is overwhelmed with grief and enters a convent. Two years later she takes the vows and becomes "the White Sister." She is called on to nurse Princess Chiaromonte, who in her delirium confesses her crime of years before.

Five years after the disappearance of Giovanni he returns, the only survivor of the expedition. He reports to his chief and asks that he be given part of the day to look up one who had waited a long time for him, but he is sent to his brother, who is in charge of a powder magazine. An attack is made on the powder magazine and Giovanni's brother is wounded. He is taken to the convent hospital by the lieutenant. The "White Sister" comes in and she and her lover face each other after five years of separation.

Young Severi does all in his power to persuade Angela to renounce her vows, but the girl finally overcomes her love for him and stands firm. The young lieutenant overhears the mother superior telling Angela that the carriage will call for her that evening at seven o'clock. He conceives a desperate plan and has the "White Sister" kidnaped and brought to his rooms. Here he begs her to either give up her vows or kill him, but she persuades him to let her go and leaves him broken hearted.

A few days later Giovanni is injured in an explosion at the powder magazine. He is taken to the convent hospital, where the doctor tells him that only the amputation of his arm will save his life. He refuses to consent to this, as Angela has announced her intention of going to the leper colony and he has no desire to live. The "White Sister" pleads with him, but he will not yield.

The kindly Monsignor Sarasenesti, who has watched the couple for some time, and realizing their love for each other, goes to get a special dispensation so that the "White Sister" may leave the convent. Giovanni then tells the roctor he is ready for the operation.

"The Diamond from the Sky"

Reviewed by J. C. Garrett

CHAPTER ten of "The Diamond From the Sky," or "Old Foes With New Faces," tends to unfold many things; firstly, Vivian Marston shows her true feelings for Blair Stanley when the diamond has been stolen from her. She leaves Blair, telling him that she only married him to get "The Diamond From the Sky," and now that it is gone she has no time for him. Esther learns of her true parentage from a letter which Hagar had written years before telling of how she had taken the Stanley heiress, because they had taken her son from her. Esther is now practically without friends, as Arthur Stanley is gone, Luke Lovell has turned against her and poor Hagar is out of her head, but Quabba, the hunchback, still remains faithful to the "little mistress," and watches over her safety.

With the opening of chapter ten we see Arthur Stanley, who had been thrown from the train in the last chapter, rise up and after several efforts manage to mount his horse and ride on toward the spot where he knew the train was to be held up. He arrives there just in time to make a leap from his horse to the engine, which has been uncoupled from the cars, overpower the robbers, and the engineer runs the

and there Vivian leaves her husband after telling him that she had married him only to secure the jewel. She then telegraphs Bloom that the diamond is stolen and that she must have some money.

Blair receives a telegram from Detective Blake telling him that his mother is sending him money. On his way to the train Blair is accosted by Luke Lovell, who has come to Los Angeles, but Blair thrusts him aside and will not listen to his story.

Back in Fairfax, Hagar, Esther and Quabba return to Stanley house and there Esther, upon opening the box which Hagar had kept hidden, discovers papers which tell of her true parentage. Just then Blair Stanley's mother comes to call on Esther and persuades her to take Hagar to Richmond and there see if she could not be cured. They go and stay at the house of Mrs. Randolph.

Quabba remains behind, but finally decides he will go to Richmond and watch over Esther, as he suspicions that Mrs. Stanley is an old foe with a new face. Upon his arrival in front of Mrs. Richmond's house he sees two men ascending the stairs and is told by a policeman that they are a notorious gambler and a clever detective. The hunchback goes to the side of the house and sends Clarence, his monkey, scrambling up to Esther's room. Esther looks out of the window and tells Quabba that when she needs him she will call upon him.

The opening scene of the second reel, which shows Arthur Stanley, now known as John Powell, driving a herd of sheep over a hill top and the sun slowly sinking in the West, is a most beautiful one.

The train robbers are chased by the sheriff and his posse. The man who had gotten the "Diamond From the Sky" is killed, the jewel drops on to a snake and is seen glistening among the cactus. Later, John Powell goes out to herd the sheep and stumbles over the carcass of one of the train bandit's horses. Around the saddle pommel is a bag which is filled with currency. The rancher, remembering the story of Monte Cristo, stands erect, throws the money over his head and cries, "The world is mine."

A short distance away the diamond gleams in the sun of the desert sands, but John Powell, blinded with the treasure he grasps from the bones of a mouldering horse, sees it not.

"Tragedies of the Crystal Globe"

Reviewed by Thomas C. Kennedy

"THE Tragedies of the Crystal Globe," the three-reel Edison drama, to be released July 2, is unusual and poetic. The story, by Mrs. Wilson Woodrow, deals with reincarnation. The method of visualizing that which is being enacted in the mind of one of the characters is effectively used, as it is in this way that the former existence is portrayed. The woman who sees herself in her former existence upon earth, does so under the hypnotic suggestion of a magician. He shows her, in the crystal globe, three tragedies in which he and she are the victims of their great love for each other. This he does to win her love.

Mabel Trunnelle as Mirza Morris and Bigelow Cooper as Mazuffer Mansur, have the leading parts. The balance of the cast includes, Robert Conness as Paul Devine; George Wright, as the Duke of Baganza; Harry Leoni as King Wabeck; Charles Sutton, as King Amedo; and Herbert Prior, as the sheik. The photography is excellent and the settings beautiful and appropriate. In fact, the picture is artistic in every respect.

Mirza Morris slips out of her house and, without telling her fiance with whom she has an engagement that evening, of her intentions, goes to the home of Mazuffer Mansur.

The magician tells Mirza to gaze into the crystal globe, and there, under his hypnotic influence, she sees herself the young wife of an old duke, and in love with Mansur, seen as a young nobleman. The duke orders one of his guardsmen to kill Mansur. Mirza sees her lover dead, and grief stricken, kills herself. The second tragedy is laid in the barbaric ages. Mirza, a princess, is in love with Mansur, her escort to the palace of the king whom she is to marry.

Thomas Ince's "The Reward"

THOMAS INCE, producer of such splendid Mutual Master-Pictures as "The Devil" and "The Cup of Life," in both of which Bessie Barriscale was featured, scores another bull's eye this week with "The Reward," in which the same star has the leading role.

From the standpoint of photography, interest of story and emotional acting, "The Reward" is in every sense the equal of "The Cup of Life," which exhibitors the country over have highly praised and found to be an undoubted box office magnet. Miss Barriscale in "The Reward" appears as Jane Wallace, a chorus girl in a Broadway show, who is tempted to take the primrose path, but pauses ere it is too late and receives the reward of virtue.

Arthur Maude, who supports Miss Barriscale has splendid chances for emotional acting in the role of Dan Conby, an idler and cynic, who boasts to his friends that there is no woman alive but will take the primrose path if she gets the right chance.

The story really begins with this boast of Conby's, made in a gay cafe at a midnight hour, for by way of proving him wrong, Trixie, a chorus girl associate of Jane's, offers to wager that Jane will not yield to the temptation which Conby proposes.

Dan Conby accepts the wager and next day takes Jane to a cabaret for luncheon. After pointing out in the cafe several of Jane's friends, who are enjoying the gay cafe life with merry male companions, Dan cynically asks Jane what reward she expects for being good. Jane's reply, "Respect of others" is met with a laugh from Conby.

To prove her wrong Dan introduces her to some of his aristocratic friends, who snub her because of her shabby clothes. The same night Jane arrives late at the theater and is fined by the stage manager. As she pauses in the entrance two flashily dressed chorus girls enter and pass the manager with a smile. Jane demands to know why they are not fined also and is told that their male friends pay half the expenses of the show and consequently they are immune. When Jane continues to protest the manager fires her.

Meanwhile Dan Conby has grown to realize that there is, after all, one woman in the world who is thoroughly good and pure. Ashamed of the rash wager he made, Dan is in the act of writing a note of apology to Jane, which closes with a proposal, but ere sending the letter, Jane arrives at his apartment with a confession that she was wrong, that it doesn't pay to be good.

Shocked and amazed, Conby sees his idol tottering from the pedestal on which he had set her, and tells her that before she decides he would like to show her a few things about the other life.

Dan conducts her to one of the gay cafes, where he points to girls who have already taken the primrose path and hints that her fate will be a similar one if she sticks to her present determination.

Jane's sensibilities seem blunted, and despite the warning of Dan she insists upon sticking to the decision she has made. Reluctantly Dan gives her the key to his apartment and sends her there to await his later arrival.

As she is entering the doorway, a physician calls to her from across the hall to ask her assistance in caring for a woman, who has just given birth to a baby.

With the little child in her arms, Jane realizes that the reward of virtue is untainted motherhood, and with tears in her eyes she later leads Dan to the doorway where they look in upon the mother and her babe.

As the picture closes Dan takes Jane in his arms and says softly, "I guess that is why God intended women to be good and men too."

given ample support by Lois Meredith, seen as Dora Lane, and the balance of the cast, consisting of Jane Waller as Ann Wilson; Lawrence Peyton as Paul Denton; Dick Rosson as Billy Lane; William Ryno as John Lane; Tom Delmar as Tom Wilson; and Carl Stockdale as Col. Lane.

Dick Vanderfleet, a student at Stanford University, is in love with Dora Lane, and, unknown to her, gives financial aid to her father, a chemist, enabling him to carry out experiments on a new explosive. Paul Denton, a student of chemistry at the university, casts off Ann Wilson, with whom he has had a love affair. Her brother, learning of her plight, threatens to kill Denton, and she goes to the college dormitory to warn him. Denton, hearing someone approach, places her in Dick's room. She is discovered there, and as a result Dick is expelled from school and discredited by Dora.

Vanderfleet, thinking the girl crazy, attempts to humor her.

Denton, having tested Lane's new explosive, realizes its value and plans to marry Dora and gain control of the invention. The chemist, worn out from overwork, is overcome when he receives word that the government has accepted his discovery, and dies. Dora, now sole possessor of the formula, goes to the army post to demonstrate it. Dick visits a cafe with some friends, and while intoxicated seriously injures a man with whom he has a fight.

To escape disgrace, he arranges with Brown, a chauffeur, to exchange names for two weeks. Dick does not learn until he is arrested and sent to the barracks that Brown is a deserter from the army.

At the barracks Dick sees Dora, but she will not notice him. Dick meets Ann Wilson's brother, a private in the army. He explains his situation to Wilson, and asks him to write to his sister, and have her intercede for him with Dora.

Ann arrives at the post, calls on Dora, and proves to her that Denton and not Dick was the cause of the trouble which resulted in his being expelled from the university. Dora sends for Dick and begs forgiveness for mistrusting him.

story. Though it is possible the director might have crowded the many incidents of the story into less footage, still it would undoubtedly have resulted in sacrificing some of the beautiful symbolical scenes which add interest to the film.

Charles Clary is featured in the role of Brian Kelly, later Father Kelly, while Kathlyn Williams has splendid opportunities for the display of her emotional art as Vera Wallace, and Harry Lonsdale is well cast as Kenward Wright. The difficult role of Bruce Wilton is entrusted to Wheeler Oakman, who gets everything possible out of the part.

The story begins in Ireland and one sees the early training of young Brian Kelly for the priesthood under the tutelage of old Father Ryan, the parish priest.

Years later Father Brian Kelly comes to America and in a small town in Ohio cares for his humble flock. Edward Wilton, an old friend of Father Kelly's, on his deathbed requests Father Kelly to care for and educate his son, Bruce Wilton, and Father Kelly later learns with amazement that Bruce's mother was his old sweetheart of long ago in Ireland.

Years pass and the scene shifts to New York's lower east side, where the kindly priest has gone to minister to the unfortunate and is universally beloved by his congregation. Bruce, after graduating from college, becomes a stock broker in New York and exceedingly prosperous. Bruce is suddenly called west on an important railroad deal, but before going receives a call from his friend Kenward Wright. Though warned by others against confiding any of his business secrets to Wright, Bruce carelessly drops a word that results in Wright's learning where he has gone. While in the West Bruce meets and marries Vera Wallace, not knowing that Alice, her sister, is infatuated with Kenward Wright.

Upon his return from the West Wilton resolves to surprise his old friend Father Kelly by building a cathedral for him, and Father Kelly, in response to a note from Bruce, calls and learns the surprise in store for him.

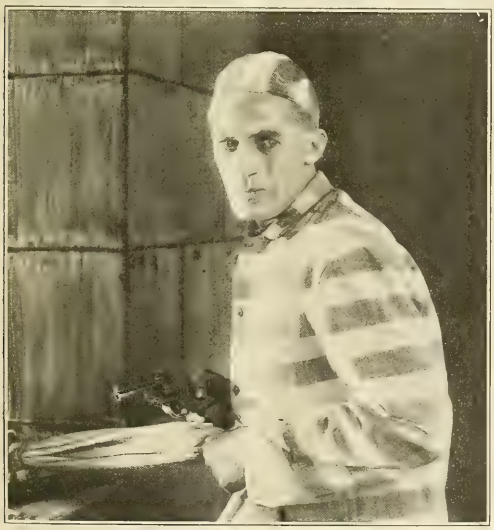
The same evening Kenward Wright becomes a guest at Bruce's home and, unknown to either him or Bruce, Alice Wallace, Vera's sister, likewise appears.

Ere the evening is over Wright learns of Alice's presence in the house and when she pleads with the man who had deceived her in the past to honorably marry her, he consents, provided she secures for him some information regarding Wilton's stock deals. Willing to do anything to make her lover marry her, Alice consents, and later overhears her brother-in-law telling his wife of his plans for the following day on the stock market.

As Alice flees into the garden she is seen by Father Kelly, who suspects her of being Vera, and later when Bruce appears on the scene and declares his belief that his wife is secretly meeting another man, Father Kelly is in doubt what to do, though later Vera tells Father Kelly all.

The next day Kenward Wright is the means of ruining Bruce on the stock exchange and the latter, returning home in a drunken condition, declares that his wife deliberately ruined him by exposing his secret to his enemy. Bruce draws a revolver with the intention of shooting his wife, but Father Kelly interferes and the revolver drops from Bruce's hand.

A year later Vera Wilton is earning an humble living as a seamstress while Bruce, after a year of hopeless wandering, becomes a patient in a sanitarium where he is placed to be cured of the drink habit.



As the story ends Bruce and Vera meet on the steps of the cathedral which has been erected with Bruce's money for Father Kelly, and there also comes Kenward Wright, who finally confesses the ruin he brought and humbly begs forgiveness. As Father Kelly points to the chapel, Vera draws Bruce toward her and together they enter.

Howard Williams, serving a long term of imprisonment for a theft committed by John Cole, swears to be revenged on the latter on his release. In a distant city Cole, under the name of Richard Walker, buys a beautiful residence, and is received into the best society. Edith Hilton, a young society girl, admires Hugh Keen, but refuses to marry him because he is not wealthy. She meets Walker. Keen jealously watches the friendship which springs up between them.

In a mad effort to gain the wealth necessary to qualify for Edith's hand, Keen speculates with his club's funds. He tells Edith of his brilliant prospects, and asks her to delay thoughts of marriage until he has had a chance to make good. Shortly after this he receives an invitation to a dinner at which Walker's engagement to Edith is to be announced. Desperate, Keen attends the function, prepared to shoot Walker.

Williams escapes from prison, and, after a long search, locates his enemy. He enters just as Keen is about to carry out his plan of murder, and shoots the prospective bridegroom, killing him. Intoxicated with joy at having made Walker pay the penalty of his crime, Williams tells the guests of how Walker wrecked a bank and fastened the crime on him. The next morning Keen receives a letter from the club, asking for an accounting of the club's funds. Edith, in the meantime, has come to realize the injustice which she has done Keen. A GRIPPING two reel production is released by the American Film Company on June 25, featuring Winnifred Greenwood and Charles Bartlett in "By Whose Hand."

This unusual story, under the directorship of Henry Otto, is an exceptionally dramatic offering dealing with the love and admiration of a crippled country lad for a sweet young girl of the mountains, her feeling being pity for him instead of love, and the arrival of a city chap, who wins the girl's heart, but proves himself to be a villain of the cheapest dye. Winnifred Greenwood makes a very lovable heroine, while John Bartlett takes the part of the crippled boy exceedingly well.

Chester Rowe commits robbery and murder in the city and after disguising himself goes into the mountains to hide for a week until the crime has blown over.

Lottie Toby, a sweet minded girl of the mountains, is loved by Jack, her father's helper, and Oliver, a poor crippled lad. Lottie shows only pity for Oliver and he realizes the fact, often expresses the wish that the girl loved him instead with her and she returns his affections in a certain way. One day they are walking in the woods and Oliver sees them and follows. The crippled lad instantly feels a keen dislike for the man from the city and is also insanely jealous of his attentions to Lottie.

The girl and Rowe return to her home, where they are told that Mr. Toby has $1,000 waiting for him at the express office, which he and Rowe go after.

They arrive at the hotel where Chester Rowe is staying, and he leaves Toby to go to his room. Toby talks with a few of his friends for a few minutes and meets a detective who has just arrived from the city. He then leaves and starts on his homeward journey.

Men passing in a wagon find Jack bending over the unconscious form of Mr. Toby. While they are taking him home Oliver climbs out of a deserted well, stealthily looks about, walks to the place where Toby had been lying and there hides a straw hat in the bushes and takes his rifle from behind a tree.

The detective finds the straw hat and by chance comes upon the old well and discovers the body of Rowe, which he recognizes as that of the man wanted for murder back in the city.

Oliver goes home to his mother and confesses of how he had seen the attack made on Toby and fired his rifle, and then hid the body of Rowe in the old well. It is finally found out that Oliver's bullet had been driven into the tree, while the shot from Toby's revolver had been the one that killed Rowe.

SELIG'S three-reel offering for Thursday, July 8, is a powerful dramatic love story entitled "Ebb Tide," in which Kathlyn Williams, Harry Lonsdale, Martha Boucher and Wheeler Oakman are featured. The story deals with the rising tide of love in the hearts of four people, two of them husband and wife, and the dramatic events that transpire ere the tide finally ebbs.

Colin Campbell is responsible for the production, and as exhibitors well know he is fully capable of getting the most out of every scenario he undertakes to film, while such capable artists as those interpreting the leading roles leave nothing to be desired from the dramatic standpoint.

Kathlyn Williams appears as Estelle Velaine, who becomes so absorbed in a book entitled "Love, Spiritual and Material" that she utterly forgets that Jerome Esmond is to call upon her that evening, until her mother, a much bediamonded dowager, who has very materialistic ambitions for Estelle breaks into her revery with the announcement that Jerome has arrived.

Estelle accepts Jerome's proposal to marry purely through a desire to please her parents, for she does not love the man.

A few days later while visiting an art exhibit in the city, Estelle chances to meet Allen Forbes before a wonderful painting in which both find much to admire. Unconsciously their mutual interest in the picture leads to their finding a mutual interest in each other, and the tide of love begins to rise.

Meanwhile, Forbes' wife, Helena, determines to invite Estelle to her home, for on reading her engagement to Jerome Esmond she recalls Estelle as an old friend. On arriving at High Cliff, Forbes' home, Estelle views from the window of the room assigned to her a scene strangely suggestive of the painting which had so strongly impressed her, and for the first time realizes that she loves Allen Forbes.

Several days later, Jerome Esmond joins the house party and instantly he and Helena are mutually attracted, although they are unconscious of themselves, while the other pair are thoroughly aware that the tide is sweeping them onward. Estelle and Allen stroll to the beach, and as Allen declares his love he exclaims to Estelle "Flood tide! What a wonderful moment it has brought us!" Estelle prevents him from seizing her in his arms and exclaims "No, Allen, we must not. Think of her tragedy if we yield. Remember the ebb tide." At that moment a great wave rolls in and Estelle, frightened, seeks the arms of her lover.

Helena and Jerome are as happy as two children and he shows her the sympathy for which he has hungered so long. When suddenly he kisses her, she springs back with a look of horror, just as Estelle and Allen enter, and both women display a sense of mutual guilt.

As the picture closes it is midnight and ebb-tide. Estelle in her apartment has been vainly trying to fight down her love for Allen, while Allen, after walking the floor for hours, secures relief on the beach without, where Estelle joins him.

After a midnight tryst, Estelle hurries back toward the house, while Allen steps out on the rocks as though to throw himself into the sea. Estelle stops, looks back and calls to her lover that such an act would not be bravery. Allen dazedly admits the truth of her contention and strolls away along the beach with bowed head, as the picture fades from the screen.

Dane is triumphant over solving the mystery of the death of Gilbert Jerome. His triumph, however, is short lived, as Daisy comes to call on him and shows him the paper telling of the fate of Alene the next morning. The governor refuses to grant a reprieve and Alene's death seems inevitable. As Dane and Daisy are preparing to leave for the home of the governor, a detective comes in to arrest Dane and seize the cup. Daisy, realizing that any delay means death to the girl, turns out the lights, plunging the room into darkness, rushes to the table, seizes the cup and flask of water and makes her escape through an open window and down the fire escape. She is closely followed by the detective, but manages to elude him and make her way to the governor's home.

She arrives at the home of the governor at five o'clock in the morning, and realizing that she cannot gain admission to see him at such an early hour, breaks in and manages to arouse the butler, who calls his master, the governor. The governor goes to the phone to call the police, as he thinks Daisy a thief, but she pleads with him to listen to her story.

After several efforts to make him call the penitentiary and tell them a reprieve has been granted, she decides to make a final appeal to him. She pours the water into the cup and drinks from it. She then pours some wine into the cup and takes the draught, which results in her death. The governor, realizing that her story was true, calls the penitentiary, and just as Alene is being led to the scaffold word comes that she has been granted a reprieve.

Robert Dane tells Daisy of his discovery.

Robert Dane, who is in the hospital and near death, will make no effort to live on account of the seeming inevitable fate of Alene, but the spirit of Daisy comes to him, bids him a fond farewell and tells him that Alene's life is saved. "The Romance of Elaine"

Reviewed by Neil G. Caward

EPISODE two of the new Pathe serial proves conclusively that an even higher standard is being set by the producers of this continued story, than was the case in the two previous Elaine serials, hard as it will be to maintain such a standard. In addition to all of the thrill and mystery which marked previous Elaine stories, the new serial is notable for its society atmosphere, a social function of an elaborate character being introduced, which gives an opportunity for a splendid costuming and deep sets.

The mystery element is more than ever prominent, and the mysterious unknown personage, who, in the first episode appeared as the little man with the gray whiskers and this time as "the gray friar," a character which gives the second episode its title, is still as much a mystery as before. At times he appears to be a friend of Elaine's and a little later to be opposing her. It remains for future episodes of the serial to disclose his identity as a friend or a foe.

Episode two begins when Elaine is issuing invitations for a mask ball which Jameson, Del Mar, secret agents of a foreign power and the mysterious little gray bearded man all attend.

Del Mar confides to Elaine that he fears another attempt will be made by the mysterious secret agents of another country to find the missing torpedo, which Craig Kennedy has invented and Elaine's dog has concealed in a cupboard in an upstairs room.

During the ball one of the secret agents searches a safe in the closet of Elaine's boudoir and when he is surprised there by Del Mar, the foreign investigator is overcome and bound.

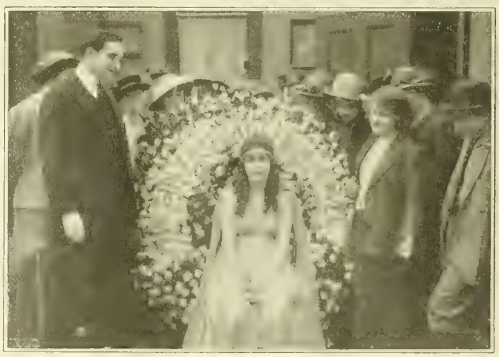
The little man with gray whiskers, who goes disguised as a friar, discovers Del Mar's helplessness and leaves a note on Elaine's dresser which asks whether honest investigators break into ladies' boudoirs for the purpose of searching the premises. Jameson, who is still faithful to Elaine, assists her in removing Del Mar's gag and, later, at the foreign investigator's suggestion, consents to one of his female assistants being installed in the house as a maid to Elaine.

A few days later when Elaine is preparing to depart for the country and the maid is packing her trunk the dog again secures the torpedo from its hiding place and appears in the room with it in his mouth. The maid notes with surprise the article he is carrying and secures it. Elaine's sudden entrance compels her to secrete the torpedo in the tray of Elaine's trunk and, later, while she is absent from the room, Elaine changes this tray from the trunk in which it originally reposed to another one.

The maid gets word to Del Mar that the torpedo is in the tray of a trunk bearing Elaine's name on one end, and the secret agent at once arranges to secure the trunk enroute to its destination.

One of Del Mar's assistants boards the train, overpowers the baggageman and hurls the trunk from the door of the car as the train speeds by a designated spot. Del Mar, who is waiting in an automobile, secures the trunk and lugs it to his waiting car.

Meanwhile, however, the little gray bearded man has arrived, overcome the chaffeur and taken the latter's place. When Del Mar appears he knocks him down, throws the trunk into the auto and speeds away.



As the story ends the mysterious unknown is examining the contents of the trunk, in which he is unable to find anything resembling a torpedo, while Del Mar's assistant, having jumped from the train, is endeavoring to arouse his senseless employer.

Celestia follows Nellie up a flight of rickety wooden stairs to a floor on which fifty or a hundred haggard, sickly-looking girls are kept busy at sewing machines by a driving foreman. The goddess engages several of the girls in conversation, but is quickly and abruptly informed by the man in charge that the girls' time means money to him.

Celestia gives him the balance of her money for the privilege of speaking to the girls for five minutes. In the meantime, one of the men employed on the floor below carelessly lays a lighted cigarette upon a table. It is brushed off into the scraps which cover the floor. Within a few minutes the place is filled with flames and smoke. The alarm is received with excited cries and a rush for the door by the girls above.

Celestia, alone, remains cool. She begs the girls to have confidence in her ability to get them out of the burning building, and commands them to back away from the door, which opens inward. The goddess then opens it, and has the frightened girls march out in single file. Outside, Nellie misses Celestia, and tells Tommy Barclay, who happens to be one of the on-lookers, of her being left behind. He rushes into the building, finds her overcome by smoke, and carries her out.

The next morning's papers carry a full account of the fire, including Tommy's heroic rescue. This infuriates Mr. Barclay, and he disinherits his son. Celestia decides to accept Tommy's previous proposal, and, on his return welcomes him with the news. But he warns her not to be too hasty, as they cannot marry until he has enough money to support her, and, as things stand now, he has not even got a job.

Troubles for the Director

Staging a night scene employing the services of sixty to one hundred people is a difficult problem even under the most favorable circumstances, but when the weather and local disturbances combine with the existing difficulties in an effort to annul the director's efforts, Jack W. Noble can easily be pardoned for muttering harsh sayings in which the air, fogs, lights, and cameras figured prominently. Staten Island was the scene of all of this trouble, and Friday night, June 18, the time of its occurrence.

Wishing to get some unique lighting effects and thrilling realism in the scenes which mark the climax of "The Right of Way," a five-part Metro feature, starring William Faversham and being produced by the B. A. Rolfe company, Director Noble decided to stage them at night, and made preparations to that effect for Friday evening. A beautifully dense fog had, unknown to Mr. Noble, made previous arrangements to visit the district in which the eight log houses and the church, used in the scene, were erected, and it and the director and his company arrived at the same time.

The camera was placed, torches lit, and the action begun. Three times did the lumberjacks and frantic women run confusedly up and down the street giving warning of the church's being afire before Mr. Noble decided to postpone the filming of the night scenes, since the density of the fog prevented the taking of the main scene, William Faversham's rescue of the sacred chalice and vestments from the burning church. This decision being reached, Harry Reichenbach, Metro publicity director, guided his party, carried in nine automobiles, back through the fog to the New York side of the bay, where the air was warm and unfoggy.

Universal Gives Boat Trip

On Wednesday, June 16, the Universal Film Manufacturing Company gave a moonlight excursion up the Hudson River. The steamer Mandalay was chosen for the occasion, and when it left One Hundred and Thirty-first street it was packed fore, aft, and in between with Universal guests. When it returned it was just as packed except that the twos and fours had drifted away from the brilliantly lighted middle of the boat towards the ends where the light, furnished by a well-meaning but unnecessary moon, was not so glittering.

The affair was given for the girls in and about New York who had entered in the Universal Beauty Contest, and had not drawn trips to Universal City. The Mandalay is the only boat on the river that has a deck dance floor; one of the reasons, probably, for its being chosen to carry the party, as space was at a premium on the floor as soon as the music started. A dancing contest was held, and a beautiful silver cup presented to the winning couple. The excursion was a great success, thanks to the efforts of Messrs. Kahn, Gulick, and the others who were active in arranging it.

Eddie Polo, one of the best known of the circus riders and athletes has a strong role which calls for a series of hair breadth escapes and experiences which will be found to equal anything ever attempted in moving pictures.

Biograph Actors Leave Coast

Those 125 people who belong to the Biograph eastern forces must go back to "New Yawk," so at 3 p. m., Monday afternoon, they all put out of Los Angeles on the Biograph special. They reached San Francisco the following morning and devoted two days to seeing the fair, as guests of the Biograph Company, after which they rushed right back to little old New York as fast as steam could carry them. Their commodious studios in the Bronx have been thoroughly overhauled and supplemented with various improvements during their absence on the coast.

Vera Doria Latest Film Recruit

Mlle. Vera Doria, the famous European lyric soprano who has also had rare experience in big dramatic roles supporting such stars of the stage as Sir Charles Wyndham, Sir George Alexander, Charles Hawtrey, John Hart and others, is the latest theatrical star to be lured into motion pictures by the Oliver Morosco Photoplay Company in association with Bosworth, Inc. Vera Doria is perhaps somewhat better qualified for successful picture work than the majority of those coming over from the theatrical profession. Not only has her interpretation of heavy roles in grand opera developed her dramatic talents, but she has also had special experience through her connection with notable dramatic productions in all parts of the world.

Mlle. Vera Doria.

When but a mere girl of sixteen, Mlle. Doria appeared in Australia, in a production by Charles Hawtrey who was making a world tour in his sensationally successful "Message from Mars." This was the beginning of a stage career containing many important milestones and in a short time the blackhaired Australian girl became the leading woman for Sir Charles. Mlle. Doria's ambitions were for grand opera and accordingly throughout her stage engagements she took up her musical studies, one of her masters being Senor Hazon, an intimate friend of Verdi. Her beautiful soprano voice attracted immediate attention and the sudden illness of the prima donna in a production of "Die Fledermans," by Thomas Quinlan, proved an unexpected opportunity, which resulted in instantaneous success despite the fact that two days was all the time given her to master the enormous role, Adele. This established her in her favorite field and various triumphant tours of England, Belgium and other European countries followed.

Valeska Surrat in Pictures

Herbert Brenon, who in the past has made big successes of real heavy drama, like "The Clemenceau Case," "The Kreutzer Sonata," "The Heart of Maryland," and "The Two Orphans," has turned his hand to something weird, strange and secret. It is known that the production is to be a careful portrayal of the life for which Broadway is famous. The scenario, from Mr. Brenon's own pen, will be called, "The Soul of Broadway." That daring and original favorite of the Gay White Way, Valeska Surrat, has been chosen as the star around which the big unusual effects are to be grouped, and for one of the thrills, Miss Surrat made a sensational aeroplane trip across the boardwalk and wild waves at Atlantic City, dropping red roses to the crowds below.

To Handle "Melting Pot"

It is announced by John Cort that he has just closed contracts with the Authors Film Company, Inc., whereby the newly organized service of that company will be used for the distribution of his film production, "The Melting Pot."

Mr. Cort also announces that he has contracted with the Authors Film Company for the handling of his forthcoming production of a new comedy, in which the famous dancers—the Castles—will be the stars. The Authors Film Company, a new "projection" in the film field, is instituting a distribution service, of which little has been said, but of which much has been hinted. It is the gossip along Broadway that its unannounced aim is to make more money for manufacturers than they have ever made from films before. This, in conjunction with its announced aim to readjust and strengthen the financial interests of authors and dramatists in film scenarios of their works, makes the new enterprise one that is commanding the attention of the film world to an extraordinary degree. Reports of earnings by "The Melting Pot" will be awaited with considerable interest.

To Film "The Closing Net"

Picture rights to Henry C. Rowland's book, "The Closing Net," have been acquired by Pathe and work on the feature will be commenced shortly. It is a remarkably gripping novel which first appeared in the Saturday Evening Post as a serial, and later became a best seller of the highest order. It is full of thrills, adventures and delightfully romantic situations. The scene of the story is laid in and around Paris. The hero is an American, Frank Clement, who, through the misfortune of being an illegitimate child, is raised as a thief, but who climbs out of the slime of the underworld. Crooks of high and low caste, blue bloods, distinguished people, fascinating women—all sorts, in other words appear in the story. It should make a remarkable picture for Pathe.

Dorsey Films Continue

China, the second series of the Dorsey Expedition pictures, began the second week of its engagement at the Studebaker theater, Chicago, on Monday, June 21. It was the plan of the United Photo-Plays Company to run these pictures only two weeks, but they are going so well that their engagement has been extended until June 26.

The third series, on India, will follow. This picture is alive with wild animal hunts and many other interesting features. Dr. Dorsey accompanied the Nizan of Hyberabad on a cheetah hunt planned in honor of His Highness the Aga Kahn and obtained some marvelous motion pictures of the hunt.

Largest Houses Using Them

A few of the latest installations of automatic ticket sellers by the Automatic Ticket Selling and Cash Register Company of 1478 Broadway, New York, are in the enormous Colonial and Strand theaters in Chicago, and in the Strand theater in Toronto, Canada, one of the largest and most beautiful houses in that dominion. Jones, Linick & Schaefer, proprietors of the Colonial theater, long ago recognized the safety and convenience of the automatic ticket sellers, and now have them in most of their loop district houses.

Brevities of the Business

Donald Mackenzie stopped work the other day on the big new feature he is making for Pathe, Richard Harding Davis' "The Galloper," long enough to tell how he became a director and then in due course of events, a producer for Pathe. "It was some three years ago," he said, "and I was playing the lead in a Pathe picture when the director fell sick, thus knocking everybody's plans galley-west. Chief Director (now general manager) Louis Gasnier sent for me and asked me if I could direct a picture as well as act it. I failed to see my chance and didn't want to take the job, but Mr. Gasnier insisted that he had had his eye on me and knew I could do it. You see, the smell of the grease paint had become a habit and I didn't want to give it up to become the man behind the screen instead of before it. Well, I yielded, finished the picture and was given another. Ever since I have been a director, nor have I ever regretted the step. So you see I was forced into being a director with Mr. Gasnier as the propelling force."

Actors from the speaking stage are not the only theatrical people attracted to the motion picture art. E. O. Child, Pittsburgh branch manager of the V. L. S. E. prior to his two years of film experience, was active in theatrical circles for twenty years. Mr. Child knows the business of amusing the public from the managerial angle, and his knowledge is now a valuable asset to the exhibitors who live in the Pittsburgh territory. Two years ago he came into the film business by effecting a connection with the General Film Company. He had previously been associated with the theatrical business in the capacities of road manager, theater manager, and vaudeville agency director, and his sense of successful exhibition methods has been sharpened by meeting conditions in all sections of the country. Two years with the General Film Company has acquainted him with the particular needs of picture exhibitors. Speaking with the accumulated wisdom of the thoroughly trained showman, Mr. Child says, "the policy as laid out by the 'Big Four' is as certain of success as its 'square deal' system is refreshing."

The V. L. S. E., Inc., 1600 Broadway, New York City through which organization the Selig Red Seal Plays are distributed, has issued a weekly publication entitled, "The Big Four Family." The publication carries news of the V. L. S. E. and branch offices in all sections of the country. It is a bright publication, appealing to those directly interested in the V. L. S. E. organization.

Jack Conway, who was recently made director, has completed his first picture, "The Old High Chair." The Mutual authorities profess themselves highly pleased with his work.

William Elliott, who will be featured with Ruth Roland in the picturization "Comrade John," by Samuel Merwin and Henry Kitchell Webster, shortly to be released by Pathe, is truy one of the best known actors in the country. In himself he is musician, painter, writer, producing manager and above all, actor.

Teddy Sampson has been granted a few days' rest since her appearance in "The Fox Woman," a four-part Mutual Masterpicture based on a story by John Luther Long. Her next appearance will be as the star of a one-reel Majestic drama.

In order to accommodate its continental business which, despite the European war, is increasing, the Selig Polyscope Company has opened new offices and show rooms at 93 and 95 Wardour street, London, England. Mr. E. H. Montagu is the sole agent for Selig Polyscope Company pictureplays in England.

Earle Williams appeared in person at one of the local picture houses in New York last week, for one night. A picture in which he had played the lead was being shown. Mr. Williams received an ovation lasting several minutes.

Essanay has received letters from ministers and educators from all over the country commending the company for producing the photoplay "The Blindness of Virtue," which is one of Essanay's great multiple reel features which will be released through the V. L. S. E.

Lillian Drew, clever character actress with Essanay, has left for Chattanooga to join the company playing there. Miss Drew went with the company originally but was called back to Chicago for special work. She now will take up her work in the photoplays requiring southern settings.

Mutual Film Corporation—It is pretty well conceded now that J. R. Freuler (president of the North American Film Corporation—the producers of "The Diamond from the Sky") will be the next president of the Mutual Film Corporation in place of H. E. Aitken, and that Edwin Thanhouser will be the new vice-president, with Felix Kahn as treasurer. Roy Aitken and A. P. Gleichman were not elected as directors, but were replaced by J. W. Smith of New York and S. M. Field of Milwaukee, Wis. The earnings of the Mutual are reported lower during the last quarter and it is generally surmised that this may have been due largely to the great number of very pretentious feature films that have been produced. The initial cost of production as well as the extensive advertising that was placed back of them, have run into large figures. Just what is to be the future destiny of the New York Motion, Majestic and Reliance will better be known when all of the politics in the situation have been thoroughly ironed out. In the meantime, Mutual common has declined to 62—Reliance can be had at 30, and New York Motion is off about 10 points from the high. While the Mutual securities are, naturally, destined for lower prices in the immediate future, we believe that 70% of the stockholders will realize there will be no more political friction on the board of directors and that a safe, sane, business course will be pursued with a very definite object in mind. We believe, in 5 months' time or less the Mutual stocks will be selling around their high level of a month and a half ago.

New York Motion Picture Corporation—From a full page advertisement in the Saturday Evening Post, signed by H. E. Aitken, a reader could gather that the New York Motion Picture Corporation and several other constituents of the Mutual might be brought together under a new combination and that their program will consist almost exclusively of features. A $4,000,000 company has been talked of, but no definite plans have been given out by the insiders.

Frank Keenan will be starred in a splendid feature which has the working title of "Blood Will Tell," at the New York Motion Picture studios at Santa Monica.

Cyril Maude makes his appearance in the films for the Bosworth-Morosco Company in Los Angeles this week and opposite him is the always charming and reliable Myrtle Stedman appears.

A large delegation of suffragettes chosen by Mrs. William Raymond Brown of the Empire State Campaign Committee, has been working at the Vitagraph studios during the past few days in a three-part picture, "The Ruling Power," dealing with the question of equal rights.

For the final exteriors of "The Beloved Vagabond," Director Edward Jose and Mrs. Jose, Bliss Milford and Edwin Arden went to Delaware Water Gap last week and Mr. Jose made several daylight scenes at night, using some powerful new lights. All the scenes for this appealing story from William Locke's pen have been made, and it is said to be one of the real successes of the year.

Oscar C. Lund and his company of feature players have returned from a two weeks' stay in San Francisco, Majove and the Yosemite Valley, where they have been photographing exterior scenes to be used in the production of Mr. Lund's first Universal release.

One of the greatest arrays of comedy stars that have ever appeared in moving pictures have been assembled to appear in the Vitagraph production of "A Night Out," on which work has already started. Miss May Robson heads the cast, which includes Flora Finch, Kate Price, John T. Kelly, Hughie Mack and Bill Shea.

Helen Holmes is making her first photoplay without her old companion in arms, J. P. McGowan. It is called "The Substitute Fireman."

John Harvey, Thanhouser director, producer of "The Patriot and the Spy," the four-reel Mutual masterpicture that was rich in spectacular night photography and war scenes, severs his connection with the Thanhouser Film Corporation, June 19, to direct William Garwood and Violet Mesereau of the Imp Universal, and will go to the Coytesville studio on Monday, June 21, to start under the Universal banner.

Dick Stanton of the New York Motion Picture Corporation has started producing special features for his company and has journeyed to Santa Barbara with a company of seventy-five people.

It has been decided that the Smalley's go to Chicago for a month or so to take half of the eight-reel photoplay in which Madame Pavlowa will be starred. An experienced number of reliable artists will accompany the Smalleys, including Douglas Gerrard, Rupert Julain, Wadsworth Harris and Betty Shade. That fine actress, Edna Maison, will support Madame Pavlowa and will have a fine acting part, the second half of the picture will be made in Los Angeles.

To get the proper atmosphere for two pictures, featuring Dorothy Gish and Ralph Lewis, Director Paul Powell and fifteen players started burro-back for the California mountains. The supporting cast includes W. E. Lawrence, Frank Bennett and William H. Brown.

Claire Whitney, who has starred in many of the Fox Film Corporation's most notable successes, will have the role of Magdalen in "La Tosca," Sardou's tragedy, which is to be picturized by the Fox Film Corporation.

Thurston Hall, who has achieved a wide reputation as a leading man, has jimmied his way into moving pictures via the Lubin Company. The jimmying part came through the first role he played at the Lubin Company, and incidentally, the first role he ever played before a moving picture camera. Hall, as an English earl, breaks into a house on a dare with a jimmy.

"The Motor Boat Bandits," with Irene Hunt in the leading role, is the latest production made under F. A. Kelsey's direction at the Hollywood studios. Miss Hunt plays the woman reporter with her accustomed skill.

One of the latest additions to the Lubin players is Eleanor Fairbanks, who achieved such a success in "A Pair of Sixes," in New York. Miss Fairbanks is playing one of the important roles in "Tillie's Tomato Surprise," the feature comedy written by Acton Davies, and in which Marie Dressler will be featured, supported by an unusually strong company headed by Tom McNaughton, the English eccentric comedian.

Now that she has been chosen as the most beautiful of sixty beauties of the United States, Miss Ruth Purcell is undecided whether to seek greater fame. She stated that she would return to her home in Washington, D. C., before making any decision on the offer to be starred in a motion picture play. But Miss Clara McAbee, who was judged to be the second most beautiful, would "just love to be a film star."

Victory Bateman, now appearing prominently in the new Morosco-Bosworth picture, "Kilmeny," was the American actress the elder Salvini chose to play Desdemona to his Othello for the celebrated production at the Dramatic Festival in Philadelphia when Edwin Booth played Iago.

Edison is releasing July 2 a feature film which is presenting something entirey new to motion pictures—that of the theory of reincarnation or that we return to earth after death to live one or more lifetimes, usually to expiate the wrongs one has done in life. The film in no way preaches or even suggests an intrusion into the spectator's religious belief, in fact, the way Mrs. Wilson Woodrow has written it and Director Richard Ridgley produced the play, it is wonderfully dramatic and surpassing beautful.

Charles Dameral, brother of George Dameral, the popular light opera star who is now playing over the Opheum circuit, has deserted the legitimate and joined the forces of Mina Films in Los Angeles.

Little Will Archie, the "miniature" comedian, who has just completed his first picture for the Headline Amusement Company, has given an order to a local aeroplane manufacturer to build for him a specially designed airship.

Claire Whitney, who has starred in many of the Fox Film Corporation's most notable successes, will have the role of Magdalen in "La Tosca," Sardou's tragedy, which is to be picturized by the Fox Film Corporation.

The Globe Feature Picture Booking Office, the result of the former U. B. O. Picture Department, has just been organized and will be in a position in about a week to lay out a guaranteed route of 1,500 days for feature pictures. The company will have 28 branch offices throughout the country and each will be allotted a certain number of days which they will have to fill, being charged accordingly. A. J. Duffy is general manager of the new concern.

FILM FOLK FLASHES.

Marshall Hageman, of the Universal's west coast forces, has been elected to the post of ensign in the Seventh Division of the California Naval Militia. This is regarded as a special honor in view of the recent government ruling which places such officers on an equal footing with graduates of Annapolis.

Edith Storey has returned to the studio from her flying trip to Bermuda. Miss Storey is getting in trim for the summer's work.

Dick Jones has added to his honor of being the youngest Keystone director the additional reputation of being the youngest father connected with the company. A baby girl arrived at the Jones home last week and father Richard does all his nocturnal dancing at home now.

Margaret Joslin, leading woman in the Essanay Snakeville comedies, delighted the hearts of more than one hundred orphans in San Francisco. She visited the orphanage and gave several impersonages in real life of her character of Sophie Clutts of the screen. The children screamed with laughter at her antics.

Charles West has leased a bungalow near the Hollywood studios and is going to do his own cooking. His associates are fond of home cooking and they have warned him that he will have few lonely meals.

Lucille Younge, who plays the lead in the Majestic feature, "The Woman from Warrens," is making every effort to learn the fate of her two brothers who are in the French army. They went to the Belgium front and have not been able to communicate with their relatives since.

William Wadsworth—"Waddy" always to his Edison associates—was given an old-fashioned surprise party the other night on his birthday. A large number of his fellow players gathered at his home.

Mae Busch had a birthday last week. She is still within the limit when no girl is ashamed to tell her age, but we refrain from taking it upon ourselves to do so for her so if it is made public it will have to be from her own lips.

Pauline Bush is taking a well earned rest, and will not put on grease, paint or powder for some months. She contemplates going to a summer ranch for a little time and indulging in a milk diet.

Complete Record of Current Films

Believing the classification of film pictures by the nature of their subjects to be of greater importance to the exhibitor than classification by maker, MOTOGRAPHY has adopted this style in listing current films. Exhibitors are urged to make use of this convenient tabulation in making up their programs. Films will be listed as long in advance of their release dates as possible. Film manufacturers are requested to send us their bulletins as early as possible. Reasonable care is used, and the publishers cannot be responsible for errors.

Brief Stories of the Week's Film Releases

General Program

The Road O' Strife—(EPISODE TWELVE OR "THE SACRIFICE") — LUBIN — Robert Dane discovers the mystery of the cup which resulted in the death of Gilbert Jerome. Daisy, the chorus girl, goes to call on him and takes the cup and flask of the spring water to the governor's home to plead with him for Alene's release. She finally, to prove her story, takes a drink of the water and then a drink of the wine which results in her death. The governor grants a reprieve to Alene. For further review see page 29, this issue. J. C. G.

The White Sister—(Six REELS)—ESSANAY—JUNE 21.—Viola Allen and Richard Travers featured in this story, adapted from F. Marion Crawford's novel, which tells the story of how one Princess Chiaromonte takes the veil after receiving word of the death of her lover, Lieutenant Giovanni Severi. Later he returns and comes face to face with the "White Sister." He pleads with her to renounce her vows, but she will not hear of it. He is fatally injured and only the amputation of his arm will save his life, but he does not care to live, as he cannot marry Angela. Monsignor Sarasenesti finally leaves to get a dispensation so that the "White Sister" may leave the convent and sisterhood, and Giovanni consents to the amputation. For further review, see page 23, this issue.

Hearst-Selig News Pictorial No. 49—SELIG—JUNE 21.—Heavy winds spoil efforts to send twenty-five balloons away in race at Panama Fair; Dr. Bernhard Dernberg, whose comments on the Lusitania brought a storm of criticism, sails for Germany; Floods from the Trinity river sweep lower part of Fort Worth, Texas, rendering 2,000 people homeless; big car strike ties up transportation in Chicago for three days; fashions by Lucile, Lady Duff Gordon; oarsmen of Yale crews gather for final practice before regatta with Harvard; monster crowds gather in the streets of Rome and march about shouting for the government's action in declaring war on Hungary; steamer Nebraskan, torpedoed by German submarine, goes in dock at Liverpool, England; twenty-six tons of dynamite is fired in quarry at Richard City, Tenn., raising tons of rock into the air.

Hearst-Selig News Pictorial No. 50—SELIG—JUNE 24.—Students of Rennsselaer Polytechnic Institute hold novel parade and circus; Colonel House, personal friend of President Wilson, arrives at Roslyn, L. I., from Europe; schooner Margaret goes on rocks off Ward's Island in East river, New York; annual rose carnival at Portland, Ore.; Battery C of Illinois National Guard moves entire equipment to Fort Sheridan; fashions, by Lucille, Lady Duff-Gordon; New England moving picture exhibitors hold outing at Pemberton, Mass.; superdreadnaught Arizona is launched at Brookline Navy Yard, New York; scene at Rome at time of war declaration; little Italy of London joins with Britain in celebration over nation's entry into world war; motor boat naval reserve squadron of Boston Yacht Club goes through maneuvers.

Through Turbulent Waters—(FOUR REELS)—EDISON—JUNE 25.—Jane Dinsmore's father swears to avenge his daughter, whose death was brought on by the neglect and cruelty of her husband, Paul Temple. After Jane's death, Temple goes to New York, and for professional reasons changes his name to Delaney. He meets Alice Robinson, a member of a cheap stock company, and, attracted by her beauty, promises to make her a great actress. She consents to marry him, and he goes through a sham marriage with her. James Montrose, a producer, and his lawyer, Frank Wentworth, engage Delaney for their new play. Through his efforts Alice is retained to play the lead. The first night of the play brands Alice as a star. Her big scene is in the last act, when she fires at Delaney as the curtain falls. Dinsmore arrives in New York and, still seeking revenge, secures an entrance to the stage, and replaces the blank cartridges in the revolver with real bullets. The result is Delaney is shot to death by Alice, and she is arrested on a charge of murder. When Dinsmore learns of this, he telephones Wentworth, now handling her case, and confesses that he was responsible. Alice is released, and Dinsmore commits suicide. Wentworth, having shown long affection for Alice, is now accepted by her. For further review see page 1056, issue of June 26.

Her Answer—LUBIN—JUNE 25.—Victor Sherelan has wronged Madge and is on the point of marrying Grace Morgan and going to the Philippines, but Grace hesitates to marry him on account of her invalid mother. Victor and Grace go to the theater, and Madge, forced to steal, enters the Morgan home. She is traced by a detective and knows she cannot escape, and she seeks refuge in Mrs. Morgan's room. She sees the woman raise a revolver to her breast, but she snatches it away and implores her protection. Mrs. Morgan tells the detective that Madge is her daughter. Victor and Grace return home and Grace has promised to give him her answer before he leaves that night. She runs up to her mother's room and innocently asks who the strange woman is. The detective drags Madge away, and Grace realizes now that she must never leave her mother and tells Victor she will not marry him.

His Fatal Shot—BIOGRAPH—JUNE 28.—Ivan Christy and Mary Malatesta featured. Disdained by the woman he loves because he uses drugs, Hillman seeks forgetfulness in the country, accompanied by his physician. Chance brings to the same locality Barlett, his former rival for the woman's affections, who finds solace in the love of his landlord's simple daughter. Hillman escapes the doctor's watchfulness and the doctor finds a note indicating that he will commit suicide. Bartlett and his sweetheart's brother go hunting, each in his own direction. The girl's brother comes upon Bartlett bending over the dead body of Hillman and believes that he is the murderer. Bartlett is arrested, but the doctor bearing the suicide note and Hillman's gun, arrives and Bartlett is freed.

Trapped—ESSANAY—JUNE 28.—John R. Hope and John Thorn featured. Kirk Weston is a detective unknown to his friend, Jack Lawrence, and simulates fear because of a pretended murder committed in the same manner as one committed by Lawrence years before. Weston demands Lawrence's protection and is taken to a house kept by "Dutch Charlie," where Weston is concealed in the back. Lawrence goes out and tells Charlie to call the police as there is a murderer upstairs. When Lawrence returns Weston threatens to kill him as a "squealer." Lawrence pleads for his life and confesses his crime of years before. The detective then reveals himself and tells Lawrence he has been after him for a long time, and Lawrence is charged with the old murder and jailed.

The Bondwoman—(THREE REELS)—KALEM—JUNE 28.—Featuring Vera Fuller Mellish. Lewis, president of a bank, spends most of his time with La Reine, a musical comedy actress. He sees Amy, who aspires to win fame as a writer, and falls in love with her. Later Horace Blanchard, Amy's father, pressed for funds, steals money from Lewis and the latter calls upon him at his home and there meets Amy, who, learning of the fate which confronts her aged father, is horrified. Amy consents to marry Lewis on condition that she shall remain his wife only until by her literary work she shall repay what her father had stolen. After their marriage Amy continues her literary work. Milton Lacey, head of the publishing house who purchases Amy's work, falls in love with her, and she, believing she returns his love, works night and day to purchase her freedom. Finally the time comes when she hands her husband the check in payment of her father's debt and she rushes out of the room. In the country Amy becomes a mother and gradually the sight of her son brings her back to her better self and Lewis, seeing the child in his cradle, glories in his parenthood. Amy finally tells him that some day she may relent for their child's sake and Lewis hopefully waits.

The Girl and the Reporter—(Two Reels)—Selig—June 28.—Billy Benton, a cub reporter, goes to the home of Violet Reynolds, a society girl and settlement worker, and asks for an interview, but is refused. He reports his failure, and the city editor sends Ned Pelton to get the story. Violet goes to her settlement work and is followed by Ned. He accompanies her into a tenement house where Pete Davis, an office boy, is convalescing. At the end of the summer Mrs. Reynolds and Violet are sailing for home, when Huri Singh, an oriental, makes love and annoys her. He plots to secure her and has her kidnapped and held a prisoner. Pete and Ned discover her place of captivity and she is rescued. Later Edward Pelton and Violet Reynolds are married.

Mr. Jarr and the Captive Maiden—Vitagraph—June 28.—Willie Jarr, Emma and Izzy Slavinsky are bursting paper bags full of water from their window when one accidentally drops on Gus' bald head, and Gus tells Jarr of the cowardly assault. At home Jarr finds all is bustle and preparation for the Gladys Cackleberry—Jack Silver wedding. Willie spies the full-length dress dummy and tells the others and they later purloin it to play Indian with. The dummy gone, Jack is used as a temporary dress model. Gertrude, the emotional servant, says Jack looks sweet enough to kiss, but he eludes her and he and Jarr duck into a taxi, which collides with a brewery truck in front of Gus' place. Jarr is arrested and Gus says he does not know him. The police are about to drag him off when the women folks arrive and beg so hard that they let him go.

Providence and Mrs. Urmy—Essanay—June 29.—Beverly Bayne and Francis X. Bushman featured. Mrs. Urmy is so anxious for Jeanette to marry a member of the nobility that she inserts in an English newspaper than an engagement is pending between Jeanette and Lord

Chilminster, notwithstanding the fact that neither has seen the other. Jeanette reads the announcement and runs out of the house and goes away with her aunt's chauffeur. To end her troubles quick, she suggests that the chauffeur marry her, but that she be allowed to remain wife in name only. She tells Barton, the chauffeur, he can name his own terms, and they start on an automobile trip through the country. Lady Hartley, her aunt, tells them that Barton is only his family name and that he is Lord Chilminster. Jeanette is angry a while, but relents and everybody is happy, thanks to "providence and Mrs. Urmy."

Love's Melody—(Two Reels)—Biograph—June 29.—Jack Mulhall and Marie Newton featured. The young actor becomes engaged to a beautiful girl, whose stepfather is a wealthy man. In a strangely dramatic way he learns what a tragic story lies behind her beauty and all other talents which are so fascinating. One evening there is a bachelor dinner given after the performance, and as they have no music a blind old musician, who has stopped to talk to the stage doorkeeper, is asked to play for them. He tells the story of how, years before, he had met and fallen in love with a beautiful young singer, who also had another suitor, a wealthy man. It was then he wrote "Love's Melody." After a few years, in the course of which they were blessed with a child, he became blind and gradually the family drifted to poorer and poorer quarters. His wife went, taking the little girl with her, and left him behind. He had never heard from them since. On the day after hearing this sad story the actor calls on his sweetheart and hears her playing "Love's Melody." She answers his eager question with "My mother taught me that when I was a child." The lost is found.

The Merry Moving Men—Kalem—June 29.—Bud and Ham apply to a moving concern for a job and are ordered to transport the Dupont household effects to their summer home. After losing a few pieces of furniture they spy a circus, desert the wagon and try to take in the show. They finally get the van to the cottage and after unloading bed and bedding fall asleep. Next morning they arrive at Dupont's and Mr. Dupont is ready to commit murder. He manages them at the point of his revolver, but they discover that all the shots have been discharged, and Ham turns upon Dupont, knocks him down and trips away with his little pal.

Her Choice—Lubin—June 29.—Count Lamont tries to supplant himself in Harry's place in Betty's affections. Betty's father favors the count, but her mother favors Lord Chase. Betty and Harry get an idea. She writes a note to the count and one to the lord, asking that they both come to a certain meeting place at a late hour and to be dressed as a woman, and that neither must speak a word, but proceed to the minister's to be wedded. Harry and Betty go to the minister's and are married. The count and lord go to the minister's to be married and the young folks hide. The wedding is interrupted by both parties producing rings and the minister whisks off their hats and exposes their identity.

On the Border—Selig—June 29.—Joe, the line rider, is in love with Ruth, who meets Mason, a smuggler, and his accomplice, Nash. Mason conceals opium in the tire case of his automobile, and Ruth and Nash go for a ride. Joe is informed of opium smuggling and suspects Nash. As Joe approaches, Mason and Nash abandon the car and Joe finds the opium in the tire case. Later he captures Mason and Nash.

The Hand of God—(Two Reels)—Vitagraph—June 29.—Charles Wellesley and Naomi Childers featured. Hugh Rawn, a successful and well beloved minister, is day dreaming. Aroused from his day dreams he happens to see the face of his lost sister at the window and stepping outside he speaks to her. She refuses his hospitality, not wishing his wife to know she had disgraced his family. Hugh finally succeeds in introducing Jessie as his new secretary, and his wife makes it unpleasant for her. Hugh goes to Jessie's room and tries to persuade her not to leave, and Gladys, his wife, looking in sees her husband's arms about Jessie's shoulders. Overcome she staggers back to her room and falls prostrate on the floor. On regaining consciousness, it is found a paralytic stroke has rendered her incapable of speech or movement. One day a lightning bolt strikes the house and the shock brings back the use of Gladys' limbs and speech. Finally matters are explained and Gladys tells her husband that she feels her affliction was a just punishment for her lack of faith in him.

Cartoons in the Hotel—Edison—June 30.—Featuring cartoons by Raoul Barre. Mae, the telephone operator, is so absorbed in the perusal of "The Grouch Chaser" that a crook removes a ring from her finger without her noticing it. He then tries to get away with the salesman's scarf pin, but is caught in the act and turned over to the police.

T. C. K.

Dud Resolves Not to Smoke—Essanay—June 30.—Dud and Wag, his dog, find his father's pipe and Dud resolves to smoke. The spirit of smoke appears and carries Dud away into the clouds and leaves him hanging on the corner of the moon. Wag weeps so many tears that he forms a lake and drowns himself. Dud tells the moon a funny story and gets dumped off into space for his pains, because of the moon's boisterous laughter. He falls and falls and finally wakes up on the floor of his bedroom and declares to Wag he will never smoke again.

The Accomplice—(Two Reels)—Kalem—June 30.—Marin Sais and Arthur Shirley featured. Millionaire Harris requests the police to aid him in searching for his son, whom he has not seen since he was an infant. The same day a young man is found bound and gagged near the river and shortly after he is taken to the hospital. The attendant guarding him is found unconscious. Evelyn and Strong are sent to the scene, and later they trace the missing man and find him a prisoner in a house in the suburbs, and they also learn that the mysterious person is the son of old Harris. A clever ruse on the part of Evelyn brings about the capture of Ritche, an ex-convict, and the long-lost son is restored to his father.

The Path of the Rainbow—(Three Reels)—Lubin—June 30—Henry Grayson, a bank teller, and Briggs, an artist, are in love with Julia Mills, a society belle. Julia eventually marries Briggs and they go to Europe. Grayson adopts Frances, an orphan of nine years, and when she reaches the age of eighteen he falls in love with her, but delays his proposal. Frances falls in love with Ed Hardy, the brother of her best friend. He proposes to her and she refuses to marry him until he makes good in the business just left him. Things go bad with Ed, and Frances decides to ask a loan from Henry. He has just come from Rainbow Hill, where he has just completed a cottage and realizes it is now time to propose. He starts to explain how long he has sought happiness of wedlock with her, but she tells him her promise to marry Ed Hardy. The next morning Ed comes to Henry for a loan and Henry gives it to him. The next day he tells the newly engaged couple that the cottage on Rainbow Hill will be their wedding present and twenty-four hours after Julia comes to see him. Soon there is a double wedding.

The Mystery of Dead Man's Isle—SELIG—JUNE 30.—Robert Wayne, a young mining engineer, and his assistant, Ben Wilson, are in camp on Dead Man's Isle. He sees a woman and wonders who it can be. She is Hulda, a beautiful girl, who has lived with a counterfeiter and who has forced her to do criminal work. Later he takes her away from this life.

Trailed to the Puma's Lair—SELIG—JULY 3.—Henry Richards, son of a prosperous mine owner, tells Adoline, wife of Ted Mason, that she is too beautiful to waste her time in a mining camp. After Mason gies to work Adoline leaves the cabin and is followed by Reynolds, her father, who sees her meet Richard. Reynolds tells his daughter the story of his life, of how a stranger betrayed his hospitality by stealing his wife, how the stranger was killed and how the deadly puma killed her mother, but how she, then an infant, was saved. Reynolds' story brings realization of her wrong attitude toward her husband and she returns home.

The Evolution of Cutey—VITAGRAPH—JUNE 30.—Wally Van and Anita Frazer featured. The widow Sweezy regards her son, Cutey, as still a child and dresses him in Buster Brown suits. The widow is in love with Mat Swirl and has a deadly rival in Amanda Bones, an old maid. Cutey Pickles, who is really a full grown man, falls in love with Lizzie, the pretty maid-of-all-work at the Sweezy home. At a dress rehearsal of a play Lizzie shows Cutey a suit of man's clothes and he puts them on and makes a very spruce looking young man. Lizzie attracts the attention of Miss Bones, and Cutey flirts with her. He proposes, is accepted and suggests that they speak to mother. Amanda Bones goes up to Mrs. Sweezy, throws her arm around her neck and cries, "My dear, new mother." Pickles announces that if Mrs. Sweezy won't take Lizzie for a daughter-in-law she will have to take Miss Bones. Finally she consents to Pickles' marriage to Lizzie.

Fate's Healing Hand—BIOGRAPH—JULY 1.—Isabel Rea featured with an all-star cast. Jack Calvert has a quarrel with his neighbor, Judson, over the boundary line and come to blows. Calvert's wife sees what is happening and runs toward them and in the struggle Judson's gun is discharged, killing Mrs. Calvert. Judson is haunted by the memory and tells his son, Bob, to refrain from evil passions. Bob enters the ministry and at college meets Hallie, Calvert's daughter. After their graduation the young folks start home together and are married by the missionary. When her father discovers that she has married the son of the man who has embittered his life he snatches up his gun and goes forth to kill. Hallie rushes to warn her husband and receives the bullet intended for him. As she falls Bob and her father simultaneously rush forward and recognize each other. Hallie recovers from her wound, and by her love for both men she brings them together as friends.

A Countless Count—ESSANAY—JULY 1.—Harry Pollard featured. Father has other ideas for his daughter's marriage other than her own and has already selected a count as his future son-in-law. Father has never seen the count and finding an Irishman in the park, whom he mistakes for the count, invites him to his home. Complications arise when the real count arrives. The sweetheart disguises himself as a butler and makes everything end happily by throwing both the count and the Irishman out of the house. An uproariously funny farce.

By the Flip of the Coin—(TWO REELS)—LUBIN—JULY 1.—Colonel Owen Coll, of the British army in India, receives word that Lieutenant Gerald Netter is to be stationed at his post. Years before Gerald and Coll had been rivals for the hand of Marian Denby. Marian favored Gerald. The Boer war started and Coll shot Gerald, put his name on the casualty list as dead and destroyed a note which Gerald wrote to Marian. Marian wrote Coll a note telling him that she could never marry him and this note he put in another envelope and sent to Gerald. Marian finally consents to marry Coll and at a dance she meets Gerald. The next morning he seemingly starts an argument with Gerald, which ends with Gerald flinging his glove in Coll's face and since dueling is forbidden they decide to flip a coin and if heads turns up Gerald must suicide by ten o'clock and if tails turns up Coll must. The coin is flipped and turns up heads. Coll goes home to his wife and drunkenly explains how he flipped the coin, which Marian finds has heads on both sides. Gerald is saved just in the nick of time and Coll himself commits suicide.

A Harmless Flirtation—MINA—JULY 1.—Jerry flirts with Nellie and he returns to see her the second time. A masher also stricken by Nellie's beauty, makes advances to her and she calls a policeman. The officer has just completed his duty of chasing the masher, when Bridget, his sweetheart, comes upon the scene. Nellie tells Jerry of her experience and he threatens vengeance. He goes to the spot where the scene occurred. He finds the officer, and believing him to be the guilty man, pounces upon him and puts him asleep. Nellie's father comes in search of his daughter and Jerry treats him accordingly. He returns to Nellie and she invites him to meet her father. Face to face come the two warring forces of a few hours before. Just then the policeman whom Jerry had mistaken for a masher, enters and Jerry's troubles come thick and fast, but Jerry finally escapes in the very patrol wagon which the police had brought to cart home their quarry.

The Honeymoon Pact—VITAGRAPH—JULY 1.—Lillian and Billy, after their honeymoon journey, make a pact to have "no girl friends—no club friends—only their two selves—always together." This plan works out at first, but they soon become less demonstrative toward each other and both entertain secret longings to have a chat with an old friend. Their maid leaves and Lillian goes quietly to an old school chum of hers and gets her to take the maid's place. Billy hits on the same plan and asks a club friends to stay at his home in the guise of a chauffeur. The two new adjuncts to the household take immediate liking to each other, and when Billy and Lillian see the two spooning they begin to worry, as each thinks the other's servant the real thing. A few days later they receive word of their elopement and finally matters are cleared up.

The Sands of Dee—BIOGRAPH RE-ISSUE—JULY 2.—Mae Marsh and Robert Harron featured. Suggested by Charles Kingsley's great poem of the same name. This picture tells the story of a girl who loved not wisely, but too well. Mary was a fisher lass and betrothed to a young lad of the village. One of her duties was to call the cattle home across the sands of Dee. One day she meets a stranger, an artist, who paints her portrait and makes love to her. Her sweetheart remonstrated when she went out at night to meet the artist, but she tricked him and went to keep the tryst. Later the artist's love grew cold and she learned that he had a wife. Her father turns her from his door and she wandered along the shore.

The Tragedies of the Crystal Globe—(THREE REELS)—EDISON—JULY 2.—An interesting story based on reincarnation. Mazuffer Mansur, to win the love of Mirza Morris by hypnotic suggestion, shows her in the crystal globe, three tragedies, supposed to have happened centuries before. In all of these tragedies he and she are in love with each other. He then tells her he has always loved her as he does now. Paul Devine, Mirza's fiance, comes in search of her. Mansur produces two cups of poison and asks her to die with him. Just as she places the cup to her lips, Paul enters the room and knocks it from her hand. Mansur drinks the poison and dies. For further review, see page 24, this issue.

Hunting a Husband—VITAGRAPH—JULY 2.—Jud Livingston receives a note asking him to care for Julia, the daughter of an old friend. The child proves to be a pretty young girl of nineteen and he falls in love with her. His housekeeper tells him he should find a husband for Julia, and he rather reluctantly lines up all the eligible bachelors in the place to pick a husband for the girl. Mrs. Bell tells him he is the man whom Julia is in love with, and thus Jud finds her a husband.

Luxurious Lou—BIOGRAPH—JULY 3.—The woman who alighted from the stage on Tim Bryant's arm was a woman as Willow Creek had never seen—an angular, ancient female, tricked out in clothes that made the feminine population gasp. Tired of the simple life she leaves Tim and goes to Seattle, where she wrote that after his outrageous treatment she wanted a divorce and nothing less than $50,000 would square it with her. The boys go with Tim to Seattle and offer to buy him off for $10,00. Luxurious Lou laughed at them and suddenly the door opened and Tom Evans walked in and exclaims, "Don't give her a cent. She ain't got any claim on Tim, being still Mrs. Evans as far as I'm aware," and then he told them of his unfortunate marriage. He telephones the office to send up a ticket for Utah and gives Luxurious Lou money for current expenses.

The Inner Brute—(Three Reels)—Essanay—July 3.—With an all-star cast. Jake, the son, is a victim of prenatal influence, having all the brutishness and ferocity of a tiger, by which his mother was frightened before his birth. Jake grows to manhood and loves Helen Parker. He is jealous of Will Hammond, whom Helen favors and kills him by throwing him over a cliff. He eludes his pursuers and goes home and peers into the cabin window. He scratches at the door as the tiger did years before and his mother hears and looks out of the window and sees the brutish face of her own son, which fades to the head and gaping jaws of a tiger. She kills Jake, out easing her heart of a greater sorrow than even his death brings.

Was It Her Duty?—Edison—July 3.—Miriam Nesbitt is seen as the girl who gives up the man she was to marry because she believes her mother needs her more than he does. In later life the girl, from overwork, is worn and faded. After the death of her mother she is left alone—alone with her dreams of what might have been. The reward of her great sacrifice is loneliness. T. C. K.

Ebb Tide—(Three Reels)—Selig—July 3.—Kathlyn Williams, Harry Lonsdale, Martha Boucher and Wheeler Oakman are featured in this dramatic love story produced by Colin Campbell. See review on page —, this issue. N. G. C.

A Day on the Force—Lubin—July 3—Bill decides after seeing the attentions lavished upon a policeman, to become an officer. He discovers an officer asleep, dons his coat and hat, and in the course of his rounds meets Nora, the cook. She invites him into the house and here he is called upon to capture a burglar. He enters the hall and instead of hitting the burglar hits the owner of the house and beats a hasty retreat into the park, where he starts a flirtation with a pretty girl, which is resented by her Frenchman lover, who chases Bill. After a long chase Bill leads his pursuers to a creek and they stumble over him falling into the creek.

The Criminal—(Broadway Star Feature)—(Three Reels)—Vitagraph—July 3.—Gordon West, a young lawyer, in love with Anna Stevens, is called out of town. The girl learns that she is to become a mother, and after waiting for his return, leaves. After her baby is born she leaves it on West's doorstep with an explanatory note. Jim Wells, a crook, steals the child and his wife persuades him to keep it. She finds the note giving the child's name as Nell. Many years later Gordon, now a district attorney, is after Wells' gang and Nell has been forced to aid the crooks. Reeves, a secret service man, becomes interested in the girl and Wells kills him. Nell is arrested on a murder charge and Gordon West is to prosecute the case. He then learns that Nell is his own daughter and everything is cleared up and father and daughter are reunited.

Mutual Program

The Two-Cent Mystery—Thanhouser—June 20.—Helen Badgley starred. As a reward for a perfect school report, Barbara is given two new pennies. She places them under a plate on the table for safe-keeping, but they disappear during her absence from the room for a few minutes. After searching her toy animals and dolls, she is greeted by the sight of a company of very small fairies dancing on the table. She is still more mystified when, later, the coins drop upon her head. The solution of the mystery is that the nurse overlooked the coins in clearing off the table, and that they were shaken out on the awning, from where they found their way to the top of Barbara's head. Barbara, however, prefers to believe that the fairies and witches were implicated in the crime.

The Ash Can—Majestic—June 22.—Dick Dalton, a famous juvenile detective, enlists the aid of Flora, his stenographer, to run down a desperate character. The criminal is captured in short order. But Flora is abducted by Joe's accomplices, and is imprisoned in an ash can, where she falls asleep. When the youthful crooks learn that the ash man has taken the can off to dump it into the ocean, they hurry after him to save the girl. They arrive just in time to see the can hurled into the deep. Flora, in the meantime, has slipped out of the can and made her escape. The criminals, confronted by the girl, think that she is a ghost.

Which Shall It Be?—(Two Reels)—Thanhouser—June 22.—An appealing drama, featuring all of the Thanhouser children. A wealthy, childless old couple, living on a fine country estate, envy their neighbor, Farmer Selden, his big family. As the farmer is poor, they do not doubt but what they can induce him to let them have one of the children in return for money and land, and write him. As poverty is pressing hard upon the farmer and his family, he and his wife decide to let one of the children go, but they cannot decide which one, all seem so precious, so decline the offer.

The Silent Witness—Reliance—June 23.—Carl Rogers is employed by the bank of which John Blackwood is president. Blackwood tells Rogers that until he has a few thousand dollars put by, he cannot hope to marry his daughter, Lolita. Rogers completes an electrical invention for melting steel, and shows it to the bank president, who laughs at the invention. Two crooks buy the device with the intention of using it to break safes. They pick out the bank in which Rogers is employed for their first robbery. The evening of the robbery, Lolita happens to call on her father, and leaves her camera on a cabinet near the safe. By chance one of the burglars accidentally pushes the shutter release of the camera just as a ray of light comes from the safe. Lolita develops her films and the real robbers are discovered. The papers get the story and Rogers sells his invention for a fortune. His marriage to Lolita is postponed no longer.

By Whose Hand—(Two Reels)—American—June 25.—Winnifred Greenwood and Charles Bartlett featured. Chester Rowe commits murder and robbery and goes to the mountains to hide. He meets Lottie Toby, a girl of the mountains, and falls in love with her. Lottie is loved by a crippled lad, but feels only pity for him. Some time later Mr. Toby is in receipt of $1,000 and is on his way home when he is attacked. It is discovered that Rowe had made the attack and a revolver shot from Toby's revolver killed him. Oliver, the crippled boy, thinks that he has killed Rowe, as he had fired his rifle when he had seen the attack, but finally things are cleared up and Oliver found not guilty. See review on page 27, this issue.

The Stolen Anthurium—Falstaff—June 25.—A little old maid and a nice old bachelor live side by side. They do not know each other. A friend sends Miss Emily a rare specimen of cactus, which is the means of bringing the bachelor and the old maid together in a way that is very interesting and romantic.

The Motor Boat Bandits—Reliance—June 25.—Jane Pepper, a reporter, goes to the beach for a week's rest. There she meets Bob Warren, a detective, who confides to her that he is on the trail of certain motor boat bandits, and tells her that he suspects two men who live in the cottage next to hers. They agree to meet that evening at the casino. When Bob does not show up at the casino, Jane returns and, from an upper window, watches the house next door. She sees her two neighbors come out leading a third man. The girl summons life-savers and an officer, and together they give chase in a fast boat. The crooks are overtaken, and while they are being taken back, Jane and Warren sit in the back of the boat planning a future.

When the House Divided—ROYAL—JUNE 26.—A brother and sister, both very meek, are married to martinets. Their rich uncle dies, leaving them his large estate, provided they and their partners live in the house for one year. The bullying husband and the virago of a wife are the source of continuous warfare, and finally lines are chalked on the carpets to divide the house into two parts. The meek brother and sister reach the limit of endurance and indulge in some wine. They assert themselves so vigorously that the chalk lines are erased in the scuffle.

Children of the Sea—(TWO REELS)—MAJESTIC—JUNE 27.—Starring Francelia Billington in a double role. Oliver Rand, a celebrated artist, returns to the island where, years before, he wooed away Claudia, a fisherman's daughter. He meets Letty, and the girl longs to go out into the world beyond, when she learns from him that Claudia is now a famous actress. When Rand learns that Letty, unknown to herself, is the child of Claudia by a man for whom she had deserted Rand himself, he goes in search of the girl, who has run away to be an actress. Letty meets her own mother, but neither Claudia nor her daughter know each other. Rand finds the girl in the city and takes her home to her people.

Innocence at Monte Carlo—THANHOUSER—JUNE 27.—Alice Brownell, on her way from her convent school in France to Genoa, to meet her parents, is stranded in Monte Carlo and is met by Richard Marcus, a young man who lives by his wits. His confederates try to abduct the girl, but he succeeds in freeing her from them and places her on the train to Genoa. Marcus then tells his associates and adds, "I hope some decent man would do the same for my young sister."

The Madonna — BEAUTY — JUNE 29.—Neva Gerber and Webster Campbell featured in this story of the cruelty and worthlessness of John Middleton, who causes the death of his wife at the time their child is born. On her death-bed John's wife leaves her baby in care of her sister, Gertie. John leaves the home and Gertie later poses for an artist in a picture of the madonna and child. The picture is placed on exhibition and seen by Bob Elmer, a dissolute young man. He falls in love with Gertie, but meanwhile John Middleton returns, takes the infant and declares he will return it when Gertie consents to marry him. Bob comes to call on Gertie and on hearing the story determines to recover the child. When Bob places the infant in Gertie's arms he tells her of his love and vows he will love and protect Gertie and the baby through all the years to come. J. C. G.

The Show Down—RELIANCE—JUNE 28.—Featuring Margie Wilson. Annie Breen, a salesgirl, repulses the attentions of Billings, a drummer employed by the store in which Annie works. He succeeds in having her discharged, and then places her under obligation to him by giving her money with which to pay her room rent. Ben, released from reform school, stays at the same boarding house in which Annie is living. He misinterprets her relations with Billings, and, assuring himself that there is no crime in stealing from such a woman, he takes the money. Annie determines to free herself from her obligation to Billings. Finding the money gone, she surrenders herself to the drummer. Ben, haunted by the thought that he has broken his promise to the chaplain to reform, returns the money in time to save Annie from Billings.

The Kid Magicians—MAJESTIC—JUNE 29.—An amusing juvenile comedy with Violet Radcliff, George Stone and Carmen de Rue. Tiny Rags, a poor caddy, is very much admired by the little rich girl, which makes the rich boy very jealous. George's birthday party is taken to see a magician, and on their return home the children try to imitate him.

A Good Business Deal—AMERICAN—JUNE 30.—Joseph Galbraith and Vivian

Rich featured. Bobby Shermann, a young broker, is neglectful of his business and always short of funds. He is in love with Susan Warrick, a young client of his, but his heavy indebtedness prevents their marriage. He is about to commit suicide when Susan conceives the idea of incorporating him. She and their friends, Jerry Dean and John Birch, set about making Bobby a legal corporation. They decide to marry him to an heiress despite the strenuous objections raised by Susan. He is introduced to Miss Golden and immediately begins making love to her. Susan has another brilliant scheme. She writes to a Wall street friend and induces him to buy for her the controlling interest in Bobby Shermann, Inc., and at once assumes the presidency and directs Bobby to marry the president—herself.

In Old Mexico—RELIANCE—JUNE 30.—Sam de Grasse, Ora Carew, Evelyn Carew, Walter Long and Alfred Paget comprise the cast. The plot concerns itself with a case of mistaken identity which almost results in the death of an innocent girl. The story is well constructed and leads up to a thrilling climax.

The Failure—(TWO REELS)—DOMINO—JULY 1.—Jim Blake, a prospector, works a worthless claim. His child is taken seriously ill and the doctor refuses to make another call until he is paid. He plans to rob the incoming mail, and arrives in time to see another man hold up the stage. The crook secures the money but is seriously wounded. Blake follows him and, finding him unconscious, takes some of the money. He is suspected of the robbery and arrested. Blake substantiates his confession by taking the sheriff to the place where the dead man lies. The sheriff allows him to see his little daughter before he is taken to prison. Through the window the officer watches the child die in its father's arms. Then, believing Blake sufficiently punished, he leaves, intending to pay the money out of his own pocket.

A Woman Scorned—AMERICAN—JULY 2.—Harry Von Meter, Nan Christy and Beatrice Van featured. This story deals with a wife's jealousy of her husband's attentions to a dashing young widow. The wife reprimands her husband and the widow overhears them quarelling about her. Blake, who is out of work and desperate because he cannot support his crippled son and wife, enters Mrs. Fiske's home to rob her. At a revolver point she enlists his aid, as the price of his freedom, in a plot against Neil Winters and his wife. She writes Neil, telling him to come and say farewell, as she is leaving, and when he comes she throws her arms about him and kisses him. Blake with a camera takes a snapshot of the two to carry out the plot. Blake, returning home, finds Neil's wife taking his son to the hospital, and she offers him work. One day while working in the garden he sees Mrs. Fiske showing Mrs. Winters the picture of her husband and the widow. He goes to her and makes a clean breast of the plot and his part in it. J. C. S.

His Mother's Portrait—(Two Reels)—Kay Bee—July 2.—Much against her will, Lotus Correlli, an actress, consents to take an automobile drive with Darrell Blackley, backer of the musical comedy in which she is playing. Blackley forces his attentions on the girl and when the car breaks down, she runs into a farm house for protection. In Bert Hamilton's house she lifts her arms in supplication to the portrait of his mother. Guided to the house by a vision of his dead mother, Bert arrives in time to rescue Lotus from Blackley, and is rewarded by being accepted as her husband.

One Good Cook—Royal—July 3.—Widow Kearn is the only woman in Kentville who can prepare a meal fit to to be eaten. A public meeting is held, and the women persuade the widow to start a cooking school. The after effects are so terrible that the widow is suspected of being in league with her boarder, the undertaker. A tramp who has tried continuously and unsuccessfully to get a meal is rewarded for his persistency with a savory plateful which comes flying through the window.

Mr. Wallack's Wallet—Komic—July 4. Featuring Fay Tincher as a female hobo. Mr. Wallack's wallet is found by Boho, a hobo. Genevieve, a female tramp, learns of Wallack's offer of a reward, and joins in the hunt for the thief. She tracks Boho to a woodshed, where she takes the money from him, and locks him in a trunk. A policeman approaches Genevieve and, finding the missing wallet in her possession, marches her off to jail. Things look bad for the woman hobo when the police return to the shed, and fail to find the trunk, as Genevieve claimed they wound. Wallack, in the meantime, has found the prisoner in the shed, and had him carried off to jail. This clears Genevieve and she is given the reward.

Universal Program

Into the Light—(Two Reels)—Rex—June 17.—Featuring Jane Novak and Roy Stewart. Jane is surprised in the night by a burglar. She protects him from the neighbors, who are awakened by him. This makes him repentant and he leaves the city and becomes the parson of a small village. Some time later Jane meets the former burglar, while on a visit in the country, and they are married.

Blue Blood and Yellow Backs—(Two Reels)—L-Ko—June 20.—Featuring Harry Gribbons, Gertrude Selby and Reggie Morris. The Baron is very fond of Miss de Millyuns, but more fond of her money. He makes brave efforts to capture the heiress and almost succeeds, when he sees an opportunity to capture the money without the heiress, and the result is that he receives nothing but a few stray bullets in a very painful spot.

Circus Mary—(Three Reels)—Victor—June 21.—Starring Mary Fuller. Mary Elton marries John Hammond, but on learning that she is a detriment to her husband's political career she leaves him and returns to her old life as a wire-walker with a traveling circus. Hammond makes no effort to find his wife, not knowing that a daughter has been born to them. Mary dies in child-birth; little Mary grows to womanhood and becomes the joy and pride of the circus. The district attorney, Hugh Graham, and John Hammond, who has been elected governor, visit the circus and meet Mary. Hammond sees a remarkable resemblance in her to the wife who deserted him years before, investigates, and discovers she is his daughter. Later, Mary marries the district attorney.

A Dismantled Beauty—L-Ko—June 23.—Cast headed by Harry Gribbon. Three men love one beautiful lady. The competition is hot, until they learn that the beauty is a crook. Then beauty fades, and rivalry ceases.

C.; Arizona, mightiest floating fortress of U. S. christened at navy yard, Brooklyn, N. Y.; cartoons by Hy Mayer.

We Should Worry for Aunty—Victor—June 25.—A comedy featuring Harry Myers and Rosemary Theby. Aunty very much objects to her niece marrying a young college man. But Aunty's opposition is finally overcome and niece and her dashing young lover have their own way.

Learning to Be a Father—Powers—June 26.—Captain Silas Tugg, of the schooner Helen, is a hater of women. Jim Fing, the second mate, brings his wife and family aboard. One of the babies captures the captain, and he decides that he ought to have a baby of his own. The captain adopts a baby which he procures from a foundling asylum, and he starts in to learn to be a father. The job is a big one and he hires a nurse, whom he finally marries.

The Mechanical Man—Joker—June 28.—Professor Shultz invents a mechanical life-sized doll. Little Lillian, the daughter of Heinie Gotrocks, reads an account of the invention. To have peace in the family Heinie offers Shultz $20,000 for the invention. The doll is out of order and he dresses the janitor in the doll's clothes, and sends him to play the part of the toy until it can be repaired. Things are rather exciting for a time, but all ends well, thanks to the opportune arrival of Shultz with a real mechanical doll.

The Cheval Mystery—(Three Reels)—Victor—June 28.—Gaston Cheval exercises a hypnotic influence over his niece, Nana. He murders a man and casts caused her to do the things which made her appear guilty. Cheval finally confesses and Nana is exonerated.

When Hubby Grew Jealous—Nestor—June 29.—Hubby is insanely jealous of his little wife. Wifey sprains her ankle and is taken to the hospital for treatment, and when he calls to see her the attendant tells him that she is in the care of Dr. Watt and that no one can see her. Hubby pushes him aside and rushes into the room just as the doctor is holding wife's hand to test her temperature. Hubby raves so that they have to put him in a straight jacket. He later agrees that the doctor's advice to control himself is good, and as the picture closes all is serene.

In the Name of the King—(Two Reels)—Gold Seal—June 29.—Fifth adventure in "Under the Crescent" series. The three fugitives reach the camp of Zohra's father, the Bedouin chief. Zohra recovers her child, and with it her reason. The Prince arrives at the camp, being enraged when he learns that the Princess and the American have escaped, he kills the Bedouin chief. Zohra swears vengeance over the dead body of her father. In the desert the two fugitives encounter an exhausted messenger, bearing a despatch to the English soldiers with information of the contemplated massacre of the Christians. The American goes on with the message. The Princess is captured by Turk soldiers and is taken to their master, a cousin of the Prince. He takes liberties with the Princess, and she stabs him to the heart.

The Grail—(TWO REELS)—LAEMMLE—JUNE 30.—This is a modern application of the spirit of the "Holy Grail." Jean Griswold, a girl of romantic disposition, insists that her sweetheart, Williamson, shall make a modern knight of himself and seek his Grail, pledging to marry him when he has found it. He learns that her father has stolen funds from the bank, and assumes the blame for the shortage and disappears, asking only that the father explain his sacrifice to his daughter. When the scandal is made public, Griswold has not the heart to confess to his daughter, and allows her to believe that Williamson was an absconder. The characters all go west, and they meet at a dry water-hole in the desert. The father is crazed by thirst, and the hero, embittered by his duplicity, gloats over his sufferings, until the old spirit of knighthood is brought back to him in an impressive manner.

The Old Grouch—BIG U—JULY 1.—John Agnew, unsympathetic and selfish in his treatment of others, dreams that he loses his fortune and is reduced to dire want. He is jeered at by his employes and acquaintances, who gloat over the misfortune of the man who by his treatment of them caused them to hate him. All turn against him but his wife, and unable to secure manual labor, because he has made so many enemies, the once wealthy man faces starvation. After awakening he relates the dream to his wife, and tells her of his resolve to overcome his selfishness. Murdock MacQuarrie featured.

Vanity—(TWO REELS)—REX—JULY 1.—James Gordon's wife leaves him and goes away with Henry Dillon, because her husband cannot give her fine clothes. Gordon is finally given a position of trust with the company. He goes West as a representative of the company, and in a town he visits sees Dillon shot for cheating at cards, in a gambling hall. After a long search he finds his wife and a happy reunion takes place.

The Marble Heart—(FOUR REELS)—IMP—JULY 2.—Featuring King Baggot. Raphael, a modern sculptor, dreams that in the days of Phydias, about five hundred years before Christ, he lived as Phydias, the sculptor, and was the friend of Diogenes, and that he made some beautiful statues on commission for Georgias, the richest man in Asia. His female statues come to life and, disdaining his love, smile upon the wealthy man. In real life, however, Raphael's great wealth deprives him of many pleasures. Marco, a beautiful and merciless coquette, termed "the marble heart" because of her cold nature, figures prominently in the story.

When the Spirits Moved—NESTOR—JULY 2.—The girl invites Eddie to visit her home. The girl's family are all spiritualists and Eddie arrives in the midst of one of the meetings. The longer the party is in session the more his fears grow. After an evening that is all too eventful, he joyfully sets out for home and peace.

Jane's Declaration of Independence—(TWO REELS)—BISON—JULY 3.—Alexander Proctor refuses his consent to the marriage of his daughter Jane to Richard Benton, a lieutenant in the United States Army. He objects to the match because Benton has only a small income as an army officer. Jane receives a letter from her lover, asking her to consent to an immediate marriage, as he is to be transferred to the Philippines. She decides to marry him and leaves without her father's consent. Proctor follows her and after meeting Benton and Jane at the army post, and seeing himself defeated at every angle, finally surrenders, and is an active participant in the military wedding which speedily follows.

A Skin Game—JOKER—JULY 3.—Mons Dauber, an artist, is warned by the proprietor of the physical culture school never to speak to his wife again. The artist pays a man to pose with a bearskin on. When he leaves the room a real bear, escaped from an organ grinder, enters and chases the poser out. The bear then gives chase to the artist, and he hides in one of the dressing rooms of the gymnasium. Madam Petite decides to take a plunge and goes into the dressing room to don her bathing suit. When her husband sees her in the room with the artist, he is about to shoot him, when the man in the bearskin and the organ grinder, who has been chasing him, fall through the skylight. The situation is satisfactorily explained to the husband.

Fifty Years Behind—POWERS—JULY 3.—Joshua Winters, a poor watchmaker, lives with his mother and adopted sister, whom it is understood he will some day marry. A rich young society girl comes to the shop to have her watch mended. She makes a great impression on Joshua and in a spirit of fun invites him to a reception at her home that evening. He arrives at the house and seeing the heiress and her lover making love, realizes the extent of his folly. He silently slips out and goes back to his humble home and the adopted girl who is so faithful to him.

The Advisor—Big U—July 4.—The political machine fears the election of Jim Rothwell, the candidate of the reform party. They determine to implicate him in a scandal. For this purpose Mrs. Wiley, a beautiful woman with but few scruples, is brought from another city. On a pretense of buying real estate the woman calls many times at his office. Jim's wife, Madge, is cleverly made to suspect her husband by the politicians, and she asks Dr. Carr, her family's physician for years, who is much the same as a father to her. The doctor treats the matter lightly, but tells her to watch her husband. Next morning she follows Jim to his office, and her suspicions are confirmed when she sees Mrs. Wiley in his office. The detectives which Jim, fearing a trap, retained, secure evidence and arrest the woman and her companion. In the final scene matters are explained, with the old doctor sorely repentant.

Billie's Baby—Laemmle—July 4.—Mrs. Benson sends her scanty savings to Oliver Morton to invest. Irene Morris, who lives with Mrs. Benson, is Morton's stenographer. Irene is suspicious of her employer and asks him if the mining property in which he is to invest the money is all right. He is angered at her question and discharges her. The girl tells Mrs. Benson to consult her new acquaintance, Frank Herrod, a detective. Frank investigates Morton and has him arrested before he can get away with his ill gotten gains. The detective is greatly disappointed when he hears Irene phone her sister Billie and tell her to take good care of baby. But he is relieved when he meets Billie and finds that baby is a pet dog.

The Curse of Work—(Two Reels)—L-Ko—July 4.—Featuring Billie Ritchie. Bill is a bootblack, but he has social aspirations. He rescues an heiress and things go along nicely, until father and the heiress need a shine and pick out Bill's stand.

Feature Programs

Fox

The Devil's Daughter—(Five Reels)—Fox.—Theda Bara featured as the sculptor's model, who causes the artist to fall in love with her and forget his wife and child. The model defies the wife to take her husband away from her and then, in a fit of desperation, the artist shoots himself and is nursed back to health by his wife. He returns to the siren again and his wife leaves him and he becomes a raving maniac.

Lasky

The Arab—(Five Reels)—Paramount.—Edgar Selwyn featured. The story deals with a young Bedouin who falls in love with an American missionary's daughter. The Turkish governor also falls in love with her and he orders a general massacre on the Christians, in order that he may further his ambitions concerning her. She is lured to his palace and placed in his harem for "protection." The young Bedouin sees through the scheme and rushes out to the desert, where a band of his people are encamped. He returns with them and goes into the palace single-handed, leaving instructions for his horsemen to follow him. He breaks into the governor's apartments as he is forcing his attentions upon the girl, and is shot. The Bedouins arrive and are told that their chief was shot by the girl, but he recovers sufficiently to point out the governor as the assailant. The Bedouin recovers from his wound and the girl goes back to America.

Morosco-Bosworth

The Wild Olive—(Five Reels)—Morosco-Bosworth.—Norrie Ford, convicted of murder on circumstantial evidence, escapes from prison and is aided by a mountain girl to reach the Argentine in safety. The girl refused to tell him her name and he knows her only as the "Wild Olive." Through letters of introduction given him by the girl, he secures a responsible position with a large importing concern. His letters addressed to "The Wild Olive" are returned by the postal authorities, and he gives up all hope of ever seeing her again. Ford becomes engaged to Evie Wayne, and on her return to New York he is transferred to the New York office. He meets "The Wild Olive," and for the first time learns her real name, Miriam Strange. Ford's disguise is penetrated, but he is finally exonerated and left free to marry the woman to whom he owes his life, "The Wild Olive."

Metro

My Best Girl—(Five Reels)—Metro. Dick Vanderfleet is expelled from college because Ann Wilson, who had come to the dormitory to see Paul Denton, was found in his room, and as a result of this he is discredited by Dora Lane, his best girl. After the death of her father, Dora goes to the army post to demonstrate a new explosive which her father had invented. Dick, through a mistake, is arrested as a deserter and sent to the barracks. There he meets and is finally reunited to his best girl, Dora.

Mutual Masterpictures

The Reward—(Four Reels)—New York Motion Picture Company.—Bessie Barriscale, supported by Arthur Maude, in a dramatic story from the pen of C. Gardner Sullivan, concerning Jane Wallace, a chorus girl, who is finally tempted to take the primrose path after years of straight living. She hesitates, however, ere it is too late, and learns that virtue has its own reward. See review page 25, this issue. N. G. C.

North American

Old Foes with New Faces—(Chapter Ten of "The Diamond from the Sky")—(Two Reels)—American.—The diamond is taken by the train robbers from Vivian Marston and later dropped in the desert by one of the bandits who is killed. Esther and Hagar go to Richmond to live with Mrs. Randolph and there they are followed by Quabba. Esther finds a letter which Hagar had written years before and learns her true parentage. Vivian Marston, upon her arrival in California, leaves Blair Stanley and telegraphs Bloom that she must have the diamond. Arthur Stanley, now known as John Powell, finds a treasure on the carcass of a dead horse, but the diamond is last seen gleaming among the cacti of the burning desert. Paramount

Brother Officers—(Five Reels)—Paramount.—John Hinds, the son of a bookmaker, enlists in the English service and proves to be a good soldier. During some fighting Hinds saves the life of young Lieutenant Pleydell. Hinds prospers financially and is assigned to the First Lancers, of which Pleydell is an officer. In the meantime, both have fallen in love with Baroness Royden, but Hinds, realizing his position as regards birth, gives her up to Pleydell. They are married and after a short time Pleydell is pressed for the debts owing the gambler and he is in sore straits. Hinds comes to his rescue. Later Pleydell's I. O. U.'s are returned and Hinds generously assures Honor, his wife, that his debts are all through a misunderstanding. Hinds decides to leave his service, bids the Pleydells farewell and bravely leaves all that life holds dear to him forever. All-star cast featured.

Pathe

Whiffles Wins Out—Pathe.—Featuring A. Prince. Whiffles, chief of police, receives a notice that Casquette, a dangerous crook, is in town. On the same day he falls before the charms of a fair damsel whom he passes on the street. His card secures him an audience with her. On awakening several hours later, divested of his clothes, Whiffles realizes that the wine with which he drank "her" health was doped. The police find Whiffles in the crook's apartment, and, not recognizing him in Casquette's cast-off feminine garments, drag him off to jail. The real crook is captured as he is leaving on a train, and Whiffles loses no time in putting him behind bars after forcing him to return his clothes. C. R. C.

How Swedish Troops Cross a River—Pathe.—This timely educational demonstrates how troops overcome the difficulties presented by a turbulent stream. A trolley, greatly resembling the breeches-buoy device, is rigged across the stream and the men swing across. It takes but a few minutes to rig up the trolley, and the men, who carry their seats and hooks themselves, cross with marvelous ease. On the same reel with "A Stone Age Adventure." C. R. C.

The Ruins of Ancient Rome—Pathe.—Splendid photography discloses views of the Gate of St. Paul, the Tomb of the Tribune, Caius Centius, the Bridge and Castle of St. Angelo, the Arch of Constantine, the famous Colosseum, the Forum, and many other historical ruins. On the same reel with Microscopic Marvels of Fresh Water—PATHE.—This is a most interesting educational showing clearly many different forms of aquatic organisms by means of a special apparatus composed of magnifying mirrors and lens. C. R. C.

Baby's Trumpet—PATHE.—When Jean learns that his aunt, who has promised him a trumpet, has arrived without it, he decides to punish her for breaking her word. His first plan miscarries. Father sits on the pins which were meant for auntie, and Jean receives a spanking for his trouble. The boy then fills his aunt's purse with fleas. A thief steals it. The fleas make their escape and soon the thief is busily engaged scratching. Jean sees him, communicates his suspicions to a policeman, and so brings about the recovery of auntie's purse. As a reward he receives his treasured trumpet. On the same reel with How Building Stone Is Quarried—PATHE.—An interesting and instructive film showing rock cut up into squares by gigantic drills and "thrown" to the level to be hauled away. C. R. C.

Tricks of Fate—(TWO REELS)—PATHE.—The Prestons, while still mourning for their only child, find a baby girl at their door and adopt it. Years afterward a vagrant named Blake calls on Naida's foster father and demands money for keeping secret the fact that he saw a mulatto woman deposit the infant Naida on the doorstep. Preston satisfies the blackmailer, but Naida overhears the terrible disclosure. Thinking that she is of negro blood, she leaves home, plunging her foster parents and fiance into despair. Her musical ability proves a good means of support. Blake meets her and tells her of how he saw the mulatto woman desert her when she was a baby. Through a musical professor, Naida's fiance learns of her whereabouts and calls on her. She confesses her dreadful secret to him. Her old mulatto maid overhears her and recognizes in the story Naida, whom she left on the Preston doorstep years before. The maid then dispels the clouds which have enveloped Naida's life by telling of how her white mistress died and left her child in her care. Being unable to support it, she left it lying at the entrance to the Preston home. Everything explained, Naida returns home and prepares for her marriage to Walter. C. R. C.

A Stone Age Adventure—PATHE.—This is one of the funniest cartoon comedies ever made. The action takes place in the prehistoric days. Haddam Baad one day scares up a monster, Geewhizzicus, and is forced to flee for his life. More than once he sees his end approaching, but each time Providence intervenes and the race begins over again. Finally a boulder, loosened in the chase, rolls down the hill and settles on the Geewhizzicus' tail. Following an inspiration, Haddam Baad races around and around the big animal, which twists its neck watching him until its head snaps off. On the same reel with "How Swedish Troops Cross a River."

The Gray Friar—(EPISODE TWO, "THE ROMANCE OF ELAINE")—(TWO REELS)—PATHE.—At a masquerade ball given by Elaine a hunt is made by agents of a foreign power to find the torpedo invented by Craig Kennedy. Later, the maid, who is an assistant to Del Mar, secures the torpedo and places it in the tray of Elaine's trunk, though later, unknown to her, another tray is substituted. Del Mar arranges to have the trunk hurled from a speeding train, but is overpowered after he has secured it, and the mysterious gray friar, on searching the trunk, finds no trace of a torpedo. See review, page 30, this issue.

Pathe News No. 49—PATHE NEWS—JUNE 19.—Pupils of Nicholas Senn high school, of Chicago, give gymnastic drill at Federal Park; great damage done by floods in Texas; car strike in Chicago, Ill.; Pathe's American fashions; Mayor Kiel of St. Louis presented with what is said to be the largest U. S. flag ever made; new municipal swimming pool opened in St. Louis; diver dares death in a 100-foot leap into a shallow pool at a local amusement park in St. Louis; water carnival at Milton Boat Club at Milton, Mass.; carelessness of a workman who knocked the ashes from his pipe in the stock room causes a disastrous fire in a factory at Penn Yann, N. Y.; war pictures showing siege guns captured from Germans by French; heavy shell, costing over $5,000, is directed over hill top against an invisible enemy eight miles away in the mountains Alsace.

The Pomp of Earth—(THREE REELS)—PATHE—Ninth in the "Who Pays?" series, featuring Ruth Roland and Henry King. The bank clerk, serving a long term of imprisonment, is enraged when he sees John Cole, the man who stole the money from the bank, released after serving a short sentence. Cole goes to a distant city and under the name of Richard Walker buys a beautiful residence. Edith Hilton refuses to marry Hugh Keen, because he is not wealthy. In an endeavor to make money by speculation, he misappropriates funds with which he is entrusted as treasurer of a club. The clerk escapes from prison. He learns where Cole is living, enters his house during the dinner at which his engagement to Edith is announced, and murders him. Keen receives a request from the club for an accounting, and, having lost all the money in speculation, commits suicide.

The Tomboy—(TWO REELS)—PATHE-BALBOA.—Featuring Jackie Saunders and Henry King. While returning from the bank with the pay roll, the superintendent of the mine is held up and made a prisoner in a deserted cabin. The crooks play cards for the loot. The mine owner's daughter decides to play tomboy, and dressed in a suit of her brother's clothes, she goes for an auto ride. She loses control of the car and wrecks it. In looking for assistance, the girl comes upon the cabin where her sweetheart is being held a prisoner, and after an exciting chase she reaches a telephone, where she calls for help. The crooks are caught and the money returned to the superintendent, who manifests his thanks to his fair rescuer. T. C. K.

When Charlie Was a Boy—PATHE.—Juvenile comedy. Charlie goes to a motion picture show, and that night dreams he is Charlie Chaplin. The dream is a very clever and amusing imitation of the famous comedian. T. C. K.

The Goddess—(CHAPTER SIX)—(TWO REELS)—VITAGRAPH.—After saving the destitute family from eviction, Celestia asks them to allow her to live with them. Attracted by the noise from the hall, she goes out and finds a man struggling with his son, who had stolen money from him. Celestia reconciles father and son and tells them that she has come to teach people how to make money more easily and more pleasantly than by stealing. Then she goes to another room, where she persuades the girl, about to leave her old mother, to remain with her and care for her. From there the goddess goes to the room of an old couple without food or money. They tell her that they have a son in California, and she gives them enough money to go to him. Detectives employed by Stilleter learn Celestia's whereabouts and notify the psychologist. The final scene shows the goddess leaving with Nellie for the sweatshop. For further review, see page 1061, last issue. T. C. K.

The Goddess—(TWO REELS)—VITAGRAPH.—Chapter seven. Celestia, accompanied by Nellie, arrives at the sweatshop, and while she is telling the working girls of her plan to reform the world, a fire breaks out in the building. Tommy is attracted to the factory by the fire, and learning from Nellie that Celestia is still in the building, rescues her. The goddess tells Tommy that she cannot marry him until she has reformed the world. Gordon Barclay threatens to disinherit his son unless he gives up Celestia, and later when she tells Tommy of her decision to marry him now and save the world afterward, he informs her that he must first get a job, as he has no money and cannot support her. The manufacturer who brands his films and advertises them in Motography is so sure of their quality that he is willing to stand the full force of possible complaints.

He is making something for which he is proud to be responsible. His trade mark secures for him the increased sales that result from satisfaction and identification. At the same time it secures to the great mass of exhibitors the certainty of quality which the known manufacturer must maintain if he is to continue to be successful.

When you book films, book films that are trademarked and advertised in Motography. The manufacturers of such films stand behind them. Your satisfaction is vital to the continued success of the trade-marked advertised films.

Trade marks and advertising in Motography are the two greatest servants in the film business today. Their whole tendency is to raise qualities and standardize them while reducing prices and stabilizing them.

World

Fine Feathers—(Five Reels)—World. Janet Beecher and David Powell are featured in this adaptation of Eugene Walter's famous play, the big thrill of which comes in the bursting of a dam, resulting in a spectacular flood. Bob Reynolds and his wife are living happily in a little cottage on Staten Island. The $25 a week that Bob earns does not give his wife many "fine feathers." When John Brand, in charge of the construction of the Pecos dam, offers Bob a huge sum of money to substitute an inferior quality of cement for a more expensive variety, Bob refuses and Brand then goes to Jane, Bob's wife, for help. The woman persuades her husband to accept the offer, and Brand urges Bob to invest the money in some stocks. Later the market shifts and Bob loses everything. On the day of his financial ruin he hears the dam has burst owing to the poor quality of the cement used. The suicide of Brand saves Bob from the consequences of his dishonesty, and he and Janet begin life anew, determined to live without "fine feathers."

The Moonstone—(Five Reels).—Eugene O'Brien featured in this adaptation of the story of the same name by Wilkie Collins. At the beginning of the story we are shown the priest at the temple pronouncing a curse upon a huge stone which is placed in the forehead of an idol. If it is stolen, the bearer will suffer continuous misfortune. An Englishman steals the jewel and is pursued by three priests of the temple, and he drowns in his own bathtub. Franklin Blake, a friend of the Englishman, obtains possession of the stone, which he gives to Rachel, his fiancee. The stone disappears and the maid finally commits suicide after hiding a paint-stained something in a can which she sinks. She writes a note to Blake which tells him that she had killed herself because she loved him and thought him guilty of the theft. It is discovered that Blake had been drugged one night and had undoubtedly walked while under the influence of the potion and stolen the jewel. After much trouble the stone is replaced in the idol's forehead and a ring is placed by Blake on his fiancee's finger.

Rafferty at the Hotel de Rest—All-Celtic.—These "Peaceful Rafferty" comedies, written by Charles C. O'Hara and produced by J. A. Fitzgerald, combine humorous character portrayal with interesting narrative in making pictures that are clean, clever and funny. In this release Rafferty is seen at the Hotel de Rest, where he was sent by his doctor to recuperate. He falls in love with one of the guests, a pretty girl, but so, also, do his two companions. The embarrassment into which their romancing leads them causes the lovesick trio to leave the hotel. C. R. C.

Rafferty Goes to Coney Island—All-Celtic.—This picture, while complete in itself, comes as a sequel to "Rafferty at the Hotel de Rest." Rafferty learns that his Hotel de Rest beauty has gone to Coney Island, so he follows. After a harrowing auto ride, his two rivals succeed in reaching the amusement park, and set out in pursuit of Rafferty. They find him and the girl, but do not enjoy the latter's company for long, as she deserts the trio for a handsome young man with whom she becomes acquainted.

The Governor's Boss—(Five Reels)—Governor's Boss Film Company.—Featuring ex-Governor William Sulzer. The governor refuses to appoint the boss' man to an important office. The boss and his political lieutenant conspire to have the governor removed. On this framed-up evidence the governor is brought to trial and impeached.

Beware the Dog—(One Reel)—World Comedy Stars.—Jeff d'Angelis featured as Geoffrey Ladd, who finds himself penniless on the eve of his wedding and is consequently about to take his own life when restrained by Doctor Mullen, a scientist with a patent medicine cure for hydrophobia. Mullen offers Ladd $100,000 if he will allow himself to be bitten by a dog inoculated with hydrophobia and then dosed with medicine. Ladd agrees and then discovers that a mine in which he has been interested has developed a fortune for him and a ship has arrived bearing an enormous treasure for him, so that with everything to live for he is still in danger of death. When Ladd is half insane with fright, the doctor turns up, declares the serum has proven a failure, and Ladd, upon returning the doctor's $100,000, is once more a free agent.

Something Just as Good—(One Reel)—World Comedy Stars.—Lionel Armstrong, a blacksmith, loves Nellie Sunshine, the village beauty, but the girl is fascinated by Percy Saddlenose, proprietor of the village drug store and soda fountain. Realizing his case is desperate, Lionel, to win Nellie back, invests in an ex-lion tamer's check suit, with which is thrown in a dollar watch that simply dazzles Nellie. Percy, realizing all is lost unless he can quickly win Nellie back, decides to purchase a Ford, and while intoxicated with soda water converts Lionel's dollar watch into an infernal machine which blows up just as Percy drives away with Nellie. Lionel mounts his knife grinding apparatus, which his mother tells him is "a better machine than Percy's," and eventually overtakes the soda water fiend, and wins back the infatuated maiden, while Percy, the demon druggist, is left to a life of blighted bachelorhood.

The Press Agent Says—

That John Steppling, who plays the part of Judge Clarke in the American-Mutual release, "The Decision," recently had an embarrassing experience while rehearsing a scene in that two-reel drama. Word somehow got around that a man who had drunk too much (as Steppling is supposed to have done in the story) was coming out of a club to walk across the square, to the Santa Barbara court house. A crowd gathered, and when Steppling appeared began to hoot and yell and run at his heels. Then the mob saw the camera, and so many members of it wanted to get their picture taken at once that it was impossible to see Steppling, which, of course, spoiled the effect.

Convention Arrangements are Completed

OTHER IMPORTANT NEWS OF THE WEEK

ARRANGEMENTS for the fifth national convention of the M. P. E. L. of A. are complete. President Pearce and his official family, comprising the national executive board, will meet in San Francisco, Monday, July 12, at 2 p. m. The convention will open informally Monday night at 8 p. m., when the exposition salon and the three miniature theaters are thrown open.

The demands for floor space have been unusually heavy, and seldom has such an elaborate display of everything pertaining to the motion picture business been arranged. The booths and the entire exposition salon are nicely decorated and present a very pleasing appearance. The miniature theaters are complete in every detail, being equipped with the best in screens, projection machines, and theater chairs.

The program for the week as now arranged is as follows:

TUESDAY, JULY 13

10:00 A. M.—Formal opening of convention. Addresses of welcome by Governor Johnson of California and Mayor Rolph of San Francisco, followed by address of National President Pearce. Appointment of committees. Adjournment at 12:30.

2 P. M.—Assemble in exposition salon to view exhibits and feature pictures. The various committees will meet in committee rooms at the same hour.

8 P. M. TO 11 P. M.—Special program in exposition salon; music and interesting demonstrations.

WEDNESDAY, JULY 14

10:00 A. M.—Business session in convention hall, including address by W. W. Hodkinson, president Paramount Pictures Corporation.

2 P. M. TO 4 P. M.—Special exercises, exposition salon.

4 P. M. TO 6:30 P. M.—Sightseeing trip.

8 P. M.—Special entertainment exposition salon, including exhibition fancy dancing by well known picture players.

THURSDAY, JULY 15

10 A. M.—Business session, address by D. W. Griffith, subject, "The Rise and Fall of Free Speech and Personal Liberty in America." Mr. Griffith's experience on censorship in connection with the "Birth of a Nation" qualifies him to speak with authority on this subject. The national officers for the ensuing year will be elected at this session.

1:30 P. M.—Assemble at auditorium for visit to the Panama-Pacific International Exposition. This is official Motion Picture Day at the Exposition, and a special program has been arranged. The entire afternoon and evening will be spent at the Exposition. Probably the most sensational feature of the Exposition program will be furnished by Art Smith, famous aviator, who will ascend at night and write the word "Movie" with a trail of fire in the sky.

FRIDAY, JULY 16

10:00 A. M.—Business session, including addresses by P. A. Powers and Col. W. N. Selig.

1 P. M.—Automobile parade of screen favorites who will participate in the grand ball that night; followed by luncheon at the Portola-Louvre.

3 P. M.—Reception of picture players in exposition salon.

9 P. M.—Grand ball. The presence of 40 of the most prominent picture players from the Pacific Coast studios has been arranged for this affair. A band of 50 pieces will furnish the music. Governor Johnson and Mayor Rolph will lead the grand march, and altogether this will be the greatest ball in the history of the motion picture business.

The convention closes formally with the grand ball Friday night. However, Saturday, July 17, is Liberty Bell day, and no doubt most of the visitors will want to remain for the special program being arranged at the Panama-Pacific International Exposition on this day. The picture players will be guests of the Exhibitors' League at the Exposition that day.

The players will return to Los Angeles Sunday morning. Special trains will be arranged for them, also for all of those attending the convention who plan to make the trip to Los Angeles to visit the wonderful motion picture studios. Elaborate arrangements are being made for the entertainment of the visitors, including a luncheon and dance at the Selig Zoo.

The convention committee requests visiting exhibitors to attend the business sessions and spend the afternoons and evenings in the exposition salon at all times when special features are not advertised, as ample opportunities for visiting the Panama-Pacific Exposition are afforded Thursday and Saturday. Admission tickets at special prices have been secured to all of the leading attractions on the "Joy Zone" for Thursday.

Hotel Manx and the Clift hotel are the official hotels. Special arrangements have been made for accommodating visiting exhibitors. The office of the convention committee and local reception committee will be on the ground floor, to the right of the main entrance of the Civic Auditorium. If special hotel accommodations, information or service of any kind is desired, visitors should go direct to the Auditorium on arrival in San Francisco.

Eastman Kodak Company Again Sued

Suit was brought against the Eastman Kodak Company by the Celluloid Company, which has a large factory in Newark and offices in New York, for $5,000,000.00, in the United States District Court of New Jersey on Tuesday, June 22, the claim being made that the Eastman Kodak Company has wilfully infringed patents for the manufacture of rolls of motion picture film, owned by the Celluloid Company.

The charge is made that the defendants obtained the knowledge of the construction of the device used for the manufacture of rolls of motion picture film by treacherous methods, and despite the fact that the most careful guard was kept over the room in which the apparatus was installed in the plaintiff's plant.

Since the penalty for "wilfully" infringing patents entitles the plaintiff to triple damages and costs, the suit really involves $15,000,000.00, instead of $5,000,000.00, the sum mentioned in the complaint, and which is based upon an assertion that the annual profits accruing to the Eastman Kodak Company from the manufacture of these films are stated to be anywhere from $3,000,000.00 to $5,000,000.00.

Marshall C. Lefferts, president of the Celluloid Company, and Jacob H. Stevens, consulting chemist of the company, claim to be the inventors of the machine and to have aided the Reverend Hannibal Goodwin, rector of the House of Prayer in Newark, the originator of sensitized film, when he was working on his first crude process. Lefferts and Stevens then hit upon a plan to facilitate the making of films by using a pyroxolin solution that could be poured over metal and dried, forming a glass-like surface. Then they built a machine with a hopper from which was poured the liquid celluloid and this machine through permitting the making of films of endless length is the one which the plaintiffs allege has been infringed by the Eastman Kodak Company.

Next Griffith Production

D. W. Griffith, the master producer, has just decided upon his next multiple-reel feature to follow "The Birth of a Nation." Its title is to be "The Mother and the Law." He is now at the Griffith headquarters, the Reliance-Majestic studios in Hollywood, Los Angeles, California. He is in the midst of preparations for the filming of "The Mother and the Law."

The plot and the theme other than as indicated in the title have not been announced, but will be made known at the proper time. Mr. Griffith has, however, selected his cast. Prominent among the Griffith players who are to appear before the camera in "The Mother and the Law" are Mae Marsh, the Griffith actress who will be remembered as Florence Cameron in "The Birth of a Nation"; Robert Harron, who has appeared in the Griffith features, "The Battle of the Sexes," "Judith of Bethula," "The Escape," "The Avenged Conscience" and "Home Sweet Home"; Miriam Cooper, who has a prominent role in "The Birth of a Nation"; Mary Alden, remembered for the performance of the mulatto in "The Birth of a Nation," and as the mother in "The Battle of the Sexes"; Ralph Lewis, the "Stoneman" in "The Birth of a Nation," and Walter Long, the "Gus" in "The Birth of a Nation."

Mr. Griffith is determined that "The Mother and the Law" shall maintain the same high standing of "The Birth of a Nation," which is playing to two-dollar prices in some of the principal cities of the country.

Aitken Issues Statement

In confirmation of his retirement as president of the Mutual Film Corporation, along with Messrs. Baumann and Kessel of that company, H. E. Aitken gave out the following statement last week:

"In acceding to the new directors of the Mutual, I retire from the company with a feeling of reluctance due entirely to the many fine associations I have enjoyed with the controlling influences there and with the exhibitors who have dealt with the organization.

"It is also a pleasure to say that these arrangements were consummated with the friendliest feeling existing between the different parties concerned.

"In a broader sense I am very glad to be free. This move gives me complete control of my time to co-operate with Messrs. Baumann and Kessel in enlarging upon plans for the new Griffith-Ince-Sennett combination which has just been formed. We will begin activities at once upon the new scheme of bringing out a series of $2 motion picture programs of film spectacles and comedies directed by these well-known producers. Up to date we have contracted for the services on the film of such stars as De Wolf Hopper, Weber and Fields, Douglas Fairbanks, Raymond Hitchcock, Eddie Foy and the seven little Foys, Helen Ware, Bert Clarke, Hale Hamilton, Frank Keenan, Jane Grey, Maurice Farqua, George Beban, Henry Woodruff, H. B. Warner, Willard Mack, Bessie Barriscale, Orrin Johnson, Dustin Farnum, Julia Dean, Kathryn Kaelred and W. S. Hart. We are not at liberty to announce other names, but I can say that within the near future we will be able to add to this list other names of many of the greatest stars connected with the current drama. It is also our intention to build up the finest stock company for film work that has been assembled in this country."

Second Quarter of V. L. S. E. Program

V. L. S. E., Inc., in announcing its list of releases for the second quarterly period, beginning with August 2, and ending November 15, makes public a list of features, that in variety cover every phase of dramatic art and embody themes of every conceivable human emotion.

In the sixteen features that will come into screen evidence on the "Big Four" program in the next three months, the principal characters will be portrayed by an aggregation of stars recruited from the foremost ranks of the stage, and the heights of motion picture popularity.

Among the stars who will appear on this exceptionally strong program of picture plays, are Marie Dressler, Robert Edeson, Edith Storey, Joseph Kilgour, Virginia Pierson, Myrtle Gonzalez, William Duncan, Dorothy Bernard, George Soule Spencer, Grace Darmond, Harry Mestayer, Antonio Moreno, June Keith, Johnny Slavin, Beatrice Morgan and Octavia Handworth, supplemented by a host of players popular alike to dramatic audiences and picture play patrons.

August 2, Lubin will release "The District Attorney," adapted from the successful play of the same name, written by Charles Kleine and Harrison Grey Fiske. Dainty Dorothy Bernard and George Soule Spencer assume the leading roles, supported by a strong and evenly balanced cast of well-known Lubin players.

"The Chalice of Courage," produced by the Vitagraph company, from Rev. Cyrus Townsend Brady's novel, was made by the Western Vitagraph players. Myrtle Gonzalez and William Duncan portray the leading characters.

"A Bunch of Keys," Essanay's contribution for August 16, is the film version of Charles Hoyt's successful stage comedy. June Keith and Johnny Slavin will be seen in the leading parts.

"The House of a Thousand Candles," from Meredith Nicholson's novel, will be presented by the Selig company on August 23, with Grace Darmond and Harry Mestayer presenting the principal characters.

"Tillie's Tomato Surprise," in which the inimitable Marie Dressler is expected to repeat the success she made upon the occasion of ther first film appearance, will be offered by the Lubin company on August 30.

In addition to these five big productions which will be released the first month of the second quarter of the V. L. S. E. program, Vitagraph will offer "Mortmain," with Robert Edeson, on September 6, "The Dust of Egypt," with Edith Storey and Antonio Moreno, on October 4, and "The Writing On the Wall," with Joseph Kilgour and Virginia Pierson, November 1.

The Essanay Company will present "The Man Trail," September 13, from the story by Henry Oyens, author of "The Misleading Lady." On October 11, "In the Palace of the King," and on November 8, a screen version of the famous stage success, "The Tin Soldier."

The Selig Company will offer "The Circular Staircase," on September 20; "Whom the Gods Would Destroy," on October 18, and "The Ne'er-do-Well," on November 15.

The Lubin Company will contribute an adaptation of the remarkable dramatic success, "The Great Ruby," on September 27, and on October 25, a film adaptation of the recent dramatic success, "The Great Divide."

Mrs. Fiske in "Vanity Fair"

The Edison company has just made arrangements with Mrs. Fiske to star in one of the most important films of the year, a picturization of the immortal "Vanity Fair," which will be awaited with the keenest interest by persons of literary and artistic taste. Through the broader treatment allowed in the photo drama, "Vanity Fair" will be more of the book picturized than was or could be the theatrical version, and the long preparation for its authentic presentation vouches for its being one of the most pretentious films ever made by the Edison company. Becky is perhaps associated more prominently with Mrs. Fiske's name and fame than any other in her large gallery of dramatic portraits. Since she originated the character about fifteen years ago, its revival has been demanded again and again, until it has become one of the most familiar figures of the American theater.

Eugene Newland.

Langdon Mitchell made the dramatization used by Mrs. Fiske. For the screen, however, Mr. Mitchell's play will not be used, a completely new scenario having been written by Sumner Williams. The entire range of Becky's lively and varied experiences will be followed, introduced by a prologue which will show Thackeray, in all verity, in his study starting to write the novel.

The Edison company has chosen for the producer of this play Director Eugene Nowland, who, besides his success in the photoplay field, is peculiarly fitted to the task, as he was for more than twelve years resident in England and traveled throughout Europe as a violin virtuoso as the featured pupil of Ysaye. A great lover of Thackeray and "Vanity Fair," Mr. Nowland has for many years been collecting old prints, actual letters of the time and precious bits that bear on the story, until he now has twenty-four huge portfolios as an auxiliary source of authoritative information. Mr. Nowland promises an unusual treatment in the photoplay, as he plans, he says, to develop the story much as a musical theme is developed, also making particular use of suggestion rather than bare depiction to "get over" the indefinable atmosphere of the times. For several months he has been in pursuit of players of not alone proven ability, but ones true to the types they will impersonate. The wide interest taken by literary people in this production has prompted the offer of many of the finest estates in the country for the proper "atmosphere." A number of the society people of New York and Boston will figure in the brilliant ball scenes, the historical Duchess of Richmond's ball at Brussels and that at Gaunt House.

Leonie Flugrath, the child star of the stage "The Poor Little Rich Girl," will be Becky as a little girl, the film treatment being that of a precious old soul in a young body. Philip Quinn, especially engaged also, will be Napoleon, he having been the twenty-first player resembling Napoleon who was filmed and tested for characteristics. Mr. Quinn has played Napoleon on the stage more than any other character. "Amelia," who has been long sought, is as yet unchosen. The Marquis of Steyne is left to George Wright of "Within the Law" and "Bought and Paid For," who has made excellent progress as a film character man. Rawdon Crawley will be Bigelow Cooper; Joseph Sedley, William Wadsworth; Dobbin, Frank McGlynn; Lady Steyne, Helen Strickland; Mr. Sedley, Charles Sutton; Mrs. O'Dowd, Jessie Stevens; Major O'Dowd, John Sturgeon; Becky's father, Yale Benner.

Last Call for Selig Special

All is in readiness for the seventeen days' tour of the West and of California aboard the Selig Exposition Flyer. The train of standard Pullmans, diner and combination baggage car and observation car, will leave Chicago, Ill., from the Chicago & Northwestern railroad station, at 11 o'clock Thursday morning, July 8.

The tour is an assured success. Motion picture exhibitors, newspapermen, scenario writers and writers of fiction, together with their relatives and friends, have booked reservations.

It has been arranged that special Pullmans be given over to the comfort of the exhibitors and their families, the newspapermen, and the writers. One car for the scenario writers has been completely filled, as has the special coach devoted to the comfort of the newspapermen and their friends. However, there will be room enough for all. The Selig Company has chartered extra coaches and another special train may be necessary. The motion picture exhibitors and their friends will be well cared for and special coaches will be named in their honor.

Aboard the Selig Special a daily newspaper will be published, which will give all the news, day by day, of the tour, and the most versatile newspaper men in the United States are to become reporters. A motion picture scenario is being prepared by Gilson Willets, the well known writer, and scenes called for in this play, to be later released by the Selig Company, will be taken in the various cities visited.

The civic federations of all the large cities on the itinerary have arranged special receptions and entertainments, the latest being the Business Men's Association of Colorado Springs. There is yet time to take advantage of the tour which costs only $128 and includes even hotel accommodations.

Metro Day at World's Fair

What constitutes the most important recognition of motion pictures and motion picture stars is, without a doubt, the announcement this week from the administration committee of the Panama-Pacific Exposition at San Francisco, of Francis X. Bushman Day, July 15, with the noted star and his leading woman, Marguerite Snow, as the special guests of honor, with special functions and awards in honor of the event.

The following telegram from Sol Lesser, California representative of the Metro Pictures Corporation, outlines the affair:

Richard A. Rowland,
Metro Square, 42nd street and Broadway, New York City.

Have received notice from Exposition Committee July 15 to be Metro day with Bushman and Snow guests of honor. Entire fair given over to us for day. Special award of gold medal to Bushman and Snow, following enactment of silent dramatic piece in front of Administration building. Entire evening devoted to fireworks display and Bushman's likeness to be burned in set piece fifty feet high. Metro will be luncheon hosts to all photoplayers and exhibitors attending. Am forwarding official document from Exposition officials.

Sol L. Lesser.

Harry Reichenbach of the Metro forces will leave New York for San Francisco July 2. He will be accompanied by Mrs. Reichenbach and a number of Metro stars and will take with him the artistic display Metro will use at the motion picture convention.

Francis X. Bushman, who is now at work at the Quality-Metro studio, Los Angeles, will arrive at San Francisco about July 10, and when he gets off the train he will be the most surprised man in the world for the Metro Company, appreciating the deep honor paid its leading star, will plaster the coast cities with twenty-four sheet pictorial paper announcing July 15 as Bushman Day and inviting the people to witness the enactment of a thrilling silent drama.

Mr. Bushman and Miss Snow will be accompanied to San Francisco by Willard Bauman, the director, Fred J. Balshofer and Charles Feature Abrams.

Thanhouser Company Enlarged

The past week sees Edwin Thanhouser, the New Rochelle film wizard, out on a talent expedition once more. His stock company now contains a dozen or so of the brightest lights from Broadway, but that does not suffice. After adding to his staff of directors Edgar Jones, from Lubin, and Clement Easton, from the Universal, he now announces a new ingenue, Grace De Carlton, and Julia Blanc, William Morris and Reginald Barlow.

Miss De Carlton is working with Director Easton. She is a Bostonian, having played there in the John Craig and Lindsey Morrison stocks and toured with Vaughn Glaser. She is but little more than a child, but is a natural actress who will quickly verify Mr. Thanhouser's judgment of her possibilities. Her beauty is of the sweetly simple type, for she takes pride in being a "just plain girl." Julia Blanc is a character actress of note. Among her engagements are numbered the role of the witch in the play of that name, under Winthrop Ames. She did characters with Marie Dressler in "The Mix-Up," in "The Conspiracy" for Frohman, the "Dawn of a Tomorrow" and other big productions. Her art knows no limitations of dialect, nationality or make-up.

William Morris is one of the foremost leading men of the stage. He will be signally remembered for his work in "The Concert" under Belasco, "The Family Cupboard" and "Little Miss Brown" for Brady, and "He Comes Up Smiling" for Al H. Woods. Mr. Morris is a powerful type of leading man, and his joining the New Rochelle forces means some markedly striking releases, for he has been most successful in creating parts which have remained as standard interpretations. Stock actors both here and abroad are fond of referring to the "William Morris version" of leading parts.

Reginald Barlow has not played off Broadway in seven years, and that certainly is a theatrical criterion. For three years in succession he was at the New Theater with Winthrop Ames and leading parts in such plays as "Prunella," "The Yellow Jacket" and "The Devil" underrate his bag of tricks.

Clifton Crawford with Pathe

Another famous Broadway favorite has cast his lot with moving pictures. Donald Mackenzie announces that he has signed Clifton Crawford to play the lead in "The Galloper," the great Broadway success of Richard Harding Davis, which is now being produced for Pathe at their Jersey City studios. Melville Stewart, who is now playing in the "Follies of 1915," will support Mr. Crawford. The rest of the cast is also decidedly strong.

Clifton Crawford.

Mr. Crawford held off for a long time before consenting to sign up for the silent drama, and it was the tempting contract offered by Mr. Mackenzie which caused him to decide to enter the field.

Born of actor parents in Edinburgh, Scotland, Mr. Crawford took up the stage at an early age, and after appearing in small parts for some time, became a great favorite in the English music halls. Later he came to America and played in vaudeville, where he always appeared as a head-liner. Later he appeared in such noteworthy successes as "The Peasant Girl," "The Quaker Girl," and "The Three Twins." After starring for three seasons in the last mentioned production, he made a tour of the world, and thereby earned the sobriquet of "the man who put a belt of smiles around the world."

Likes Minusa Screen

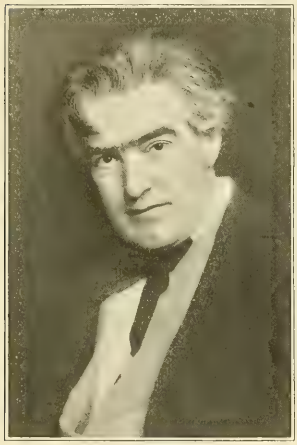
H. C. Winters, proprietor of the Strand theater, at Akron, Ohio, has had the Theater Specialty Manufacturing Company of Cleveland make a survey of his theater for the installation of a new projection screen. Mr. Winters says the screen will be a Minusa Gold Fibre, and that it will be the fourth screen built after the Anderson method that he has used.

"Peer Gynt" with Cyril Maude

At the Los Angeles studios of the Oliver Morosco Photoplay Company work on this concern's latest screen production, "Peer Gynt," with the well-known actor-manager, Cyril Maude, is rapidly progressing, and it is readily expected that this release will present the largest subject yet put out by the Morosco film forces.

Actors dressing aboard the deep sea schooner especially chartered for the Morosco filmization of "Peer Gynt."

In addition to the unusually large sets which are being prepared for the interior scenes of this play, an exceptional cast of large proportion and including such able players as Herbert Standing, William Desmond, Myrtle Stedman, Charles Ruggles and many others, together with a most generous supply of extras, has been selected to support Mr. Maude. Inasmuch as the subject embraces the world wanderings of a poet-souled adventurer, typical scenes of every clime and people will be presented.



"Peer Gynt" is an adaptation from the famous dramatic poem by Henrik Ibsen, published in 1867. In February, 1876, the first stage presentation of this subject was made, with Edward Grieg's famous incidental music, at the Christiania theater, Christiania, Norway, where, after having played thirty-seven times, it was burned out in a stage fire. The production was revived in 1892 and met with big success.

Anitra greets Peer Gynt in a scene from Morosco's "Peer Gynt."

Tyrone Power

Tyrone Power, the distinguished actor, may hereafter devote his entire artistic endeavor to motion picture work. "I am of the opinion," said Mr. Power, whom William Winter dubbed "one of America's greatest actors," "that the animated screen presents as great if not greater possibilities for histrionic art than the legitimate stage. The more I see of motion picture work the more infatuated I become. Motion pictures are a power for uplift and the fact that Colonel William N. Selig, president of the Selig Polyscope Company, is known for his artistic ideals and for his policy of sparing no expense in the production of worthy pictures, makes my affiliation with the Selig company all that can be desired in opportunity."

Tyrone Power.

Mr. and Mrs. Tyrone Power and infant son are now living in Los Angeles, California, where Mr. Power is engaged in enacting an important role in the forthcoming Selig Red Seal spectacular production "Mizpah" written by Ella Wheeler Wilcox. Miss Kathlyn Williams and an all-star cast will also be seen in this wonderful production.

Chicago Sees "The Ordeal"

On Wednesday, June 9, Chicago exhibitors and representatives of the trade press were given their first chance to see the much discussed and severely criticized five-reel Life Photo production "The Ordeal," which was shown at the Ziegfeld theater on that day.

The production is, from a photographic standpoint, one of the best that has ever been screened. In several of the scenes some of the characters appear almost stereoscopic, so perfect is the photography, while the tinting and toning of the film throughout its entire five reels is worthy of special comment.

Harry Spingler has the male lead and opposite him appears Anna Laughlin in the role of his sweetheart. Both are splendidly cast and do noteworthy work, while the actors appearing as Spingler's father, mother and sister, as well as the players interpreting the roles of the general who invades the home of Spingler, and the one who betrays him to the enemy, are also splendid types and highly dramatic in the more important scenes.

Frankly, MOTOGRAPHY's reviewer could see nothing objectionable in the film, for not a single subtitle in the entire production so much as mentions the nationality of the opposing armies, and the uniforms are such that though they vaguely indicate French and German forces there is not enough similarity to these uniforms and the real ones worn by the European armies, to indicate that any certain nationality is meant. Still further to relieve the race hatred that might arise, as a result of the production, the story is told purely as a dream and it is made quite clear that all the battle scenes are not realities, but merely a figment of the imagination, so it seems evident that little, if any, racial objection can be made to the film.

New Lubin Pictures

A distinct novelty in the way of photoplays and one which no doubt will attract wide interest, will be the first of a series of made-in-Ireland comedy dramas, featuring Miss Valentine Grant, which will be released by the Lubin Company, July 14. These plays were especially made for the Lubin Company by Sidney Olcott, the greatest of all producers of Irish stories, and were filmed along the rugged cliffs and broken shores of South Kerry and amid the wondrous and picturesque scenery of the Gap of Dunloe and the Lakes of Killarney, so famed in song and story.

The first of the series is "All for Old Ireland," and is a three-reeler. In two of the plays Mr. Olcott himself plays opposite Miss Grant in characters that have made him famous in the past as a delineator of the rollicking, light-hearted, and romantic "gossoon."

Valentine Grant featured in a series of made-in-Ireland pictures made by Lubin.

Miss Grant is charming in her roles. Her pretty and sincere conceptions of the ready-witted "colleen" are delightful, and have brought the little new-comer unbounded compliments from all who have seen the private showing of these films, both here and abroad.

The American Master Organ

Most orchestral instruments of today have two great disadvantages. The first is in having the instrument buried in the orchestra pit, and the second in not having the piano among its musical resources, the mother instrument being the organ. The American Master Organ overcomes these difficulties by an entirely new arrangement of the many instruments necessary for proper musical accompaniment for motion pictures or theatrical performances.

A Kranich & Bach grand piano is used in place of an organ, a simple, single keyboard below the piano's keyboard controlling the pipe organ which, with its assortment of drums, cymbals, etc., can be located on the stage in one section of two, behind it, or, in fact, in any part of the theater. The advantages of such an easily transportable instrument can readily be seen. It can be adapted to the house.

Some theater owners may think it better to split up the box-like structure containing the pipe organ and other accompaniments into two parts, placing one on either side of the stage. Others may want it placed behind the stage, as the Strand has its organ. Still others may see fit to locate it in the ceiling or in the boxes. In any case their needs can be met with little expense and less trouble. These details are of vital importance, no doubt, but the main thing is, "How does the American Master organ sound?" And the inevitable reply, after attending one of the demonstrations is, "Wonderful." Technically, it is a masterpiece, and musically, all that one could wish. It has been demonstrated time after time that good orchestration accompaniment increases the box office value of a motion picture one hundred per cent. This instrument is fully equipped to meet every occasion, and the expressive operation of its numerous accompaniments can be learned in a short while by any pianist.

An American Master Organ.

There are many things original and altogether revolutionary about the American Master Organ Company and the wonderful instrument it opened to the public last week in the demonstrating room at 1446 Broadway, New York. The company comprises some of the best known theater organists in the country, and expert organ builders who have constructed many British cathedral organs and subsequently some of the largest theater organs in the States. Among the organists who figure prominently in the company are Frank R. White, its president, whose experience as a theater organist began with one entire season as organist at the Century theater, where he supplied the music for the Liebler spectacles, "The Daughter of Heaven" and "Joseph and His Brethren"; Augustus C. Ely, secretary and general manager of the company, was for two seasons organist of the Cort theater, New York City; Gottfried H. Federlein, organist of the Ethical Culture Society and of Temple Emmanuel; Dr. Gustave Widor-Ronfort and other musicians of prominence.

A question asked more often than any other by the exhibitors who have visited the demonstration room since it was opened, a week ago, is, "Where are you going to find players?" Upon the answer to this question alone hangs the commercial future of the American Master organ, and consequently upon it depends the interest of this article to the practical reader. The answer is, bring your own pianist, as many have done since the demonstration opened, and he will tell you that the American Master, with all its resources, presents no difficulty to the pianist who can play expressively on the piano.

Will Dunne Veto that Bill?

As Motography goes to press the fate of the Illinois motion picture censorship board, as provided by the Olson bill, rests in the hands of Governor Dunne, who has given no indication of what he proposes to do with it, though midnight of Wednesday, June 30, must tell the tale, since unless Governor Dunne vetoes the bill ere that hour, it automatically becomes a law.

The bill's becoming a law on Thursday, according to Assistant Corporation Counsel Reker of Chicago, will impose a needless and unwholesome tax on the moving picture industry, and a double fee on Chicago exchanges; whereas, if the governor vetoes the bill and it dies, the legislative proponents of the measure say, some eleven hundred down-state cities and villages will be left at the mercy of "unscrupulous" film exchanges in St. Louis, Evansville, Indianapolis and Des Moines, with no opportunity offered for censorship of any description and without even a chance for assistance from the municipal censorship provided for in Chicago.

On Monday, June 29, Governor Dunne held a public hearing, lasting for nearly two hours, with regard to this bill. At one point the issue seemed to turn upon whether the state board could be selfsustaining or not. Major M. L. C. Funkhouser of the Chicago police department was present with statistics to show that there had been an annual shortage of between $7,000 and $9,000 in Chicago, although 26,000 permits had been granted. He asserted that the state, in attempting to censor films used all over the state, would have to employ at least as large a force as is now employed in Chicago, and probably larger.

Secretary of State Stevenson, who is a strong advocate of state censorship, replied to the effect that the fee provided for the state censorship is double that of the Chicago fee and that the Ohio state board, with approximately the same kind of a law behind it as that in Illinois, is self-sustaining.

Congressman Graham, representing several moving picture manufacturers and a number of large exhibitors, objected to the bill on the ground of "public policy."

Assistant Corporation Counsel Reker of Chicago insisted the bill was bad, because it was not as closely drawn as the Chicago ordinance, which had passed a court test and establishes a stronger censorship than the Olson bill. The Selig and Essanay Companies were represented by other individuals, who also objected to the passage of the bill, "because of the time that would be lost in submitting films to a state censor." Secretary of State Stevenson replied to the objectors by asserting that an office of the state censorship board would be established in Chicago, and that there was no reason why the state board, once they became accustomed to their tasks, could not handle the films with the same rapidity as does the Chicago board.

Up until noon Wednesday the bill was still in Governor Dunne's office, unsigned, and rumors of every sort were prevalent in Chicago, some to the effect that the governor had pledged himself to veto it and others emphatically denying this and asserting that the governor had told intimate friends he would sign the bill at a late hour Wednesday night.

Stands for Better Stories

"When motion picture manufacturers stop making their product out of the literary by-product, I think there will be better pictures—better in plot, better in treatment, better in photography, better in acting, better in every sense of the word. The film industry is large, rich and brainy enough — or should be—to encourage original stories written solely for the screen. The industry should not be content to make its product out of the dormant qualities in some accidentally popular novel, play or sensation." In such wise did W. E. (Edgar) Shallenberger, vice-president of the Thanhouser Syndicate Corporation and heavy stockholder in Thanhouser, Mutual, American and other motion picture enterprises, phrase his belief as to the trend in photoplay production. Edgar Shallenberger was born in Lancaster, Ohio, about thirty-four years ago. Lancaster was the birthplace, too, of Charles J. Hite, and the two men, destined to become powers in the film industry, were boyhood companions in the Ohio city. When Mr. Hite came to Chicago to embark in the then new motion picture business, he found Mr. Shallenberger established in his profession and ready to lend an alert ear and progressive mind toward new projects. The result was the formation of the C. J. Hite Film Exchange, which later became the H. & H. Film Exchange; and this, in turn, one of the two Mutual branches in Chicago. Thereafter Edgar Shallenberger became a constantly larger owner of motion picture industrial stock. He secured several theaters and invested large sums in the Thanhouser, American and Mutual organizations. When the Thanhouser plant in New Rochelle was secured it was to a great extent Edgar Shallenberger who made its acquisition possible.

W. E. Shallenberger.

"I do not want to work along the lines that so many manufacturers now are working," he said recently to a Motography representative. "I have a very abiding respect and liking for the film industry. I want it to be what I think it ought to be, the public's mainstay for amusement and education. To that end we must give the people a product that is turned out exclusively for them—exclusively from start to finish. There should be no general transplanting of a book idea or a spoken-stage play idea into a motion picture. We shall have to have scenarios designed solely for picture work, written by the best authors in the country.

"These men, many of them, get from $500 to $2,000 for a short story. We must find the way to pay them their prices for picture scenarios. The greatest director and acting cast in the world cannot make a good picture out of a bad story. And illiterate men, writers with a modicum of experience in life but a maximum of self-esteem, are not the class of men upon whom we may depend for the literary future of our business. It is a comparatively easy matter to learn the technique of photoplay construction. If we work the right way, if we give the best authors of the country a square deal, we shall interest them in the film industry and get their best product."

When asked for a statement on the election of Mutual Film Corporation officers, Mr. Shallenberger said:

"Mr. Freuler brings to the Mutual a wealth of experience in the three collateral branches of the industry—distribution, manufacture and exhibition. He knows at first hand the details of all these ends of the business. Mr. Freuler has made a tremendous success of all his various ventures, and I feel certain that in his new capacity he will carry the Mutual Film Corporation along to great successes. He is a man of clean ideas and high ideals; he insists on clean pictures; and he is wrapped up, heart and soul, in the establishment of the film business on a firm industrial footing.

"It is apparent to all that many changes, some vital and some merely incidental, shortly will occur in the film industry in the United States. These changes will affect, particularly, the manufacture and distribution of pictures. Mr. Freuler is singularly well fitted to be at the head of the Mutual in this transitional period of the business."

Rothapfel Tendered Dinner

Samuel Rothapfel, head of the Rialto theater of New York City, now in the course of construction, and former manager of the Strand, was tendered a dinner at the Hotel Astor in New York on Thursday evening, June 24, by some thirty of the leading figures in the motion picture industry.

During the course of the dinner, Mr. Rothapfel was presented with a beautiful hand-engrossed album containing an outline of his varied career and the autographs of all those present.

In accepting the gift and the tributes that were paid him by the various speakers, Mr. Rothapfel delivered one of the most optimistic addresses regarding the field of motion pictures and the opportunities the business offers that has ever been heard, in the course of which he predicted that a five dollar motion picture show would be a thing of the near future, when such a genius as G. W. Griffith and those who are to follow in his wake have reached the heights of their powers.

Mr. Rothapfel declared that with improvements in cameras and lens making, as well as lighting and projection, will come the application of the motior picture to the curriculum of colleges and schools, and its intelligent application he believes will cut the college course from four years to three and, possibly, even to two. Eventually he believes pictures will supersede entirely the old method of study from books and illustrations alone, and prophesies that there will come a time when a moving picture library will be a part of every home and there will be established circulating libraries of film.

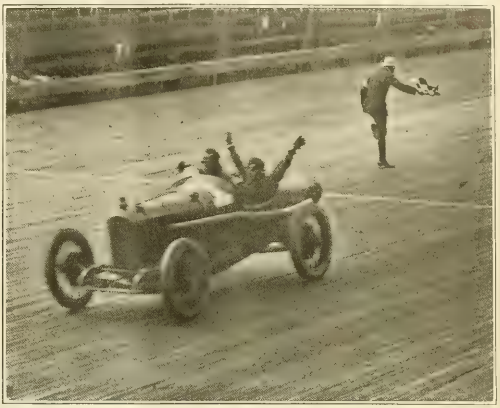
W. Stephen Bush acted as toastmaster during the evening, and introduced such speakers as Daniel Frohman, Charles Baumann, Samuel Goldfish, Lewis Selznick, William Fox, Edwin Thanhouser, Crawford Livingston, Walter Irwin, Paul Cromelin, George Kahn, Jacob Binder, Carl Pierce, Fred Thomson, Jules Brulatour, J. D. Williams, W. H. Johnston, Frank Sniffen and W. A. Northan.

Those who attended the dinner were Messrs. Carl Anderson of the Metro Company; Charles O. Baumann, New York Motion Picture Company; Jacob W. Binder, National Board of Censors; Jules E. Brulatour, Peerless studios; Briton N. Busch, treasurer of the World Film Corporation; Stephen W. Bush of the Moving Picture World; Paul Cromelin, London Film Company; William Fox, Daniel Frohman, Famous Players Film Company; Samuel Goldfish, Lasky Company; Walter W. Irwin of the V. L. S. E. Company; W. H. Johnston, Motion Picture News; Felix Kahn of Kuhn, Loeb & Co., bankers; Adam Kessel, New York Motion Picture Company; Charles Kessel, New York Motion Picture Company; George Kann, Universal Film Company; Crawford Livingston, banker; Harry Musgrove of Australia; W. Arthur Northam of the London Film Company of London; Carl H. Pierce, Bosworth Company; Lewis J. Selznick of the World Film Company; Winfield R. Sheehan, the Fox Company; Frank D. Sniffen, representing W. W. Hodkinson, of the Paramount Company; Edwin Thanhouser, Thanhouser Company; James D. Williams of the World Film Corporation; Jacob Wilk, World Film Corporation, and Frederick Thomson, representing the motion picture directors.



Letters of regret were read from Siegmund Lubin, J. J. Kennedy and President Marion S. Pearce of the Motion Picture Exhibitors' League, who had planned to attend the dinner, but were prevented by business engagements.

Speedway Films Superb

As announced exclusively in the last issue of Motography, the pictures taken at the Chicago Speedway on Saturday, June 26, for President Aaron M. Gollos of the Photoplay Releasing Company by the Advance Motion Picture Company, under the personal direction of George Cox, one of Chicago's foremost producers, were shown the same evening at the Majestic theater, Chicago, creating intense enthusiasm.

On Monday, June 28, these same pictures were featured at the Orpheum theater in Chicago, as well as at the Colonial, another of the Jones, Linick and Schaefer houses, and it is said were declared by the management of the theater to be the finest films depicting an automobile race that have ever been shown in the house. Many hundreds of people were turned away early this week and tremendous bookings are being made on these Speedway pictures, which are exceptionally clear and well photographed.

Director Cox is deserving of the highest praise for the splendid results he has obtained, since the scenes showing the great crowds in the grandstands, the thousands of autos parked just outside the Speedway track, close-up views of the drivers and their mechanicians in their racing cars, and the race itself, in which the camera follows the cars all the way around the track and finishes with a close-up view of Resta, the winner, are undoubtedly intensely interesting to any lover of automobile racing and tremendously thrilling, not alone to those who saw the race, but the thousands who were unable to themselves visit the big bowl. Without a doubt the picture will prove a tremendous drawing card in whatever theaters it is booked and will interest the public for weeks, if not months, to come.

Tom Moore Leaves Kalem

Tom Moore, for the past four years closely identified with the production of the better class of films released by the Kalem Company, leaves that concern this week. Mr. Moore, during his long engagement as leading man and director of the Kalem Company, has made an enviable record in both departments and while he has not announced any immediate plans for the future will undoubtedly be heard from shortly regarding further activities in the realms of silent drama.

For the present Tom Moore will enjoy a long desired vacation, any possible tedium of which will be relieved by the writing of scenarios and the laying out of directorial plans involving the ultimate production of several important subjects.

In severing his long continued relations with the Kalem Company an association is terminated that has been eminently pleasant and mutually profitable to Mr. Moore and the film concern.

Tom Moore is conceded by competent critics to be one of the best of the younger generation of actors currently playing juvenile roles before the camera and a legion of loyal fans and exhibitors will impatiently await the return of their favorite to screen work, which event will be duly chronicled in these columns.

Minusa Screen for Boston Exchange

With the installation of the Minusa Gold Fibre Screen, which was completed and framed in the projection room last week, the V. L. S. E. exchange at 67 Church street, Boston, is ready for the demonstration of "Big Four" subjects.

New Selig Offices

The executive offices of the Selig Polyscope Company were recently moved from 20 East Randolph street to the new Garland building, corner Wabash avenue and Washington street, Chicago, Ill. The change was made in order to accommodate the rapidly increasing business of the Selig company. The twelfth floor of the new Garland skyscraper has been occupied by the Selig executive offices and every convenience has been furnished in order to expedite the business affairs of one of the largest and most enterprising of the motion picture manufacturing companies.

The photographs on the opposite page will give one a good conception of the interior of the new Selig offices and are the more interesting to the public for the reason that while scenes of the motion picture studio interiors, pictures of actors and actresses, etc., are frequently published it is seldom that photographs of the executive offices of the greater film concerns, giving an idea of the far-reaching business organizations indispensable to the proper conduct of the industry, are presented.

The Selig executive offices contain the private offices of William R. Selig, president; and of J. A. Berst, vice-president and general manager. Both of these offices are very commodious and face Lake Michigan on the east.

Adjacent to these offices is located the publicity department, and to the west is the scenario editor's department. To the south are located the departments of the accountants, purchasing agent, cashier and his assistants, etc.

The shipping department is also on the twelfth floor, and to the north of this department will be found the projecting parlors where Selig Red Seal Plays, Diamond Specials in three reels, and the regular releases are shown and reviewed. The new executive offices are said to be among the most commodious and best equipped in the Windy City.

Urge Adoption of Eisner Amendment

A large delegation of motion picture men from New York City, among whom were W. W. Irwin, J. W. Binder, Paul Cromelin, S. L. Rothapfel and W. Stephen Bush, appeared at Albany, New York, last week before the constitutional convention committee on bill of rights at a hearing on the Eisner amendment, to urge the adoption of this amendment which would give the screen the freedom of the press and guarantee it against legal censorship for all time to come.

The amendment, which was introduced as No. 101, on May 5, reads as follows:

Every person may freely speak, write and publish his sentiments on all subjects, being responsible for the abuse of that right; and no law shall be passed to restrain or abridge the liberty of speech, or of the press or of the motion picture screen. In all criminal prosecutions or indictments for libels the truth may be given in evidence to the jury; and if it shall appear to the jury that the matter charged as libelous is true, and was published with good motives and for justifiable ends, the party shall be acquitted; and the jury shall have the right to determine the law and the fact.

Mr. Irwin in addressing the committee pointed out that its members were scarcely competent to pass judgment on the proposition before them, and suggested that they might popularize themselves if they would protect the industry and later put it to a vote of the people to decide whether or not they had acted wisely.

He further pointed out that the committee was treading on dangerous ground when it began to throttle the expression of thought in any respect, since censorship of the press would be the next logical step and the country would soon find its laws returning it to the middle ages. In conclusion Mr. Irwin said:

If you gentlemen only knew as much as I know regarding censorship you would extend this protection to us. If you knew how ignorant and prejudiced it is, how subject to corrupt political influence and graft. In some places the chief of police constitutes himself censor and must be seen before a picture, no matter how innocent, can be shown.

This industry comes before this committee with clean hands. The morale of the picture today is vastly superior to the drama or comic opera. The public may go wrong temporarily in some things, but it will never go wrong on a great moral issue, and in these days, when we are ever broadening the principle of popular government, let us not step backward, but, on the contrary, submit this question to the public and let them see whether they are willing to tolerate any throttling of the expression of their thought.

Maud Allan in Next Bosworth Release

In its next release, Bosworth, Inc., presents for the first time on the screen, Maud Allan, the world famous dancer, in "The Rug Maker's Daughter," a charming romance of the American-Turkish rug trade.

Maud Allan in a scene from Bosworth's "The Rug Maker's Daughter."

Miss Allan, who is considered one of the two greatest dancers in the world, has repeatedly turned down flattering offers to appear before the motion picture camera and was returning to London after a sensationally successful eighteen months' tour of Australia, India and the Far East, when, on stopping off at Los Angeles she was finally persuaded to appear in a film play that would do justice to her wonderful art, incidentally acquiring for the screen world another prominent name of international import.

By presenting this star in an exquisite divertisement of dance and drama, Bosworth, Inc., has departed from the usual channels in motion pictures, and, penetrating into a hitherto forbidden realm of modern art, has borrowed one of its most distinguished figures. The wonderful ability of the artistic dancer is given wide opportunity to assert itself in this production and the various dances which she performs in the film will readily stamp her as one whose fame has not been misplaced. Her dramatic accomplishments are also shown to good advantage in this stirring love story.

In staging this play, the director has spared neither time nor expense to secure the desired results. Costly interiors and wonderfully realistic exteriors, presenting in one instance an entire Turkish street, alive with interesting sights of Constantinople, are generously displayed. Beautiful scenes have also been secured in and about the famous sunken gardens of a Los Angeles millionaire presenting one of the finest specimens of modern residential architecture for a background.

Ince Entertains

Thomas H. Ince, famous film producer and one of the leaders in the world of motion pictures, on Tuesday, June 29, entertained 1,500 delegates to the National Editorial Association convention at the Ince studios near Santa Monica. The reception to the visitors took the form of a huge barbecue and outdoor rodeo, in which many famous riding stars of the West took part. A short hundred yards away the peaceful Pacific laved a sand-girt coast, on which many of the pen-pushers from the middle states, who saw the ocean for the first time, disported themselves. The visitors, after a day spent on the 28,000-acre picture preserves of the New York Motion Picture Coropration, expressed themselves as delighted with their reception. The editors, who hail from all sections of the United States, were escorted to the Ince studios in an army of automobiles tendered by members of the Los Angeles Press Club. They were met at the entrance to Inceville by Thomas H. Ince, and his executive manager, Eugene H. Allen, and escorted over the big plant by stars and players. The barbecue took place on an esplanade in Santa Ynez Canon, near the studios, a half dozen fat steers being roped, killed, roasted and served up on the spot by veteran cowboys who know the range and its culinary methods to a nicety. Mr. Ince, who has gained fame as one of the most lavish entertainers on a large scale in the Pacific Southwest, delivered a short address of welcome to the visitors, during the feast, which was followed up with three lusty cheers for the producer for his generous hospitality.

New "Vision" Theater

Moe Choyinski, manager and proprietor of four well patronized theaters in Chicago and a prominent member of the Motion Picture Exhibitors' League of Illinois, is breaking ground this week for a new theater to be known as "The Vision," to be erected at Division and Washtenau streets, Chicago. This is to be an 800-seat house, and Motography has no doubt it will prove as profitable and well conducted a theater as are Mr. Choyinski's other houses.

Pavlowa in "The Dumb Girl of Portici"

Carl Laemmle and George Kann, representing the Universal Film Manufacturing Company and Max Rabinoff, representing Madame Anna Pavlowa, the incomparable classic dancer, last week attached their names to a tremendous contract. The subject will be Auber's grand opera, "The Dumb Girl of Portici," presented at the Metropolitan Opera House, New York City, twenty-one years ago. This work, strong of plot and rapid of action, will be a splendid vehicle for the wonderful dancer and her collection of artists.

Anna Pavlowa.

For many months Pavlowa persistently refused to consider the offer to appear in the films, and consented only after being assured by the Universal that every means would be employed to make this screen production an artistic success. The picture will be in eight reels, and orchestral scores and full orchestras will accompany the picture on its tour of the biggest theaters in the world.

The interior scenes will be begun on July 3 in Chicago, during the engagement of Pavlowa in that city. A full company of forty-seven dancers will be used, in addition to many motion picture folk who will be added to the ensemble. Following the taking of the Chicago scenes, a special train will take the troupe to Universal City, near Los Angeles, California.

To Occupy Own Building

To house the Seattle branch of the V. L. S. E. contracts were let this week for the erection of a building at 416 Olive street, that city.

In the corner-stone of the building has been placed the two full-page advertisements in the Seattle Times, announcing the initial appearance of the V. L. S. E. product at the Alhambra theater in that city.

When formal possession of this building is taken by the Seattle bureau it will mark the first film exchange to exclusively occupy a building especially constructed to its order. Tom North, well known in western film circles, is the Seattle branch manager for V. L. S. E., Inc.

Opens Branch Office

Manager V. H. Hoddup of the Chicago office of the Pathe Exchange, Inc., announces the opening of a branch office in the Apollo theater building at Peoria, Ill., with "Cliff" Bestar as manager. Mr. Bestar is prepared to book the entire Pathe program and already reports several contracts. Exhibitors in the vicinity will undoubtedly appreciate the establishment of the service possible through the branch office in their locality, and it is evident the new branch exchange will be highly successful.

Stop Motion for Projection Machines

BY W. B. MORTON*

EVER since intermittent movement has been in use particular efforts have been made to make the movement of such characteristic that the least amount of strain would bear on the part to be moved.

In a continuous movement no force is required for the maintenance of the movement except to overcome incidental friction and windage.

In an intermittent movement, however, considerable forces are required to accelerate the masses from standstill to maximum velocity, and then again to retard the same masses from that maximum velocity to a standstill. If the accelerating force is constant during the whole time of acceleration a uniformly accelerated movement ensues.

The simplest form of such uniformly accelerated movement is given in that of a falling body whose velocity increases uniformly for successive time periods. We know that the force producing this movement is never less than the weight of the body, which remains constant from the time that it starts on its downward course. It is therefore evident that if we design for a movement of the body of uniform acceleration that the force required to propel it must be constant. It is immaterial in that respect, whether the movement be a translatory, as in the case with a falling body, or whether the movement sought is an angular one.

To enable us, therefore, to produce the intermittent movement with a minimum amount of force acting at any time on the masses, it is important to design the "cam" in such way as to impart to the intermittent system an angular movement of uniform increment of velocity.

It is deemed best to consider first the limitations of the intermittent movement generally known as Geneva movement.

In the Geneva movement the time required is exactly one-quarter of the turn of the pin wheel. If the Geneva gear were made with five slots instead of four, the movement would require one-fifth of the revolution of the pin wheel; or, as it is usually expressed, in the four-slot Geneva, the movement and therefore of the film, covers 90 degrees of the fly wheel, whreas in a five-slot Geneva, the movement and therefore of the film, is completed in 72 degrees of the fly wheel.

With the five-slot Geneva, the movement of the film requires one-fifth of the time and the film, while stationary, could transmit the picture during four-fifths of the time. With the four-slot Geneva, the film is moving during one-fourth of the time and standing still three-fourths of the time.

While we could therefore shorten the percentual time of movement of the film from 25 per cent in the four-slot Geneva to 20 per cent in the five-slot Geneva, no means are possible by which to make a change anywhere between these two figures.

The four-slot Geneva, being universally adopted, precludes therefore the possibility of designing the machine for any other ratio of movement to rest, or darkness to light-transmission, than one to three.

In Fig. 1, the horizontal line denotes time, whereas the vertical lines may denote movement of the film. For the Geneva the movement is given by line G, which shows that from the beginning of engagement of the pin in the slot, the increase of the velocity of the film is extremely small; great increase in velocity, however, occurs at the point marked h. At the point s the velocity of the film has reached the maximum, and from there on decreases in velocity more rapidly during a short period j, and finally comes to zero on position plus 45.

It will be seen that the work of the Geneva is done almost entirely in the two short periods h and j, whereas little power is transmitted at the beginning or at the middle of the movement. The total strain of acceleration and the retardation of the film is therefore concentrated at two comparatively short periods of the whole time of movement and the wear of the Geneva slot and pin as well as the intermittent sprocket's teeth and film holes becomes excessive.

To avoid such uneven and excessive force, both in the Geneva itself and on the film, Nicholas Power designed his cam movement shown diagrammatically in Fig. 1.

This movement is not limited to any particular percentage for the movement of the film, the cam being designed for any number of degrees desired. The velocity of the film is diagrammatically shown in Fig. 2, which shows in comparison to Fig 1, that the initial time of movement m is utilized to better advantage for accelerating the film and thereby relieving the part h of the diagram of its excessive rise.

* Reprinted from Scientific American Supplement.

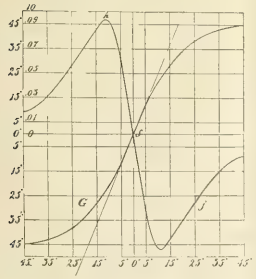

Fig. 1—Movement of film in relation to Geneva stop movement.

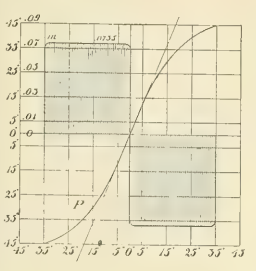

Fig. 2—Movement of film as controlled by the new Power cam movement.

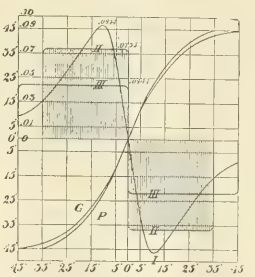

Fig. 3—Comparison of movement and forces required by Geneva and Power movements.

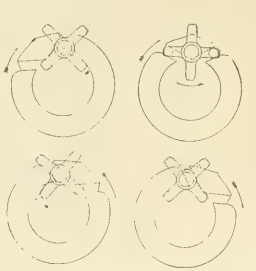

Fig. 4—Diagrams illustrating operation of the Power cam.

Such even distribution of power transmitted from the fly wheel to the intermittent, and from the sprocket to the film, accomplishes the total movement of the film of ¾ inch at a shorter time, equal to 71 degrees of the fly wheel, with a strain on the film, which can be gaged by the comparison of steepness of the angle a as against the angle A.

To facilitate this comparison, Fig. 3 is shown wherein the movement as well a the forces required are shown relating to those of the Geneva and the Power cam.

Mr. Power has therefore combined in this one design three changes of mechanical operations:

1. Shorter time of movement (71 degrees as against 90 degrees).

2. Uniform distribution of strain over the whole period of movement, as against the unevenly divided action of the Geneva.

3. Reduction in the engagement force from which three noticeable deserts are given in the operation:

1st. More light.

2d. Less vibration.

3d. Less wear both on the intermittent movement, intermittent sprocket and film.

An argument might be advanced that, as above mentioned, the Power cam shows more force transmitted during the initial part of the engagement than the Geneva movement, and in starting and therefore less destructive for the film, at least during this period of the engagement.

A rope will hardly last longer by being given plenty of rest mornings and evenings, but being overstrained beyond its safe capacity to a full day's work during the few hours of a day.

The work that the Geneva is not doing in the beginning of the movement, it has to make up during the short periods b and j, causing jerks and ruining the film, sprocket wheel and the slot and pin.

Comparing first the maximum force required for the Geneva with that of a Power cam of 90 degrees movement as given in III, we see that the latter requires a force which is less than one-half of that required for the Geneva, the two absolute values being 0.44 as against 0.944.

Such great superiority of the Power cam enables us, therefore, to reduce the time for its action and still remain with its actuating force below that of a Geneva.

Such case has been shown in Fig. 3 by force line II, which corresponds to the cam as incorporated in the projection machines manufactured. There the time has been reduced from an angle of 90 degrees to only 70 degrees, thereby reducing the dark period. It is true that by such quicker action the actuating force increases, but as seen from line II it is still far below the force required of the Geneva, the relative values being 0.735 against 0.944.

This comparison in Fig. 3 between the force line of the Geneva (I) and the Power cam as used (II), shows clearly the latter's advantage in reducing the time in a ratio of 70 degrees as against 90 degrees, and reducing the actuating force in a ratio of 0.735 to 0.944.

Taylor Stages Thriller

A stage coach careening down a tortuous mountain road, the horses drawing it at full gallop to the edge of an abyss, where it sways unsteadily for an instant, then plunges five hundred feet downward, is a thrill to be seen in a forthcoming chapter of "The Diamond from the Sky," the $20,000 prize romantic picture written by Roy L. McCardell.

The scene was taken in the Santa Ynez mountains on a mountain road infrequently traveled because of the great danger of landslides and fall-aways. This, however, did not deter Director W. D. Taylor from picking his location there. So at 3 o'clock one morning last week a gritty little cavalcade started out for the dangerous pass, arriving there shortly after midday.

Handling the reins on the stage coach was "Sombrero Joe" Knight, one of the most skillful four-horse drivers in the West and one of the few men now active who rode the box when Indian arrows and bandit bullets made travel a thing of danger.

"How far over the edge will you put those wheels, at a gallop, Joe?" Director Taylor asked the veteran reinsman. "Just as far out as I can jump back," came the unexcited reply. And that is exactly what he did—only a little more, for it was a mad scramble he was forced to make to save himself from being carried down the mountain side with the coach. Then when he recovered himself the four horses, freed by the accident from the coach, dragged him down the road before they could be headed off.

The result obtained is the fullest possible measure of thrill—the yawning abyss right in the path of the galloping coach horses—then over the cliff.

Lunn in London

Pat Lunn, known to all the exhibitors in Chicago through his successful management of a number of the larger houses in the Windy City, particularly the Yale on Sixty-third street and the Palace on West Madison street, has been appointed European representative of the National Waterproof Film Company, of which Ben Beadell is president, and sailed for London some days ago to assume charge of the foreign office. Mr. Lunn, upon his arrival in London, dropped a post card to President Beadell which fairly sparkled with Pat's well known Irish wit and pictures the hustling new representative with his coat off and all ready for business. Evidently Pat is of the opinion that although "It's a Long, Long Way to Tipperary," business can be secured not alone from that city, but from the whole European continent, and his Chicago friends will wish him every success in his new position.

Weber and Fields with Keystone

On June 21 Weber and Fields affixed their signatures to a contract to appear exclusively with the Keystone company for the next three years. The contract also calls for the rights to picture their numerous Broadway successes.

It is said this is the biggest contract ever entered into between a manufacturing company and players. Over $600,000 will change hands.

Both these famous comedians leave for the Keystone studios about the first of August.

The Keystone Film Company has now the exclusive services of Weber and Fields, Raymond Hitchcock, Eddie Foy, Sam Bernard, Hale Hamilton and Bert Clarke.

Emmett Campbell Hall, the Lubin photoplaywright, does most of his writing at his cottage in Glen Echo, Maryland.

Recent Patents in Motography

REVIEWED BY DAVID S. HULFISH

NO. 1,124,580. Method and Means for Localizing Sound Reproduction. Issued to E. H. Amet, Redondo Beach, Calif. (Application filed July 3, 1911.) A number of loud-speaking telephones are arranged in suitable locations, as behind various areas of a motion picture projection screen. Each then is connected to a portion of a commutator in connection with a phonograph which has an electrical reproducer. By this means, the different parts of the phonograph record are reproduced by the different loud-speaking telephones, acting in any order or in any combination as determined by the commutator. By this means, it is possible to cause the speaker's voice to follow the speaker, that is, to keep with the speaker as the speaker's image moves from place to place upon the motion picture screen. The patent also carries claims upon the association of the electrical parts with the phonograph reproducer, aside from their application to any specific purpose.

1,124,665. Apparatus for Showing Motion Pictures in Relief. Issued to Charles E. R. Schneider, New Haven, Conn. The motion picture projecting screen is set behind a large sheet of plate glass, the glass being inclined. Upon this combination of plate glass and picture screen two lanterns are arranged to throw their rays, the two lanterns being arranged at different elevations, as though, for instance, they were located in the first balcony and second balcony of a theater. By reason of the different angles at which the rays from the two machines meet the surface of the sheet of glass, the reflecting power of the glass is greatly effective upon the rays from one machine, while of but little effect upon the rays from the other machine, the rays of the one machine therefore passing to the picture screen as though the glass were not present. The patrons watching the screen through the glass, though presumably not being aware of the presence of the glass, witness the illusion of two pictures at different distances, and seem to look through the objects of one picture and beyond them to the objects of the other picture, whence comes the illusion of solidity, or stereoscopic relief.

1,125,045. Take-Up Sprocket. Issued to C. R. Beck Anderson, Ind. A ratchet and pawl is included in the hub of the take-up sprocket. In a projector equipped with a take-up sprocket built under the terms of this patent, it will be possible to pull the film in one direction over the take-up sprocket without removing it from the teeth of the sprocket.

1,125,660, 1,125,661, and 1,125,662. Cinematograph Target Apparatus. Issued to D. H. Corbin and A. W. Harris, Birmingham, England, assignors to Life Targets, Limited, London, Eng. A motion picture is thrown upon a target screen, and the patron takes a pop at it with a gun. The sound of the gun shot acts upon an acoustically controlled electric switch to stop the motion picture as the shot is fired; the bullet mark upon the target screen then shows the accuracy of the shot. Shutter details and film-control details are included in the three patents.

1,125,729. Motion Picture Projector. Issued to E. W. Salmon, Jr., Baltimore, Md. Another solution of details in the problem of the endless film, for projection without rewinding. The patent covers mechanical details of rollers and rings for controlling the reel or open coil of film in the projector.

1,126,437. For an Improved Take-Up Control. Issued to Horace Fisher, Letchworth, England, assignor to W. E. Garforth, Pontefract, Yorkshire, England. The film comes from the film window and enters the control rollers at 10 in the drawing, passing under the roller 1, then over the roller 3, then around the roller 7, then again around the roller 3, and then again around the roller 7, and finally leaves the control at 11 to the take-up reel. If the take-up should pull too fast, the double layers of film on rollers 3 and 7 tighten and resist the pull so that the take-up belt slips. The device does not seem easy for wear upon the film strip, but it is shown in connection with a camera, where the film passes the control but once, and not repeatedly as in projecting machines.

1,126,188. Motion Picture Film for Color Projection. Issued to W. B. Featherstone, Washington, D. C., assignor to H. P. Patents and Processes Co. (Application filed Jan. 23, 1907.) In the film shown by this patent, the images are arranged in three rows, side by side, representing three colors to be projected, and the film strip is stained in the three colors, thus requiring no color filter attachment in the projecting machine.

1,126,436. Film Holder. Issued to Horace Fisher, Letchworth, England, assignor to W. E. Garforth, Pontefract, England. The magazine is composed of body and cover, with an inwardly projecting journal member in the body and a like member upon the inside of the cover, the film being wound upon a spindle which is engaged by these two journal members to support the spindle and permit it to turn with the film as the film is drawn out of the film trap in the edge of the magazine.

1,126,589. For an Improved Film Guide Control. Issued to Julien Tessier, assignor to Lubin Manufacturing Co., Philadelphia, Pa. The film in the film gate is guided by two guides, one on each side, which hold the film closely. The two guides are moved by a striker which is fixed to the frame of the machine, and when the film gate is swung outwardly for threading up the guides swing away from the striker and separate automatically to facilitate threading up.

1,126,636. Baseball System for Projection. Issued to Albert A. Heyman, Baltimore, Md., assignor of part to T. T. Thomas, Baltimore, Md. Film for reproducing and exhibiting baseball games, consisting of a series of sections of moving picture film, each showing a selected portion of a game, the sections showing interchangeable plays in the game, so that a number of sections joined in sequence will serve to illustrate any one of several continuous innings capable of being illustrated by different combinations of the sections taken.

No. 1,126,720. Tripod. Issued to Andre Debrie, Paris, France. A panoramic tripod for cinematographic cameras, containing both horizontal and vertical movements in very compact form.

No. 1,126,902. Safety Shutter. Issued to Archie D. Standeford, Kansas City, Mo. The shutter is self-closing but is held open by a latch which is released if the film should break. The novelty lies in the mechanism for detecting the break in the film. Two air blasts are directed upon the opposite faces of the film as it passes from the film gate, and the film deflects are air currents to a vane which holds open an electric circuit. Should the film break, the air currents are not deflected against the vane, the electric circuit closes and the shutter is released.

No. 1,127,382. Color Photography. Issued to W. B. Featherstone, assignor to Synthetic Corporation, New York, N. Y. The object is to avoid the color fringes found in some pictures. The film for projection shows a double row or triple row of pictures, for the different color values, and the projection is made by two or three projection lenses simultaneously.

No. 1,127,647. Film Lubricator. Issued to R. J. Lacey and E. Gaughran, Muncie, Ind. In rewinding the film it is passed over studs which engage it at the margins only, and which place a small quantity of lubricant upon the margins, to reduce the friction in the film gate and over the sprocket teeth.

No. 1,127,775. Safety Attachment. Issued to O. B. Olson and L. K. Kennedy, assignors to the O. K. Controller Co., Denver, Colorado. The arrangement is such that the closing of an emergency electrical circuit will cut off the electric current from the driving motor and from the projecting lamp. The means for closing the emergency circuit contains the novelty of the patent. Two idler rollers are opposed to each other with the film between them on its way to the take-up reel. If the film should break the rollers touch and close the emergency circuit. The principal object in such a detector is that it should accomplish its purpose without injury to the film strip, a condition which apparently is attained in this patent.

No. 1,127,871. Recovery of Material. Issued to Jaques Duclaux, Paris, France. A process for the recovery of formic esters used as solvents in the manufacture of celluloid. The vapors are absorbed in water containing an alkaline agent. A strong acid is added with a large excess of methyl or ethyl alcohol, and the solution then is distilled.

No. 1,128,460. Speed Adjuster. W. P. Kubitz and Charles Schmidborn, St. Louis, Mo. Two friction cones with a friction idler between are interposed between the motor and the motion head. See illustration.

No. 1,128,861. Intermittent Mechanism. Issued to Horace Fisher, assignor to W. E. Garforth, Pontefract, Yorkshire, England. A variation of that class of intermittent mechanisms which have a slide operating vertically with a reciprocating motion, and a clamp carried by the slide which grips the film as the slide moves downward and releases the film while the slide returns.

No. 1,128,867. Screen. Issued to Jacob H. Genter, Newburgh, N. Y. Strips of fabric are joined by matching edges and then cementing a strip over the seam line upon the back of the screen. To conceal the seam from the front, a composition paste is spread upon the surface of the screen, which afterward is mechanically embossed.

No. 1,129,693. Attachment. Issued to August H. F. Kurre, New York, N. Y. The usual perforated picture film passes through the film gate vertically, as is usual in projectors. There is added a narrow horizontal unperforated film containing the words of a lecture upon the subject matter of the motion picture of the picture film; this horizontal band moves steadily and is projected along the margin of the picture screen. The three claims are comprehensive. "Claim 1. Legislation for the Freedom of the Screen

MOST of us have always carried the impression that the Constitution of the United States guaranteed freedom of expression to its citizens. That was the foundation of independence that we laid in 1776. That was why this is called a "free country." And that is just why the high-handed and arbitrary censorship of motion pictures, officially exercised, has aroused our patriotic indignation until we have wanted to push the censors off that same pier that witnessed the famous disaster to British tea a century and a half ago.

It seems we were all mistaken. The taste for technicalities which has developed in our lawyers and legislators, until the omission of a comma spells disaster to a case, has rendered interpretation of our constitutional rights impossible. For motion pictures were not mentioned in the Constitution!

Fortunately it is possible, as civilization progresses, to make amendments and additions to the original document which, within human limitations, will express what the constitutional convention of 1787 would have expressed had it enjoyed all our modern privileges.

The constitutional convention of 1915 will consider the Eisner amendment, which is now before the convention's committee on bill of rights. This amendment is so vitally important to the motion picture interests that we reproduce it here, at the risk of duplicating its publication in another part of the issue:

> Every person may freely speak, write and publish his sentiments on all subjects, being responsible for the abuse of that right; and no law shall be passed to restrain or abridge the liberty of speech, or of the press or of the motion picture screen. In all criminal prosecutions or indictments for libels the truth may be given in evidence to the jury; and if it shall appear to the jury that the matter charged as libelous is true, and was published with good motives and for justifiable ends, the party shall be acquitted; and the jury shall have the right to determine the law and the fact.

There is no question that this constitutional amendment should be passed in some form. The present trend of the censorship movement is all too evident; the motion picture has been made the innocent cause of an evil that is assuming alarming proportions. Flushed with the victory that popular ignorance has allowed them, the advocates of censorship are about to force its operations into the conduct of the newspaper and the lecture.

Nothing is so sweet to mankind as power over other men. And there are always some who will sacrifice justice, decency, anything, for the sake of authority. To say, in divine superiority, that the people are children who must not look at what is forbidden—that is joy indeed—the joy of a god. What wonder that they cry for the intoxicating thrill of censorial power?

Our legislators may not be, and probably are not, in touch with this situation. It may be a little difficult to make them comprehend its significance; for what is painfully evident to us is sometimes a little obscure to the other fellow, whose mind is called to the subject from entirely different matters. But the perils of censorship, its menace to the foundations of American freedom, are so very evident that a little eloquence from the motion picture men should open the eyes of the public as well as the lawmakers.

There is a possibility of getting the Eisner amendment adopted. Time is pressing and the occasion is urgent. If the picture people can muster all their strength in a single effort, now is the time to use it.

There Can Be No Standard Price

ON several occasions we have been asked to declare ourselves definitely in favor of a certain specific classification of picture theater. We are desired to say that the ten-cent theater has entirely displaced the nickel theater so that the latter has no further place in the scheme; or that the ten-cent theater is a mistake and the nickel show is the first, last and only appropriate entertainment in pictures; or that both the nickel and the dime are wrong and the dollar admission is the coming standard for motographic drama.

We cannot consistently take any such attitude. Our platform on the admission price question is simply this: We believe the motion picture is the greatest medium of entertainment the world ever knew. It is greater than even its devotees realize—so great that it cannot possibly be confined to any class or price. It is bound to dominate all entertainment at all prices, from a cent to ten dollars.

Not very long ago there was no such thing as entertainment for a nickel. The motion picture put the nickel in the running and developed it into the greatest buyer of amusement in the world. Picture shows that grew to be worth a dime, a quarter, or even more, still sold for a nickel. Perhaps that was an error of judgment. Entertainment, like everything else, should bring what it is worth, and the nickel prevailed too long. Finally it lost its hold, and today the nickel show is only one of several classifications into which the picture exhibiting business naturally divides.

We have now the two dollar show, naturally a very pretentious affair. We have the dime show almost as a standard—a temporary and fleeting stadard, perhaps, but prevailing at the moment. And—we still have the nickel show.

It is our belief that we always will have the nickel show. We know we will always have the ten-cent show. We are certain the two dollar show will continue. We hope to see the five dollar show before long.

With these convictions, we would plainly be inconsistent did we attempt to exploit any one of these classes at the expense or to the exclusion of any other class.

It is curious that even those intimately familiar with the capacity of the motion picture still think of it as a specific kind of amusement—like a vaudeville act, a circus or a prize fight. That is wrong. The motion picture has no limits, either great or small. As well tell the photographic enthusiast that his kodak will take nothing but babies, or nothing but street scenes, as say that the motion picture must sell only for a dime or a dollar.

So long as there are people with only a nickel to spend for entertainment, or people who prefer five shows a week at five cents each to one show at a quarter, somebody will supply that entertainment. And it will be the motion picture that supplies it, because nothing else can do it. It will not be a high grade show, of course; no one expects much for a nickel. Buch such as it is, it will live.

So long as producers can make better and better films, the people will pay better prices to see them. They are paying two dollars now with cheerful alacrity, and coming out well satisfied.

But the dollar-mark shows are few, and the nickel shows are many—though not so many as a little while ago. A good many of the nickels have grown to dimes because the pictures are better and cost the exhibitors more. Even the average, rather mediocre show is worth a dime, because it is better than any other entertainment at the price. So we must give the palm to the dime show in the present era of evolution, while still retaining the nickel show for those who insist upon it, and the two dollar show for those who want the best. Tomorrow it may be different, and the twenty-five cent show be the popular class. But as for saying that either or any of them can shut out any other, so that motion picture entertainment represents a certain size of coin—that cannot be done, now or ever.

There are people with money and people without; good spenders and tight-wads; apostles of high life and simple life. The picture can and will serve them all, each in his favorite way.

Speaking of the Universal Beauties, we heard a story the other day to the effect that Rothstein of the Universal staff, marooned in a sick Ford near Las Vegas, New Mexico, while the beauties in big touring cars swept past him, wept salty tears as he exclaimed, "My God, they are getting away. We'll never get 'em back!" thus adding his mite to such famous sayings as "Give me Liberty or give me Death," "Don't give up the ship," "I'll fight it out on this line if it takes all summer," etc.

Episode Nine "The Haphazards of Helene"

(PART TWO)

"Just as the handcar swept up to the sputtering stick of dynamite," resumed Helen Domes, the girl telegraph operator, "I bent far over and seized the deadly missile in my hands. Placing the still sputtering stick between my milk-white teeth, I seized the handles and in a few seconds was propelling the car at a rate of more than 90 miles an hour, soon leaving 'Dirty Face Dan' and 'Daredevil Desmond' far in the rear. As I shot the car out on a long railroad trestle I tossed the dynamite stick far out and it fell a thousand feet into the river below, exploding just as it touched the water and showering me with spray. As I still had to stop the Oshkosh Limited in order to prevent the train robbery, I kept on with the handcar until I reached a semaphore whose arms extended out over the track. Leaving the car at this point I climbed the semaphore, as I could see the smoke of the oncoming Limited on the horizon, and with difficulty made my way out to the end of the semaphore arm. As the train dashed beneath me I dropped down upon the coal tender, alighting without a bruise, and making my way into the cab of the engine, where I related the plan to rob the express car. Old 'Joe' McGuire, the veteran engineer of the road, listened to my story and then told me of the plan to foil the robbers. As he suspected, the thieves had torn up about fifty rods of the track in their attempt to stop the train, but a steep grade led down to the place, and opening up the throttle Joe sent the Limited at the gap in the track at more than three hundred miles per hour. So great was our speed that we vaulted clear over the trap prepared for us, and lit again half way up the track on the other side. On time to the minute Old 'Joe' brought the train into division headquarters, where I was warmly praised by all for my heroism and invited to become the wife of the president of the line."

CHAPTER thirteen of Lubin's popular serial "Road O' Strife" is overflowing with surprising revelations and the closing scenes leave you perfectly contented with the lot that has befallen the little heroine, Alene.

Gershome finds the celebrated silver cup.

Back in chapter two of this interesting story Caleb Jerome, the father of Gilbert Jerome, confessed to his son, Gilbert, the murder of old Professor Gershome, telling him that he had thrown his lifeless body into the river. In this episode the dead comes to life. Professor Gershome regains consciousness after lying in a dazed condition for many weeks and he is the means of establishing Alene in her rightful position.

As this chapter, "The Man Who Did Not Die," opens, we see Professor Gershome lying in a hospital and when the nurse comes he asks her how he came there. She tells him of how sometime before a passing horseman had seen his body floating in the river, had gone for help and later he had been rescued and had been lying unconscious in the hospital ever since.

On the cot next to him Robert Dane is lying and the nurse comes in and reads to him the newspaper account of Alene's pardon. Gershome overhears the nurse reading the item, jumps out of bed and demands that he be released from the hospital. The famous silver cup has been sent to a specialist in poisons for experimental purposes and is lying on his desk in the hospital office as Gershome comes in and asks for his release.

The old man is left alone for a few minutes and spies the silver cup. As he secretes it under his coat he glances up at the calendar on the wall, and noticing the date, he exclaims, "This is the date," and rushes out of the place. Gershome reaches the jail as Alene is freed. The girl shows no surprise at the appearance of the old man and indifferently lets him take her to the office of a lawyer, Madison, whose name he remembers.

In a cold and impressive manner Gershome tells the lawyer of the case he wishes to place in his hands. He then takes the silver cup, cuts the bottom from out of it and extracts therefrom several documents and a wonderful jewel, all of which he places in the lawyer's hands. As he reads Madison is amazed. Gravely Gershome rises, bows to Alene and exclaims, "This is her royal highness, the Princess Alene, rightful heiress to the throne of Urania."

The story concerns the adventures of an escaped convict, one Crooky Scruggs, who masquerades as a wealthy rancher, is entertained at the home of a financier and is there treated in a manner befitting a king.

Crooky has an artistic eye and all pretty things, such as gold watches, table silver and jewelry, create in him a longing to be their possessor. As he has a deft hand his desires are quickly realized. Besides Mr. Daniels, the cast includes Charles Eldridge as Bob Roberts; Harry T. Morey as John W. Crooky is aided in making his escape by Susan, Dough's old maid sister, who decides to marry and so reform him. He cannot resist the temptation to take Susan's rings, and with his prizes he makes a dash for liberty. But the officers and Roberts are in close pursuit and this decides him to run for the prison. A scene from Thanhouser's "The Flying Twins."

Master-Picture released this week, entitled "The Flying Twins."

The pretty girls, who appear as two adventure-struck young misses in the film and develop ere the picture ends into trapeze performers of no little ability, are ably supported in their circus scenes by Harry La Pearl, a noted circus clown, who enacts the role of Fred Morris, the acrobat. Lloyd Marshall, Lorraine Huling and Morris Foster, other popular Thanhouser players, the also in the cast.

The pretty twin sisters, both still in their teens, are enraptured with the performance of a circus acrobat and when, later, through their cousin Carolyn they obtain an introduction to the man they are simply bewitched.

Cousin Carolyn herself has quite evidently fallen under the spell of the circus acrobat and confides to her twin cousins that Fred Morris, the acrobat, and she are engaged.

Some time afterwards the father of the twins, learning of the romance between Carolyn and Morris, banishes the hero forever from his house and both Carolyn and the twins grieve tremendously over the catastrophe that has befallen them. With the passing of time Carolyn becomes engaged to Peter Goddard, whom the twins' father proclaims as a man worthy of becoming her suitor, despite the fact that Peter has never in his life swung from a trapeze or performed an acrobatic stunt.

When summer comes the twins are taken to visit their Aunt Sally, who lives in a quiet country town in Connecticut. For a time the simple farm pleasures satisfy them, but as the days speed by their enthusiasm begins to lag, since there are no matinees, vaudeville, or picture shows, and after the gaiety of the past winter, the twins miss all these things.

Then the circus comes to town. The twins are immensely delighted and follow the parade out to the circus grounds, where they are amazed to discover in one of the performers their cousin Carolyn's former suitor, Fred Morris, the acrobat.

Fred recognizes the twins and makes much of them, as does his fellow performers, when they are introduced. When a pretty creature in a short pink dress, whom Morris calls Stella, his wife, explains to the twins what an exciting life they may lead if they will join the circus, the girls instantly decide that is the course to pursue, and when the circus moves along next day the twins go with it.

Despite the frantic efforts of Aunt Sally and later the careful sleuthing of several city detectives engaged by their father, no trace of the twins can be found. Under Morris' tutelage the girls develop into daring, graceful little trapeze performers, who are billed as "The Flying Twins," and astonish and delight hundreds who attend the circus.

Morris feels that he is reaping a rich revenge against the father of the twins for the latter's interference in his affair with Carolyn, but later when the acrobat suffers a fall that cripples him, his interest in the twins becomes one not only of revenge, but of self preservation, for he depends upon them for support.

Though the children become miserably homesick and plead again and again to be allowed to return to their parents, Morris threatens them with dreadful things if they attempt to run away. Finally the detectives obtain a clue as to the twins' whereabouts and later the girls are restored once more to the arms of their parents, thoroughly satisfied with their experience as circus performers, and willing forever more to lead a simple life.

"The Diamond from the Sky"

Reviewed by Neil G. Caward

THERE is nothing exceptionally thrilling or sensational in chapter eleven of "The Diamond from the Sky," which is entitled "The Web of Destiny," but the story moves ahead considerably and the various characters are beginning once more to assemble in Richmond where climactic events seem certain soon to transpire.

"The Diamond from the Sky," the costly heirloom of the Stanley family, which in chapter ten was left on the desert with a snake coiled about its shining jewel, ere chapter eleven ends is clasped about the neck of a little Indian papoose, while the mother dangles it delightedly in front of the infant's eyes.

Arthur Stanley, as the chaper opens, is seen hiding away the money left by the train robbers when they were surprised by the sheriffs, after pocketing a goodly bit for himself, and then riding back to his lonely sheep camp.

Blair Stanley returns to Richmond, where he is warmly welcomed by his mother and also by Blum, the pawnbroker, who is anxious to secure "The Diamond from the Sky," and wires Vivian Marston, now Mrs. Blair Stanley, to remain in California until she has found the jewel. Hagar, sent to the hospital, where she is to undergo an operation that may restore her mind, is being cared for by Mrs. Stanley, who feels under obligation to her since it was Blair who caused her to lose her reason. Mrs. Stanley, however, refuses to pay the expenses of the operation when the moment arrives for the doctor to perform it and tells Esther, who bemoans the fact that she cannot herself aid her mother, that she is only a begging Gypsy, and that influence and money are

Blair is urged by his mother to propose to Esther since the mother believes that in that fashion, if in no other, she may perhaps regain "The Diamond from the Sky," but Esther resents all Blair's attentions, since she believes him the husband of another.

Mrs. Stanley, however, finally offers Esther proof that Blair is eligible to marry her by showing her a note from Abe Blum in which it is stated that Vivian Marston already has several living husbands and so her marriage to Blair is illegal.

Luke Lovell, returning East from Los Angeles, is hurled off a freight train on which he has endeavored to steal a ride, and as he plods sullenly through the desert sand he comes upon "The Diamond from the Sky," which had been tossed amid the sage brush by the train robber who was shot.

Just as Lovell is about to pick the diamond up a rattlesnake darts out, and with a cry Luke tosses the diamond away and grasps his arm at the point where the fangs of the rattlesnake have imbedded themselves in it. Just at that moment Arthur Stanley riding up discovers Luke and aids him back to the sheep camp.

From Luke Arthur learns that Blair had been in the vicinity and that things had been so arranged that he could return to Richmond without fearing arrest for the murder of Doctor Lee.

Next morning Luke sets out again to cross the desert in search of the diamond, which he had thrown away when the snake attacked him, but ere he has reached the spot an Indian brave, with his squaw and her papoose, discover the glistening jewel, and thinking it nothing but a shining bit of glass, hangs it about the neck of the squalling infant, and dangles it before his eyes in an effort to stop his crying. Arthur Stanley, in funds once more due to the money he has found, leaves for the oil fields of California, where, under the name of John Powell, he buys an oil well. Meanwhile, in Richmond, Esther has grown tired of Blair's attentions and summons Quabba, the hunchback and her faithful friend, to aid her in escaping from the house. With Quabba's assistance the girl climbs down the porch and sets out, accompanied by Quabba, to find the man she loves—Arthur Stanley. Things are thus as chapter eleven comes to a close.

Edison's "Eugene Aram"

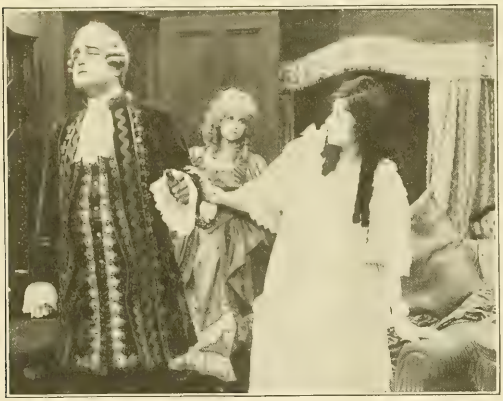
Reviewed by Thomas C. Kennedy.

A REALLY artistic production is offered by the Edison Company in "Eugene Aram," a four-reel drama to be released July 9. The story based on the novel by Edward Bulwer-Lytton, is laid in England and deals with characters of the eighteenth century. The plot revolves about a schoolmaster, who, in a moment of weakness, consents to join a worthless vagabond in a robbery. Although he takes no actual part in the crime which results in a murder, he is tortured by his conscience and finally dies as a murderer on the gallows.

A tense moment from Edison's "Eugene Aram."

In the character of Eugene Aram, Marc MacDermott has a part which is well suited to him, and his performance is an excellent one. Mabel Trunnelle has the leading feminine role as Madeline Lester. The other important parts are played by Herbert Prior as Richard Housman, and Edward Earle as Walter Lester. Other members of the cast are Gladys Hulette as Madeline's sister, Bigelow Cooper as Roland Lester, and George Wright as Geoffrey Lester.

All of the characters are satisfactorily delineated, the small parts being given as much care and thought as the important ones. Credit for the direction is due Richard Ridgely.



Eugene Aram, lacking the funds to continue his studies, is tempted when Richard Housman proposes that they join forces and rob Geoffrey Lester. Arriving at the place agreed upon, he is shocked when he sees that Housman has killed Lester, but helps him hide the body in a cave. Eugene refuses to accept any share of the stolen money. Shortly after he receives an inheritance which enables him to acquire the education he desires.

Five years later he secures the position of schoolmaster in Grassdale, where he meets Madeline Lester, the niece, and Walter Lester, the son of the murdered man. Walter is in love with Madeline, and is jealous of the strong friendship which exists between his cousin and the schoolmaster.

Eugene is constantly troubled by his conscience, feeling that he was in a measure partly responsible for the crime actually committed by Housman.

His moods are puzzling to Madeline, whose friendship has grown to love. Walter goes to Knaresborough in an endeavor to find some trace of his father. To prove to the townspeople that a body found buried is not that of Geoffrey Lester, Housman takes them to St. Robert's cave and shows them the remains of Walter's father. Housman is accused of the murder and to free himself puts the blame on Aram. Walter, with the written confession of Housman, returns to Grassdale and Eugene is arrested on the day set for his marriage to Madeline. At the trial he conducts his own defense, but is convicted and condemned to death on the gallows. Madeline dies from shock, caused by her lover's conviction, and Eugene, learning of this, goes to his execution calmly.

ACCOMPLISHING its purpose, the teaching of a moral, as did its predecessors, "The Fruit of Folly," eleventh in the Pathe-Balboa "Who Pays?" series, depicts the ruin and despair resulting from the mad pursuit of folly. Little sympathy is created by any of the characters, as each one is directly responsible for the dire consequences which are the outcome of his or her own mistakes, but the story is interesting and the many clever situations make it a convincing drama, thus raising it above the plane of a mere sermon.

Ruth Roland is seen as Isabel Clay, the butterfly wife, and Henry King plays the part of Edgar Clay, the husband whose folly is drink, and their splendid interpretations add materially to the realism of the story. The most beautiful scene in the picture, the benefit fete, given at the home of a very wealthy woman, serves as the setting for the most exciting situation of the story, and the striking lavishness and gaiety furnish a fitting background for the interesting action.

Edgar Clay and his business partner are threatened with financial ruin, being unable to make payment on a note which falls due within a few days. Peter West, Horace Stone's clerk, is seriously ill and gives a written confession to Clay stating that Stone stole a large sum of money from Clay's father. The partners wish to keep this a secret, hoping to avert their own ruin by proving theft on the attorney.

Isabel Clay loses a large amount of money at cards and gives Mrs. Blake a note for the debt which she is unable to pay. At Randolph's reception Clay, intoxicated, boastfully tells Stone of the confession and its hiding place, his wife's jewel safe. The attorney promises marriage to Cora Blake, and, knowing of the debt which Isabel owes her, asks her to secure the paper which is in Isabel's safe. Mrs. Blake decides to go to Mrs. Clay's apartment, and under cover of demanding payment of her I. O. U. secures the confession which accuses her future husband.

She takes the confession to Stone's apartment, but learning that he is planning to run away with another girl, she determines to hold the confession of his guilt over his head forever. Clay and his partner, eager to prove Stone's theft, bring the chief of police to see the written confession. But the all important paper is not to be found. Isabel knows

THE story of Selig's three-reel release for July 15, "The Octopus," featuring Thomas Santschi as Thatcher Thole, an unscrupulous financier, Lillian Hayward as Emily Sheldon, mother of Archie Sheldon, which part is taken by Leo Pierson, and Marion Warner as Violet Reinhardt, the artist's model, is from the pen of Charles Belmont Davis. This release is a story of a great city, of how its tentacles entangle and poison the hearts and minds of those susceptible to its fascination. "The Octopus" teaches a lesson which is illustrated by the well known proverb, "All that glitters is not gold."

Archie Sheldon is determined to go to New York and seek work. Finally his mother gives her consent and writes a letter to Thatcher Thole, Gotham's most unscrupulous financier, asking him to give her son a start in life. She tells Archie that Thole is an old friend of the family. Young Sheldon rises in the business world and is soon known as Thole's right-hand man. He meets Violet Reinhardt, an artist's model, who has become afflicted with the great white plague, and sympathizes with her. He takes her to high-priced cafes on several occasions. The girl has been told that a year in the country will restore her health and Sheldon through his boyish generosity gives her $500. The Octopus, the great city, retains the girl in its clutches and instead of spending the money to regain her health, she lavishes it on clothes and seeks the bright lights of Broadway.

Archie proves the intermediary for Thole's shady deals. Mrs. Slade, a prepossessing young widow, has invested in Thole's worthless stocks and she is planning to marry Thole, who has become entangled with a chorus girl. The girl becomes jealous and writes Thole a letter in which she tells him she will not be supplanted by any other woman and will make known some of his shady deals. This letter is inadvertently left in Mrs. Slade's home by Thole and she reads it.

Thole realizes that he has lost the latter at Mrs. Slade's, and knowing that he cannot afford to lose her investment, one night at a midnight revelry at his home orders Archie Sheldon to assume responsibility for the letter. Archie refuses to surrender his manhood and it is then that the chorus girl cries to Archie, "You can't refuse. He is your father and everybody on Broadway knows it."

The boy is stunned by this news and looks questioningly at Thole, who finally acknowledges the fact and tells Archie of how he had promised to marry Archie's mother but the

The true atmosphere which is carried consistently from the opening scenes to the end furnishes a quality to the action which is most pleasing to those who enjoy being carried along, in imagination, by a play.

The story, by Charles K. Harris, the well known music publisher, is of a girl who is deprived of her rightful home by a designing step-mother and grows to young womanhood under the care of her foster parents, a missionary couple. Mary Miles Minter has the leading part as Dorothy North and her performance is genuinely good. She is pretty, has the ability to live her part, and photographs splendidly.

Franklin B. Coates has an important role as Robert Armstrong and does well in it. The cast also includes Lowell

Sherman as Winfred North; Arthur Evers as Reverend Goodwin; James Riley as Harry Blake; Hal Clarendon as John Armstrong; Mabel Green as May Stillwell; Charlotte Shelby as Mrs. Goodwin, and Edna M. Holland as Mrs. Helen Stillwell. J. Searle Dawley directed the picture.

Winfred North, a rich lawyer, marries a widow with two children, believing it will be an advantage to his own five-year-old daughter. His wife discovers that the lawyer's child is to receive all of his property. She contrives to dispose of her stepchild and succeeds. Dorothy is adopted by a missionary couple who take her to Africa with them. Later the girl, now fifteen years of age, aids the Reverend Mr. Goodwin in his missionary work among the savage natives.

She meets Robert Armstrong, a prospector, and they become sweethearts. The natives declare war on the whites, and Dorothy's foster-parents are killed. The girl is rescued by a passing ship, and is taken to New York, where she finds employment in a florist's shop and lives in a cheap boarding house. Armstrong follows Dorothy to New York, and is untiring in his search for her. Through business he becomes acquainted with Winfred North, and from a former experiences and he writes a story about her for his paper. Through this article, Armstrong finally locates the girl he had almost given up hope of ever seeing again. They become engaged and she returns to her father's home. North is overjoyed on seeing his daughter, and denounces her scheming step-mother, whose part in the girl's leaving is exposed.

Essanay's "The Rajah's Tunic"

Reviewed by J. C. Garrett.

THE second of the "Adventures of Dominica" series of "The Rajah's Tunic" to be released on the General program in two reels on July 6, is a dramatic and interesting story in which the leads are taken by Nell Craig, who portrays the part of the clever girl criminal, Dominica; Sydney Ainsworth as Sutton Darlymple, the wealthy sculptor, and John Thorn as "English Jeff," a "yellow" cracksman.

The photography in this production is splendid, showing most complete interior settings and the cafe scene laid in Paris is especially noteworthy for its reality.

This second adventure of the girl criminal opens with the leaving of Braga, "The Terrible," who fearing Le Grand and "Toni the Rat" packs his grip and disappears just as the two above mentioned come to reap their vengeance on him. Dominica comes to see Braga and is told by the landlady that he has gone. The girl is very much taken back at this news as she is without money and realizes that she must put through some new job without the aid of Braga in order to support herself.

"English Jeff," a crook, who is "yellow" when cornered, is sitting in a cafe in Paris reading the account of one Sutton Darlymple, a rich American sculptor, who is owner of the famous "Rajah's Tunic," which is said to be incrusted in jewels worth a fortune. Dominica comes upon him and tells him of being left in the lurch by Braga. The crook shows her the story of Sutton Darlymple, and as they are planning on how to gain possession of the priceless robe the sculptor himself is seated at a nearby table and Dominica overhears him ask a friend if he knows of a model. Dominica tells "English Jeff" that she will apply for the position of a model, discover where the "Rajah's Tunic" is kept and let him into the house and they can get it.

The next morning Dominica goes to Sutton's apartments and applies for the position as model. The sculptor looks her over and tells her she will do and that she must pose in the nude for him. The girl refuses to do this and finally they come to an agreement that she will begin work the next morning and pose in a Grecian drapery.

After many days Dominica asks the sculptor to show her the famous tunic, but he refuses, telling her that he is through with her now. He goes in to dress so he may take the girl home and she, after searching, finds the tunic upstairs.

"English Jeff" had been told that if the girl failed to meet him he was to come to the house. Dominica goes down-stairs, slams the door to make the sculptor believe she has gone and then steals up-stairs where the tunic is kept. Darlymple comes out, and noticing the absence of the girl and thinking she has gone, starts to go out, when he sees footprints leading up-stairs. The girl had unknowingly stepped into some powdered clay which left her footprints behind her.

Darlymple pretends to go out and within a few minutes the girl lets "English Jeff" in. As the pair are about to leave the place the sculptor returns, lashes Jeff with a whip and then releases him.

He then turns to the shrinking Dominica, tells her that the tunic was covered with glass beads and not priceless jewels and threatens her with either prison or to pose in the nude as he asked her to. The girl through fear consents to pose as he wished.

American's "Mountain Mary"

Reviewed by Neil G. Caward.

VIVIAN RICH and Joseph Galbraith are featured in this two-reel American drama dealing with a mountain feud in Kentucky.

Photographically the production is above criticism, especial praise being due for the new and decidedly pleasing tint used in many of the interior scenes, which is a soft yellowish-green exceedingly restful to the eyes and at the same time of such a color as to bring out with clearness every detail of the scene in which it is used.

Vivian Rich, in the role of Mountain Mary, the heroine of the tale, has one of those happy, carefree, girlish parts in which she has so frequently appeared in the past, and Joseph Galbraith, as Ivan Doone, the artist, is also well cast, though he is not called upon to rise to great dramatic heights.

Hazen Doone and Giles Turell, grizzled old mountaineers, have long been at odds with each other, due to a feud that has existed for years between the two families. When Giles, wandering through the mountains, one day comes upon Hazen, he shoots him from ambush wounding

The home of the Turells.

Hazen and the latter with much pain manages to reach the shelter of his mountain home.

There he finds that Ivan, his son, who had been an art student in the city, has returned home. The young man vows to avenge the wound of his father, but the mother suggests a form of revenge more terrible to their foe than death, by hinting that Ivan might accomplish the ruination of Giles' dearly beloved daughter, Mountain Mary.

Deliberately the boy sets out to accomplish his mission. Shaving his beard he proceeds to pitch camp in the mountains not far from the Turell cabin and then sets up his easel and proceeds to paint the distant landscape and await results.

Later, Mountain Mary, skipping playfully amid the trees, discovers and finally approaches him. Though at first startled when Ivan attempts to address her, she gradually overcomes her bashfulness and soon the two become friends.

Within a week Ivan has been accepted as a visitor at the Turell cabin, and though the aged mountaineer sees something familiar in the young man's features, he does not recognize him as the son of his mortal enemy.

With the passing of time, Ivan awakens to a realization that he really loves the capricious Mary, whom he had deliberately set out to injure. Love for the girl triumphs over the desire to keep the promise made to his wounded father and Ivan determines to take Mary to the city with him, there to marry her. When a friend of Ivan's submits a picture of a beautiful woman for the purpose of having Ivan paint her portrait, Mary, who accidentally discovers the photograph, thinks Ivan has another sweetheart, and returning home she tells her father of Ivan's falseness.

In a rage, old Giles seizes his rifle and shoots Ivan. Instantly Mountain Mary's disappointment is forgotten and her love for Ivan reasserts itself. She hastily summons a doctor for the wounded man and at the point of her rifle compels her father to aid in caring for him.

Meanwhile Doone comes up, discovers his son has been wounded, and is about to attack Turell, when Mary covers him with her rifle and demands that a reconciliation take place and the feud be ended. Realizing at last that their children really love each other, the two old men rather reluctantly clasp hands and consent to be friends once more.

Vitagraph's "The Goddess"

Reviewed by Charles R. Condon

ALTHOUGH light comedy is the dominant factor in chapter eight of "The Goddess," this release of Vitagraph's continued photoplay introduces several important developments in Celestia's propaganda of commercial and social reformation. Through the efforts of some ambitious newspaper reporters, she meets Barclay and tries to enlist the powerful financier in her movement to make the country one big corporation, with each of its citizens stockholders. Another event which promises interesting complications for the future is Tommy Barclay's departure for the coal regions where he intends to wage war against his father's forces.

The opening of the first of the chapter's two reels shows a mass meeting in the coal fields of Pennsylvania. The discontented miners are gathered to decide whether to strike for better working conditions and more pay, or grind along like so many automatons under the despotic rule of Simon Kehr, a coal baron. Gunsdorf (Ned Finley), an agitator, moves the crowd to acts of violence, and, in spite of the efforts of Carson, a miner who realizes that the ultimate sufferers of the stringent conditions bound to result will be the men's wives and children, a strike is declared.

The scene shifts to the tenement home of the family with whom Celestia lives. Here Celestia is seen being interviewed by three reporters. Astonished at the girl's wild statements and impressed with her belief in her work of revolutionizing accepted conditions, financial and social, they induce her to accompany them to the home of Barclay, the multi-millionaire, desirous of knowing how he takes her "new religion," which will abolish monopolization and make all people equal.

Notwithstanding the fact that the financial triumvirate, of which Barclay is the head, is primarily responsible for Celestia's being brought up in heavenly seclusion, this is the first time that she has come face to face with her "guardians." Barclay hears Celestia's arguments and pleas, considers them for a time gravely, and finally agrees with her that the country converted into one big corporation in which each citizen will be a stockholder is the only solution for peace and contentment among the working class, and consents to aid her in any way that he can.

In the meantime, the miners have decided to appeal to Barclay to settle the strike. But Kehr, the coal magnate, reaches the financier first with his side of the story, and consequently Gunsdorf and Carson, representing the strikers, receive a cold reception and curt refusal. Tommy Barclay, about to leave home, having been disinherited by his father, overhears the argument in the hall, and impulsively enlists himself on the side of the miners. He returns with them to the coal fields, determined to fight his father's efforts to further monopolize industry.

Back in her tenement home, Celestia objects to Freddy's mother's scrubbing the floor, and puts "the Ferret," renowned and feared in the underworld, to domestic use. Her task of supervising his efforts are interrupted by the arrival of the Blackstone butler with a note from Mary Blackstone, Tommy's former sweetheart, requesting the goddess to make an address at a reception at her home. Celestia consents. The final scene is of the ballroom in the Blackstone home, where the assemblage expectantly awaits Celestia's arrival.

Pathe's "The Vanishing Man"

MYSTERY and thrills form the background of the latest release in Pathe's "The Romance of Elaine" series, which is entitled "The Vanishing Man," and features the popular players Pearl White, Lionel Barrymore and Creighton Hale, as have the other installments of this serial.

gray friar, this time is seen as a bewhiskered farmer, and it becomes more clearly evident that he is a real friend of Elaine's, while Del Mar, a foreign agent, is more plainly a villain rather than a friend.

Elaine on arriving at her country home is amazed to discover that one of her trunks is missing, and within a short time a farmer drives up with the missing trunk, which he says he found near the railroad track.

After the trunk had been removed and carried into the house, the farmer tosses Elaine an apple, as a token apparently of his friendship, but on biting into the apple she is amazed to discover its core has been hollowed out and a note inserted in the opening. The note conveys a hint that she had best open and examine the contents of the trunk herself.

She acts upon the advice, and is amazed to find in the tray of the trunk a model of the torpedo which Craig Kennedy had invented, and which had been concealed in the trunk in a previous episode by Elaine's maid.

Del Mar, the foreign investigator, comes to live in the house adjoining the one in which Elaine is to spend her summer vacation.

He learns that the trunk has just been delivered to a certain room upstairs and communicates with two assistants. One of the assistants climbs a tree and by lowering himself on a rope from one of the limbs is enabled to enter Elaine's room through a window and to search it thoroughly. He soon discovers the torpedo model which Elaine had concealed in the dressing table drawer and makes his escape with it.

The bewhiskered farmer, who had delivered Elaine's trunk, through a field glass sees the man leaving Elaine's home and sets out to overpower him. In the struggle which ensues the secret agent drops his revolver, and the farmer, finding himself overcome, seizes the weapon and demolishes the torpedo model by firing at it.

Meanwhile Del Mar is engaging in some mysterious operations under water and in a diving suit descends beneath the waters of a quiet pool.

Jameson and Elaine go for a spin in Elaine's car and while on the road and near the pool they discover a tube floating, which contains a note which states, "The chief has arrived safely." Much mystified the two depart.

Del Mar's assistant issues orders to his other accomplices to destroy by dynamite the first bridge over which Elaine is to pass with her car, this message being conveyed to the others by means of a heliograph.

The bewhiskered farmer reads the heliograph signal and sets out to stop Elaine if possible. Finding that he will be unable to overtake the speeding car, the bewhiskered farmer hastens toward the bridge which is soon to be blown up and there overpowers the man who is to fire the charge of powder a moment or two before Elain and Jameson cross the bridge.

Throwing the bewhiskered farmer to one side, Del Mar's assistant presses a button that sets off the charge and a moment later the bridge is blown to atoms, but Elaine and Jameson are safely on the other side.

O'Hara Talks of Comedy Films

Many prominent film men in the last few weeks have given their candid and unbiased opinions of the future of the one-reel picture and the prospects for the feature film of from four to five parts in length, but it took Charles C. O'Hara, president of the All Celtic Films, Inc., of New York City, creator of the series of pictures now released by the World Film entitled "The Adventures of Peaceful Rafferty," to tell his story as to what the future would be for the single reel comedy.

"The making of comedy films," he began, "is a very hard proposition, for invariably a producer can make two good ones and then for some reason unknown to him the third turns out bad. Now, some people blame the director, but the real fault never comes to light; it seems that fate plays an important part in the comedy producing field.

"One of the most essential things is the story. Once you have that end settled and placed in the hands of a capable director, there is no direct reason why you cannot get a good picture. Players of ability are also needed, and to get such players costs money, and big money at that.

"I sincerely believe that it is harder to make first-class comedies than to make a feature production, for the simple reason that a feature can be handled so as to get it over; by that I mean a director can introduce some current event, such as a big shipwreck, airship or train collision, and then again the name of a prominent star will carry it, even though the story in general be very bad. This has been demonstrated in several big features of late.

"A comedy picture, the kind of comedy films we are making, must be clean, humorous, and well acted and directed. It must also have a story with a plot interwoven throughout it. It must not drag or be padded. For that is one thing I won't stand for in pictures, and J. A. Fitzgerald, who has been with the All Celtic Company since its inception, is mighty particular in this respect, and anyone that has the good fortune to view one of the Rafferty films will find that my statements are correct."

A Knock at the Film Game

This week a new magazine, called Film Fun, makes its apearance on the news stands of the country, it being published by the Leslie-Judge Company and devoted, for the greater part, to the humor found in films, illustrated with scenes from comedy photoplays.

The cover bears a beautiful three-color portrait of Charlie Chaplin enjoying a look at the magazine; but all the attractiveness of the cover is killed for the real photoplay fan by an item that appears within the book reading as follows: "In those states which have larger city populations than California the number of movie patrons is even greater. Here is where the nickels and dimes of the poor go. What might constitute the weekly savings of many a poor family is eaten up by the movies. When to this is added other small amounts at the candy and tobacco stores, or at the saloon, it is not surprising that so many families never rise above a hand-to-mouth existence."

To the real film man the above article will probably prove the biggest joke in the whole book, and he'll get such a laugh out of it, that Film Fun will probably last as long as a snowball in Africa.

Selig Zoo Formally Opened

Los Angeles' newest show place and recreation spot, Selig Zoo Park, was thrown open to the public on Sunday, June 20. Between eight and nine thousand persons attended the formal opening and the grounds were crowded from noon until dusk. The new park is the old Wild Animal Farm, which, during the last year, has undergone a fairyland transformation at the hands of skilled landscape artists, architects and sculptors.

The Selig Zoo is said by experts to be the finest and best equipped in the United States and the thousands of visitors at the opening indicated that it is to become one of the most favored recreation spots in the vicinity of Los Angeles.

As a special attraction Sunday, there was a performance in the big wild animal arena by Carlos Bernardo with his pumas and leopards and another thrilling exhibition by Olga with her trained lions and tigers. Over where the elephant herd is "parked," there were two exhibitions, one by the quartet of trained pachyderms and a special performance by Anna May, the baby elephant, a remarkably intelligent animal.

Then there was a circus performance by the trained horses and the feeding of the wild animals, which kept a large crowd in front of the cages of the monster animal house, one of the big features of the place.

It takes hours to see all the 700 animals of the big collection. The zoo has twenty-four Bengal tigers alone, and other species of beasts and birds are represented in proporationately large numbers. In addition many rare species are represented, including sacred monkeys from India and three panda cat bears, valued at $20,000. The menagerie is valued at $300,000.

William N. Selig, under whose personal supervision the grounds were laid out and the animals segregated, was present throughout the day and took part in receiving the visitors and showing them about. Although he is very proud of the big wild animal exhibit, his especial pride is the collection of pheasants, which is declared to be one of the finest in the world. There are a number of very rare species and other rare birds gathered from all parts of the world.

"The Dimpled Duo"

Since the release of "Truly Rural Types," in which Edwin Thanhouser presented Lorraine Huling and Boyd Marshall, photoplay fans from everywhere are writing to ask about their dimples. Some want to know whether a spot of black cosmetic produced the dimple effect, and if so, etc., etc. Therefore, the photograph herewith is published, so that the anxious ones may have a "close-up" of the Huling and Marshall faces. It will be seen that the dimples are real, sure-enough "dents," natural blessings that know no make-up box.

New V-L-S-E Offices

The "Big Four" announce the establishment of two new branch offices to take care of the increasing V-L-S-E business in the middle West. Offices have been opened in Detroit, Michigan, in the Peter Smith building, and in Denver, Colorado, at 1031 7th street. The Detroit office is in charge of R. R. Hutton, and the Denver office will be presided over by Frank Harris.

The opening of these two new distributing points brings the total number of V-L-S-E branches up to sixteen; three times the number originally in the chain, when the company started releasing, less than three months ago.

Frank Daniels in "Crooky"

Frank Daniels, the comedian who has made thousands laugh during the days when he was the acknowledged king of the comic opera stage, will return to Broadway, this time in the silent drama, and will make his initial bow as a screen artist at the Vitagraph theater, in a picture heading the list of features. Mr. Daniels will be seen in a five-part comedy entitled "Crooky," written especially for him by Paul West, and produced by the Vitagraph Company under the direction of C. Jay Williams. "Crooky" is described as a comedy of errors and tells a story of a convict, who escapes from prison, and, meeting a wealthy ranch owner from the West, contrives to relieve him of all his possessions, including money, check book, clothes and name. "Crooky," under his alias, is taken in by a broker in dire need of money to consummate a big railroad deal. The broker, believing "Crooky" to be a rich man, introduces him to an old maid sister, who immediately proceeds to make love and the broker to casually make a "touch," until finally high society and its attendant duties becomes too much for the pseudo ranch owner, and he returns to prison of his own accord to find peace and quiet. "Crooky" is a part that allows Mr. Daniels full scope for the exercise of his inimitable talents and his mannerisms and nimble wit are made to register on the screen with telling effect. The performance of "Crooky" is typically Daniels and contains all the fun-making elements that have made his name one that spells clean, wholesome laughter in unlimited quantities. In Mr. Daniels' support will be found such well-known Vitagraph comedians as Charles Eldridge, Harry Morey, Edwina Robbins, Anna Laughlin and Evart Overton.

Binder Praises Selig Release

J. W. Binder, director department of finance of the National Board of Censorship, has written an unsolicited letter to J. A. Berst, vice president and general manager of the Selig Polyscope Company, complimenting the Selig Red Seal play, "The Millionaire Baby," released May 31. Mr. Binder writes: "Having no part in the censoring activities of the board, I don't see many pictures. I sat through a showing of 'The Millionaire Baby' yesterday, however, and I feel that I owe it to you to say how much I enjoyed the picture. The story is well told, there is no padding, and every scene is convincing. Your touch is everywhere apparent. I congratulate you." It is not often that an official of the National Board of Censorship is so enthused over a motion picture production that he takes his pen in hand and writes an enthusiastic recommendation about it.

Two Firms Consolidate

The Barker-Swan Service and the Advance Motion Picture Company, both of Chicago, have consolidated, and hereafter the entire business is to be conducted under the name of the Advance Motion Picture Company. The new officers are: C. W. Hutton, president; A. H. Shields, secretary; Edwin L. Barker, treasurer and general manager. Very shortly the studio and factory is to be enlarged in order to take care of the new business. In co-operation with some of the country's more important interests, Mr. Barker has created a series of motion pictures unlike any other pictures ever produced. Later this company will establish its own exchanges and will work directly with the exhibitors.

Powers' Equipment at San Francisco

A recent survey of the moving picture field in San Francisco indicates that there are ninety-six theaters at that place where moving pictures are featured, not counting those located at the Panama-Pacific International Exposition, or churches where pictures are shown. The projection equipment in these houses is divided as follows: Powers' machines, ninety-four (94), and this figure puts it ahead of its competitors. At the exposition grounds there are fifty-five machines in operation at the present time and of these thirty-three (33) are Powers' cameragraphs. Five other theaters are soon to be opened there and this will make a total of about one hundred and fifty theaters in San Francisco where motion pictures are shown.

Flinn Joins Lasky Staff

John C. Flinn, for the past three years dramatic reviewer and assistant dramatic editor of the New York Herald, has been engaged by the Jesse L. Lasky Feature Play Company as promotion and publicity representative and will assume his new duties within a week.

He is the second dramatic editor of a New York newspaper to join the Lasky staff, Hector Turnbull, dramatic editor of the New York Tribune, already having taken up scenario writing and literary work in the firm's studios at Hollywood, Cal., where he has become a member of the artistic department of the company.

Mr. Flinn comes of a family well known in newspaper work in this country. His father, John J. Flinn, for many years was a leader in journalism in Chicago and the middle West and now is prominent in Boston newspaper circles. Mr. Flinn's ability in handling the dramatic work of the New York Herald has been marked not only by a talent for criticism and an eye for news, but by a genuine literary capacity in the preparation of special articles on general and dramatic matters.

The Lasky company is by no means the first company to offer Mr. Flinn the charge of its publicity. He was approached by many concerns before determining to sever his newspaper connections.

Samuel Goldfish, treasurer and general manager of the Jesse L. Lasky Feature Play Company, who has just returned east from Hollywood, where Miss Geraldine Farrar has begun the preparation of the extraordinary plays which will be released by the Lasky company, announces that a regular press department has been instituted in Los Angeles, under the direction of Kenneth McGaffey, at one time press representative for Messrs. Comstock and Gest, and who has held important appointments of this order under most of the large theatrical firms in New York.

With these two press departments working in unison and with the recent notable advances made by the Lasky company, one feels that exhibitors will be better served than ever before.

Nashville to Have New Theater

William H. Wassman, Nashville's pioneer motion picture man, is preparing to erect what will be one of the finest and safest motion picture theaters in the country, and the first house in Nashville to be built from the ground up for this purpose. The building to be erected for Mr. Wassman will be on the west side of Sixth avenue, North, and just north of Church street, extending back to Capital boulevard. The plans, which are being prepared by Marr & Holman, architects, call for a three-story building that will be the last word in theater construction. It will be of reinforced concrete, steel and brick construction throughout.

Drosten Now a Director

The lure of the motion picture field and its co-industries has attracted another nationally prominent and successful business man to its ranks. Fred W. Drosten, for forty years the leading jeweler of St. Louis, president of the F. W. Drosten Jewelry Company and a director of the Franklin bank, is the most recent of the shrewd investors.

Mr. Drosten has just purchased a large block of stock of the Minusa Cine Products Company, makers of the famous Minusa Gold Fibre screen, and has become a member of the board of directors. The business of the Minusa company has increased so rapidly that expansion was necessary, and its force of employes has twice doubled during the last three months.

A Large Installation of Machines

The Grand Central Palace in New York City has been converted into three motion picture theaters, and so far as arrangement and comfort devices are concerned, these theaters are beyond any like amusement resorts in the world. The Palace is known as one of the largest convention halls in this country, and when it was decided to turn this immense place into a series of motion picture theaters, six of the latest Powers motion picture projecting machines were installed, and it is a matter of some note that this is the largest installation of this kind of machinery ever made under one roof. Of these six machines, four project the pictures from the rear of the screen and the other two from the front. The hall is lighted at all times and the pictures stand out with the greatest definition and clearness. Will C. Smith, recognized as one of the greatest experts in this country on anything pertaining to projection of pictures, had entire charge of the installation of these machines and he is receiving congratulations of the moving picture trade on his wonderful success. This is one of the oddest theaters in the world, inasmuch as in all three theaters there are different pictures, and one may wander from one to the other at will without extra charge. From time to time there are receptions held by noted film stars, and at these receptions you may have the opportunity of meeting and conversing with your favorite "screen" hero or heroine.

Fresh Air Motion Pictures

The White City, Chicago, has inaugurated a new picture play policy to take the place of big band organizations as the leading free attraction feature of the park. The operating booth and picture screen are out in the open Parisian Gardens which have accommodations for ten thousand people. The Essanay six-part production, "Indian Wars Re-fought by U. S. Army," distributed exclusively through the Central States by the W. H. Bell Feature Film Corporation, Chicago, marked the opening of the new idea advertised extensively as "Fresh Air 'Movies'." The initial ten days' engagement was declared a decided success.

Davidson for Vitagraph Picture

William E. Davidson, Columbia, '09, has been selected to play the lead in the Vitagraph picture of college life, "For the Honor of the Crew," now being produced, in four parts, under the direction of W. P. S. Earle, the author of the story. Mr. Davidson is admirably suited to portray a hero of the campus, and in the boat race scene, the big thrill of the picture, will be seen rowing in a prominent college crew. He has already established himself as a motion picture actor and has also won honorable mention in college plays and in vaudeville. Mr. Davidson will be supported by an all-star cast of Vitagraph players including Muriel Ostriche, James Morrison and Edward Elkas.

Clune To Produce Films

The Los Angeles studio acquired a few weeks ago by the Famous Players from the Fiction Company, of which Louis Joseph Vance was the president, has been purchased by W. H. Clune, one of the best known exhibitors of the Pacific Coast, and known to the trade throughout the entire United States. Lloyd Brown, manager of Mr. Clune's Auditorium theater, is to be manager of production of the new company, which is to be immediately installed in the newly purchased studio for the purpose of staging four and five big feature subjects per year, which will be given their first showing in the Clune houses and afterwards released to state rights buyers in other states.

It is expected that the first production will be begun within thirty days.

New Great Northern Picture

The great number of admirers of the inimitable royal actress, Betty Nansen, will shortly be afforded an unusual treat by seeing this prominent star of Europe's galaxy in a master production of the Great Northern Film Company, 110 West Fortieth street.

This is a most elaborate picturization of the drama entitled "A Revolutionary Wedding," by the famous Danish author, Sophus Michaelis, which, under the title "A Son of the People," had a long and successful run at the New Theater, New York. Critics, at the time, praised very highly the author's selection of an interesting variant of the ordinary drama of the French Revolution with its condemnation of aristocrats and its separation of true, loving hearts. With the superb acting of Betty Nansen, as Alaine de l'Etoile, and Valdemar Psilander, the monarch of the silent drama, as Marc Arron, the rich and beautiful settings of the Great Northern Film Company, this production should meet with great success wherever shown.

Coming Lasky Productions

The Jesse L. Lasky Feature Play Company announces that it has acquired the photodramatic rights for two of the greatest comedy successes ever produced on the American stage—"The Chorus Lady" and "The Travelling Salesman," both by James Forbes and both originally produced under the management of the late Henry B. Harris. The acquisition of the rights of these two comedies is in line with the determination of the Lasky Company always to supply for its share of the Paramount releases, a certain proportion of very high class humorous photoplays.

Bringing Rival to "Cabiria"

The Picture Playhouse Film Company, Inc., American representatives of the Pasquali Company, of Turin, Italy, have just secured for distribution on the American continent the new spectacular production by the Pasquali Company entitled "The Challenge of Barletta," which critics abroad have said is in the same class with "Cabiria," "The Last Days of Pompeii," and "Spartacus," all of which have been enthusiastically received in this country. The negative has been shipped from Turin and the Picture Playhouse people have announced that they will handle the feature in an unusually big way, first installing it in a Broadway theater in New York City for an all-summer run.

To Play in Essanay Films

The Newspaper Feature Film Company of Chicago, in co-operation with the Indiana Daily Times, of Indianapolis, is this week bringing to a close a popularity contest in the state of Indiana, by which five of Indiana's fairest daughters will be chosen as representatives of the state to go to the Essanay studios in Chicago, there to appear in a motion picture film. The beauties are being chosen by a popularity contest conducted through the newspaper, coupons clipped from the paper enabling the subscribers to cast a limited number of votes for their favorite in the contest, and much interest is being aroused, not alone in the selection of the young ladies, but also a wholesome interest in moving pictures in general.

Panchroma Lights Used in "Plunderer"

Since the release of "The Plunderer," a Fox feature, there has been much speculation as to the identity of the lights used in photographing the mining scenes, which were taken in the South. The Panchroma Twin-Arc lamp is responsible for the wonderful clearness and unique lighting effects obtained in these scenes, and to it, also, is due some of the credit for the production's big success, because unmistakable realism in such unusual scenes as these adds a great deal to the picture's strength, whereas bad lighting and murky backgrounds weaken a picture by reflecting upon the story's setting, whether the environment be that of a real mine or of a studio. The Panchroma Twin-Arc lamp, manufactured by Allison & Hadaway of 235 Fifth avenue, New York, weighs but nineteen pounds when folded up in its little suitcase-like carrier. They can be operated any place and in any position. Some time ago the Vitagraph Company took a couple of them down into the subway, and got some thrilling views of Broadway express trains traveling at full speed.

Brevities of the Business

Chicago exhibitors are becoming aware that there is a new live wire in town. His name is Hodupp and his initials are V. H. He hails from Syracuse, N. Y., and is now in charge of the Pathe exchange of the Windy City, having been promoted from his Syracuse position as a result of the phenomenal record he made there. With only 480 theaters in his territory, Manager Hodupp was able, ere leaving his Syracuse post, to book more than one theater out of every three in the entire territory, for the "Who Pays" series, and had an even better record as regards one of the other Pathe serials. Therefore other exchange managers in Chicago can readily realize some mighty vigorous competition is going to result from Mr. Hodupp's assuming charge of the Chicago office. It is his aim to make a similarly good record in his new post. He is genial, good-natured, full of pep and ginger, and if hustling and good fellowship count for anything bids fair to achieve his aim.

Ross & Company, printers, at 507 North Clark street, Chicago, who handle much of the business of local motion picture concerns, are presenting their friends with handsome souvenir knives, one face of the knife handle bearing the recipient's name, while the other face is adorned with a tasty design and the giver's name and address. The little souvenirs are evidently much appreciated by the recipients.

"Rafferty Stops the War," the initial release of the All-Celtic Film Company, made its debut in Chicago last week in one of the city's largest and most popular picture houses, the Orpheum. Charles C. O'Hara, president of the company, is writing the stories for the All-Celtic pictures, and J. A. Fitzgerald is producing them.

Thomas Icarra, Spanish bull fighter of international reputation, arrived in Los Angeles to arrange details for the bull fight scenes of the opera "Carmen," which is to be reproduced for motion picture purposes at the Stadium July 4, 5, 11, 12, by special arrangement between the 1915 General Committee and the Jesse L. Lasky Feature Plays Company. Icarra brought with him a muchly bejeweled toreador costume, valued at $5,000.

Whittier, Cal., did not like the motion picture play "Hypocrites." Whittier motion picture censors, Mrs. G. H. Flanders, C. W. Clayton and L. A. Pickering, condemned it. The city revoked the license of C. H. Keipp, motion picture proprietor in Whittier. Keipp has filed petition for writ of review in superior court.

Pretty Katheryn Adams, who made quite a hit in the leading female lead in "The Shooting of Dan McGrew," has been engaged by Marshall Farnum for a prominent role in his next feature production for Fox. Miss Adams would like to connect with a permanent stock position and if there is an enterprising film company desirous of obtaining the services of a handsome and talented leading woman here is the chance.

Having finished "The Trade Secret," Bill Haddock will soon begin his second feature for the Gotham Film Company, featuring Miss Betty Marshall. The name of this feature will be announced next week. The reason it is not announced this week is because the management is wavering between three former Broadway successes for which it holds the motion picture rights.

Harry Spingler, playing in "The Bondman" for the Fox Film Corporation, has just returned from a fishing trip on which he alleges he didn't capture the biggest fish of the crowd. Few piscatorial experts could thus restrain themselves.

The "Original Mrs. Tom Thumb" and her second husband, Count Magri, both members of the "Pee-wee Picture Players," celebrate today the thirtieth anniversary of their wedding, which took place in Holy Trinity Church. P. T. Barnum acted as best man.

Complete Record of Current Films

Believing the classification of film pictures by the nature of their subjects to be of greater importance to the exhibitor than classification by maker, MOTOGRAPHY has adopted this style in listing current films. Exhibitors are urged to make use of this convenient tabulation in making up their programs. Films will be listed as long in advance of their release dates as possible. Film manufacturers are requested to send us their bulletins as early as possible. Reasonable care is used, and the publishers cannot be responsible for errors.

Brief Stories of the Week's Film Releases

General Program

The Seventh Commandment—(THREE REELS)—KALEM—An all-star cast. Jennie Craig's husband deserts his wife and daughter because he is compelled to flee from the wrath of Amos Mitchell, who vows to make Craig pay a terrible price for the wrong he has caused. Years later Craig, a wealthy man and a candidate for the mayorality, hires Mitchell, whom he does not recognize, as his secretary and Mitchell in turn sends for Dorothy, offering her a position as Craig's stenographer. Jennie appears in the town and Dick Wallace, a reporter, who loves Dorothy, learns that she is blackmailing Craig. On the day of his election Craig, highly excited, drinks heavily and makes love to Dorothy, but the girl flees to her room. The reporter comes in just in time and tells Craig of his relationship to Dorothy. Jennie enters the house and the sight of her drives Mitchell mad. Wallace endeavors to comfort heart-broken Dorothy.

Road O' Strife—CHAPTER 13; OR "THE MAN WHO DID NOT DIE"—LUBIN—Professor Gershom returns to consciousness in the hospital and upon hearing of Alene's being freed from prison takes the silver cup from the office of the hospital and goes to her. He takes her to a lawyer's office and there tells them that Alene is the Princess of Urania. For further review, see page 67, this issue.

Hearst-Selig News Pictorial No. 51.—SELIG—JUNE 28—Admiral Benson, chief of naval operations, assists in laying keel for new transport at Philadelphia, Pa.; Leland Stanford, Jr., University sends crew to regatta at Poughkeepsie, N. Y.; crusade begun against short weight measure in New York; Hawaii delegation at fair hold carnival on lagoon in front of Fine Arts Building, San Francisco, Calif.; summer fashions designed by Lucile, Lady Duff Gordon; dynamite used to blow up hold of wrecked steamer, Iowa; Italian government calls out troops to protect Austrian embassy from crowds in street, Rome, Italy; flooded Missouri and Kaw rivers inundate low lying sections of Kansas City, Mo.; ex-President Taft speaks at advocates of world peace session at Philadelphia, Pa.; dreadnaughts Utah and Texas leave Brooklyn Navy Yard for yearly speed tests at sea.

Hearst-Selig News Pictorial No. 52—HEARST-SELIG—JULY 1—Yale defeats Harvard in races at New London, Conn.; Yale graduates return to campus at New Haven, Conn.; Harvard holds commencement exercises at Cambridge, Mass.; Salem girls spend week-end at Middleton, Mass.; older members of engineer corps detailed at home in London, Eng., for home defense; submarine Holland No. 9 lifted from water at Philadelphia; Selig Zoo thrown open to public at Los Angeles; novel stunts performed at night at Panama Exposition; Dario Resta wins 500-mile auto derby on new Chicago Speedway.

The Little Prospector—ESSANAY—JULY 2—G. M. Anderson featured. Broncho Billy has exhausted every foot of ground which might have held gold for them and he makes ready to strike new territory. Their little boy gets his hands on some nitro-glycerine. He has dreams of discovering some gold where his father could find none. He "plants" the explosive, but it doesn't go off. Then his sister re-sets it and it explodes in her face. She is knocked unconscious. The girl proves not to have been seriously injured. Out on the ground, by the newly blasted hole, lies the little son, sobbing because he has hurt his sister. The parents come out rejoicing over the girl's recovery and find the ground strewn with gold.

The Suffragette Sheriff—KALEM REISSUE—JULY 2—Alice Joyce and Carlyle Blackwell featured in this story of how Rattlesnake Bill is made by his wife to do all the household duties. They become irksome and gathering his cronies together he unfolds his plan, which is that he shall pretend to kill a man. His wife who is made sheriff, shall have to bring the supposed murderer to justice and old Judge Soft is advised of the plan. Unfortunately, however, Rattlesnake Bill's wife overhears the plot. The trial is a wierd affair and later the magistrate orders Bill hung. He is led to the scaffold and at the proper moment the trap is sprung. Down goes the unfortunate victim—not to eternity, but into a tank of ice-cold water installed below by the sheriff and her deputies.

The Midnight Limited—(AN EPISODE OF THE "HAZARDS OF HELEN" SERIES)—KALEM—JULY 3—Griffin foolishly displays a roll of bills and Wheeler and Walter, yeggmen, find the number of his berth and decide to enter it. Helen is a passenger on the train and by mistake Griffin gets into her berth and she takes the berth which Griffin's ticket calls for. Later on Wheeler's face appears in the opening of the raised window and the man foils Helen's attempt to shoot him. Climbing to the roof of the car, he is followed by Helen. The man escapes and shortly afterward Helen sees two men attack the postmaster at Brunett and recognizes them as her assailants. She overtakes them and pluckily engaged in a battle, when help arrives and the criminals are subdued and placed under arrest.

The Leather Goods Lady—ESSANAY—JULY 5—Beverly Bayne and Ben Hendricks, Jr., featured. Annie Whitlock, young and pretty, discouraged at her inability to work out of the department store grind, draws from the bank her savings—$25—and schemes a last big day. John Burke has procured means to acquire a limousine which he uses as a taxicab and Annie spends her last $14 to ride with him about town for two hours. She stops at suicide bridge and Burke, seeing her fall over the rail, rescues her and, of course, they are married—why not?

The Summoning Shot—BIOGRAPH—JULY 5—Harry Huskins and Isabel Rea featured. Carson and Deal, prospectors, make a strike. The old man shows his young partner a picture of his daughter and writes to her telling her to come at once. Benson, a half-wit, tries to jump the claim, but is warned off by Deal. He spies on Carson and in a lonely spot he holds up the man and hurls him down a cliff. Benson finds the note from his daughter saying that she will arrive that day and goes to the station to meet the girl, telling her that her father had been killed by his partner. She is so worked up that she takes his pistol and goes alone to the cabin, where she learns the true state of affairs. Benson is later decoyed into her father's room and captured.

A Studio Escape—(TWO REELS)—SELIG—JULY 5—Blanche Whitman tires of bohemian merrymaking and is escorted home by Collins, who endeavors to embrace her. David Rood, a newspaper man sees Blanche's distress. Blanche is engaged to sing a song or two at a studio affair, and as these affairs have been notorious, the police resolve to raid the place. A tip comes to the newspaper office and Rood is assigned the story, and he arrives just in time to see Beach endeavor to become familiar with Blanche. Blanche has had a chance to enter as a partner in a milliner store for $500. David tells Beach of Blanche's opportunity, and Beach sends Blanche a check for the amount.

The Revolt of Mr. Wiggs—VITAGRAPH—JULY 5—One day while Mr. Wiggs' wife is leading a suffragette parade on horseback a fortune teller forecasts his future, adding that he is a direct descendent of gladiators and fighters. He finally exclaims, "I am going to break up that parade if it is the last thing I do." He bargains with a farmer for a cage full of rats which he is about to drown. He stalks up to the grandstand and liberates the rodents amongst the women on the platform. The suffragettes run for a ladder leaning against a house and scramble up frantically. When he gets his wife home he hands her the broom and tells her to get to work. He bosses her around and with grim satisfaction smokes his pipe in peace.

The Smuggler's Ward—(Two Reels)—Biograph—July 6—Alan Hale, Gretchen Hartman and Vola Smith featured. After a ship is wrecked a little girl, a sole survivor, is rescued by a band of smugglers and adopted by the chieftain. Years later the waif, now a woman of great beauty, is persecuted by the attentions of Cutler, a member of the band. Jack Hardy, a secret service agent, and his sister, Alice, visit their aunt, who resides near the smugglers' lair, and Alice, seeing Cutler and Rita in a charming pose, takes a snapshot of them without being detected. Later the secret service men raid and capture the leaders of the band, and Rita, who has been forced to take part in the smuggling, is found by Mrs. Morton, Jack Hardy's aunt, and taken to her house, where she is revived. Cutler is released from custody and goes to Rita and demands money from her. Mrs. Morton dies and Jack and Alice take Rita to live with them and Jack falls in love with the girl. Alice, remembering the snapshot she had taken, is not surprised when Cutler comes in and denounces Rita as his faithless sweetheart. The rest of the smugglers, who have been released, come in and declare his statement false.

The Rajah's Tunic—(Two Reels)—Essanay—July 6—Braga has fled from Paris and left Dominica in the lurch. Dominica and "English Jeff," a cracksman, plan to steal from Darlymple, a sculptor, the "Rajah's Tunic," and Dominica seeks employment as model with him. Darlymple wants her to pose in the "altogether," but she refuses. The sculptor later catches the two and lashes Jeff with a whip and threatens Dominica with prison if she does not pose as he wishes, and she consents. For further review, see page 72, this issue.

Some Romance—Kalem—July 6—Featuring Ham and Bud, who are employed as street cleaners and become heroes by stopping Gwendoline's runaway steed and the girl loses her necklace in the excitement. Ham takes the necklace to the girl and he informs her that he is a nobleman in disguise. Bud comes into the house, but is shamelessly kicked out by Ham. Later Jack, the girl's sweetheart, is sniffed at with disdain by Gwendoline. The forlorn youth meets with Inspector McGinnis, who is looking for Ham, and when McGinnis blows his whistle Ham hastens to obey.

The Cannibal King—Lubin—July 6—Willie, who is penniless, sees an advertisement asking for extra people in a motion picture production entitled "The Cannibal's Bride." He secures the position and is all fixed up scandalously when he hears familiar voices and comes face to face with his hated rival and his adored one. All he wants is to get away and in so doing he upsets the cameraman and vaults the fence. Meanwhile Grace has been all upset by the experiences in the studio and when Willie dashes into the library of her home he interrupts a love scene and implores Grace to find a hiding place. He makes himself known to the girl and she hides him under several rugs. After the police have gone he proposes and is accepted.

The Coyote—Selig—July 6—The bank president's daughter and a carpenter's son are in love with each other at college. Five years later Rodney receives a letter which intimates that James Thorpe, the new president, will be there to witness the explosion of the "Coyote." Isobel comes with her father and asks Rodney to show her the "Coyote" tunnel before it is blown up. He does so and there is a landslide. Together, inside the tunnel, they take the marriage vows. However, they are rescued in the nick of time.

The Man From the Desert—(Three Reels)—Vitagraph—July 6—John Warrington and Richard Spencer, after having accumulated $40,000 in gold dust, decide to call it quits. Spencer prepares to start East with his half of the money and during the night robs Warrington, leaving him but a single shot in his revolver and a note saying that when he goes mad from thirst the quickest way is the gun. Years later Warrington, who was picked up by Bill, a wandering prospector, and who has struck it rich again, leaves for the East and in Chicago meets Spencer's daughter and falls deeply in love with her. He sends word to Bill to mail a piece of the note he had written to him years before to Spencer's address. After killing Spencer financially Warrington discovers that he is the father of the girl he loves. He finally reveals his identity and points to a big revolver telling Spencer that it is the easiest way. However, the sight of the girl softens his heart and he forgives his enemy.

It May Be You—Edison—July 7—Jack Kenwood, editor of the Clarion, finds business dull and goes out to get advertising. Every business house he calls on he sees the employer in a compromising position with his stenographer. Nothing daunted, the young man approaches the men on the subject of advertising, but they all turn him down. He goes to call on his sweetheart in her office and sees her in what he thinks to be a compromising position. He goes back to the office and writes a squib in the paper to the effect that the matter of employers paying more attention than is necessary to their stenographers has been brought to his attention and that the guilty one is to be exposed. The next morning the office of the Clarion is besieged with guilty employers who wish to contract for ads for a year and the girl explains that she had dropped her pencil and her employer had just stooped to pick it up as Jack had entered her office.

Dreamy Dud in King Koo Koo's Kingdom—Essanay—July 7—Cartoon by Wallace A. Carlson. Dud and Wag, his dog, visit Africa and are captured by some natives. The king gives his throne to Dud and finally he is offered the choice of all the dusky belles of the kingdom as a wife, but he refuses to choose any of them. The people are displeased, and he is to be captured and put into a kettle to be boiled for dinner. Then Dud wakes up.

The Frame-Up—(Two Reels)—Kalem—July 7—Marin Sais featured. Nellie indicates her preference for Pat Freeney and, determined to get the latter out of his way, Lewis, the "Frog," has him captured. At the same time Thompson, another crook, is captured and they are both put in jail. Freeney learns of the frame-up and orders Nellie to smuggle into the cell a revolver. Later, when in court, Freeney shoots at Lewis and escapes. Anna Lane, a special investigator, is assigned the case and she learns that Freeney and his girl go to Hennegan's dance hall and Anna and Podyne, a central office man, see them enter it that night. Later Lewis arrives and Freeney fires at him, hitting him squarely in the head. To their surprise Lewis is uninjured and Nellie confesses that she had removed the lead pellets and substituted soap. Freeney, mad with rage, is led away.

Hamlet—(Three Reels)—Knickerbocker—July 7—Hamlet is told by his friend Horatio of the ghost which watches over the battlements and resembles his dead father. Hamlet determines to watch for the ghost and does so. The ghost comes to him and discloses itself as his father, who had been murdered by his uncle, and asks Hamlet to avenge his death. Hamlet sets out to do so and feigns madness, especially in his conduct toward Ophelia, of whom he is enamored. Hamlet manages to kill the murderer of his father and escapes on a boat bound for England, but later unexpectedly returns to Denmark, where he finds that the ambassadors, through a letter from the king, have been ordered to kill him. Ophelia has destroyed herself and her brother seeks to kill Hamlet. After much contesting, Ohpelia's brother is killed, and through a letter forged by Hamlet the ambassadors are put to death.

The Adventure Hunter—Selig—July 7—Allen Darrel saves the life of Princess Griselda of Etruria. Prince Otto of Vosmark seeks the hand of the princess and when she refuses him her heart vows to go to war. Darrel overhears the plot, visits King Frederick and proposes to encase all the automobile trucks in steel in order to successfully combat the larger army of Prince Otto. Darrel slays Prince Otto in an exciting duel and wins the love of Princess Griselda.

The Black and White Snowball—Vitagraph—July 7—Sonny Jim hitching behind the grocery wagon of Herman, the grocer, sees his little colored friend in trouble. Sonny Jim hitches his dog, Toto, to the sled and everything goes fine until the dog sees a cat. Then he "throws in the clutch" and is off at top speed after the kitty. Lilly and Sonny Jim are thrown out and the dog trees the cat. On reaching the house Sonny says his little friend could never go in with a dirty face and washes it with snow. After helping the children off with their things, mother tells them to help themselves to cream tarts, and they certainly do.

The Beast—(Two Reels)—Lubin—July 7—Tremway is known to the villagers as "the beast." Will, from the city, is asked to sup with Tremway and his wife, who is a timid creature, and when he refuses to take part of the fowl which Tremway had ordered Laura to kill, he brings down the fisherman's hatred upon him. It is known to Will and everyone in the village that Tremway will wreak a terrible revenge. Finally they meet on the edge of a cliff and May, Will's fiance, arrives in a motor boat. Laura hurries to the scene and is seen by Will crossing ground soon to be rent by dynamite. He knocks Tremway senseless and dashes to rescue Laura. Tremway is bereft of his strength and "the beast" is conquered at last.

The Claim of Honor—BIOGRAPH—JULY 8—Augusta Anderson and Charles Perley featured. Count Armand, after hearing the American girl insulted by the prince regent of a foreign principality, dashes a glass of wine in his face. This, according to traditions, calls for atonement by suicide. Armand is saved from shooting himself by an American tourist, who urges him to leave the country. In the United States, a year later, the count meets the girl and is about to elope with her when he receives word that he has been pardoned. At the club he runs across his tourist friend who takes him to his home, and later is shown a picture and his friend says it is his wife. On the table lies a note of farewell to her husband. Armand tries to abstract it and goes to the girl and tells her that he knows all.

Hiding From the Law—(TWO REELS)—KALEM—JULY 8—Guy Coombs and Anna Nilsson featured. Estelle, when her husband goes to the mountains in search of health, determines to go upon the stage. Her husband meets Rita, the wife of Jacques, a brutal trapper, who regards their friendship with suspicion. One night Clifton finds the girl unconscious near his home and cares for her. Jacques in the meantime searches for his wife and finding her under Clifton's care attacks the surgeon, and is beaten down. Clifton flees with Rita and takes refuge in a cave. Estelle seeks to obtain a divorce and through Jacques, who receives $1,500 for his work, she succeeds in obtaining her freedom. The trapper is attacked and with his dying breath tells Clifton of what had taken place in the city and hastening back to the cave the surgeon imparts the news to the girl he loves.

A Night's Lodging—MINA—JULY 8—Jerry is unable to pay his board and manages to elude his landlady and escapes. He strolls into a cafe where, by means all his own, he gets some money and goes to a hotel to spend the evening. In his effort to locate the bathroom he gets into the room of a young couple and is chased out of there, and seeing a bathroom door, which is unlocked, he rushes in and there confronts an old maid, who promptly faints. Horrified, Jerry escapes down the fire escape and is nabbed by a squad of police and is last seen behind the bars.

Bertie's Stratagem—VITAGRAPH—JULY 8—Bertie is in love with Letty Grey, whose father opposes the match and who has forced her to submit to an engagement with Clarence Merkle, a gentleman of some forty summers. Bertie consults his cousin, Belle, who later fixes Bertie up as a fair young damsel and gets him introduced at the Grey home as her friend from the East. Merkle asks Bertie to elope with him and at Bertie's instigation writes a note to Grey telling him that his engagement to his daughter is all off. Grey tries to overtake the fleeing couple and is nearly run over by an auto, but is saved just in time by Bertie, who later succeeds in persuading the old man that he will make a suitable son-in-law for him.

Education—ESSANAY—JULY 8—Featuring Wallace Beery and Harry Dunkinson. Bub and Jim leave Maple Junction for college and pa goes to college to find out what "incidentals" mean, that loom so large in the bill. The boys show him a good time and ma concludes, after a week, she will hunt pa up. She arrives at college and is shocked and surprised. She takes the two boys away from the two young ladies to whom they had been making love. She brings the boys back to Maple Junction and concludes that "education" is too expensive to the sons of simple farmer folks.

A Timely Interception—BIOGRAPH REISSUE—JULY 9—Lillian Gish, Robert Harron and Lionel Barrymore featured. The old man has saved enough money to justify the marriage of his daughter and adopted son, when he receives word that his brother has lost his job and there is no money in the house. The wedding is postponed and he sends the money to his brother. An oil prospector discovers oil on the old man's land and goes away to form a syndicate. The old man's brother and boy go out to dig post holes and strike oil. The old man's son arrives and stops the transaction which the syndicate were trying to force the old man to sign. Later the great event takes place.

Eugene Aram—(FOUR REELS)—EDISON—JULY 9—Eugene Aram consents to join Richard Housman in robbing Geoffrey Lester. Though taking no part in the crime, which results in murder, nor receiving any of the stolen money, he is troubled by his conscience. Five years later he secures the position of schoolmaster in Grassdale, and becomes engaged to Madeline Lester, a niece of the murdered man. Geoffrey Lester's body is found in the cave where it was concealed by Eugene and Housman. Housman is accused of the murder, and to free himself puts the blame on the schoolmaster. He is convicted and condemned to death. The shock causes Madeline's death and, learning of this, Eugene goes to his execution calmly. For further review, see page 69, this issue.

Broncho Billy Well Repaid—ESSANAY—JULY 9—Featuring G. M. Anderson as Broncho Billy, who wins the hand of a sweet country girl, and later meets a girl from the city and falls in love with her. He goes to visit the girl in the city and finds her immensely wealthy, while she laughs at him when she sees him in his countryfied clothes. He returns to reclaim his old sweetheart, only to arrive in time to see her wedded to his rival.

Money, Money, Money—LUBIN—JULY 9—Roy, a bank clerk, and his pretty wife, May, live happily until Tom, a bachelor who is wealthy, and who has known the young couple since they were kids, gives them presents and entertains them in many ways. Roy unjustly assumes that Tom is winning his wife's heart. Later when he is entrusted with money, he decides to fake a robbery and lavish the money on May, since he thinks it is by money she can be held. He breaks into his own home where he finds May and Tom talking and leaves. He comes back later to find the money has been stolen. May and Tom convince him that it is he to whom May's love is given and he sees the truth and Tom hurries to the station to report the loss of the money. When he arrives at the station he finds it and the thief in charge of a policeman.

Love's Way—VITAGRAPH—JULY 9—Rand Cornwell, who does nothing but spend money and waste time, is arrested for flirting with Edith Havens and his father refuses to give bail the next morning. He is sentenced to thirty days. After the first bitterness, Rand realizes he got what he deserved and writes a very humble note to the girl, who answers it in person. He is released and goes to the girl's home and proposes to her. She tells him that if, at the end of a year, by his own efforts, he can make a home for a wife, he may get a wife for the home. When the year is up he sends for his father to attend his wedding. Father threatens disinheritance, but he replies to the effect that "He should worry," but Pa Cornwall attends the wedding and "comes across" like a good sport.

Old Offenders—BIOGRAPH—JULY 10—Featuring Charles West, Claire McDowell and Harry Carey. Crooked Joe, living with his wife and baby, refuses to become interested in a job with Norris, his former pal. Norris "frames" Joe and he is sent to prison and his wife leaves her baby on the doorstep of a wealthy family, who adopts the child and she grows to womanhood. Her love is won by Dick Ross, a society crook, who plans to steal the Barnato diamond necklace from Miss Norton. Joe, appointed butler in the Norton home, recognizes his daughter and when Miss Norton misses her necklace, which Dick had cleverly unclasped from about her neck, he steps forward and exposes Dick. He feels at last he has justified his claim to honesty, besides being happily re-united with his daughter.

The Counter Intrigue—ESSANAY—JULY 10—Sydney Ainsworth and Nell Craig featured. Gregory Ingram, who owns an opium smuggling business, when he learns that the secret service agents are on his trail, unloads the business on Everett Morgan, Heloise's husband, who does not suspect the character of the trade. Morgan is convicted and sent to prison, while Ingram makes love to Heloise, who suspects that he was guilty and openly encourages his love, while working with the secret service agents. Heloise convinces Ingram that she was glad to get rid of her husband and he is finally caught in her net and confesses his guilt, which is overheard by the secret service operators, and Ingram is sent to prison, while Morgan is set free.

The Brand of Cain—EDISON—JULY 10—The young prospector returns from Africa. Agatha, whom he is to marry, remarks about the scar upon his forehead. This reminds him of the crime he is guilty of, he having killed a fellow prospector in Africa, and he tells her that he cannot marry her as he is a murderer. Neil goes to a cabin in the mountains and there lives entirely alone. Fifteen years later two hunters stop at his cabin to rest and one of them tells of a peculiar experience he had in Africa. From the young man's story Neil learns that his crime was useless, and, overcome by the thought of his taking another's life needlessly, and his own years of loneliness as a result, the old hermit dies.

A Wild Ride—(An Episode of the "Hazards of Helen" Series)—Kalem—July 10—Reardon and Haley are enemies. Reardon vowing vengeance climbs aboard his engine, while Haley resumes his station. While climbing to the water tank Haley stumbles and falls. The shock leaves him temporarily demented. Helen passing between two box cars comes upon the insane fireman, who knocks her unconscious and then lashes his victim to the driving rod of the freight engine. Climbing into the cab Haley opens the throttle and the startled trainmen see the engine dashing down and wire ahead ordering the track to be cleared. Reardon thus becomes aware of the runaway and as it approaches the crossing where the engineer waits he makes a flying leap and boards the locomotive. The engineer brings the locomotive to a halt just in time to avoid crashing into the Hendon Express at Thomas Junction.

The New Valet—Lubin—July 10—With Billy Reeves, who answers an ad of Mr. Grouch, an invalid, to act as traveling companion and valet. Billy takes Mr. Grouch for a ride along the boardwalk. Bill spies a gay widow and he is fascinated by her smiles and lets the chair roll to the bottom of the walk with a crash. After the chair is righted they wend their way along the boardwalk and soon the widow again appears and tries to flirt with Billy. Billy's admiration turns cold when he sees a young girl making eyes at him. Mr. Grouch wants something to drink and Billy is not very long getting it. After pouring Mr. Grouch a drink, he accidentally squirts seltzer over the side of the boardwalk, much to the discomfort of a couple sitting below. Meanwhile Mr. Grouch has got on friendly terms with the widow and Billy, left to himself, falls to the sand, too exhausted to move.

Exhibitors—— are you buying hot air?

Is the article the salesman is trying to sell or rent you advertised in MOTOGRAPHY, the Motion Picture Trade Journal?

Would you rather book "Shot in the Foot" by the Fako Film Co., an irresponsible concern that does not advertise or would you in preference book some V. L. S. E., Mutual Masterpiece or other splendid features advertised in MOTOGRAPHY?

The advertised product is the reliable product. The manufacturers who consistently advertise their program or feature releases have a belief in their product. This belief must be well founded or they wouldn't spend their money to stand behind these films.

It is worth your while as a good showman to investigate the product of MOTOGRAPHY'S advertisers.

other city. His landlord, Simon Bassett, tries to collect the rent, and as Donald cannot pay, a heated argument ensues. An explosion in the building kills Bassett, and a strange accumulation of coincidences builds up a web of evidence against Barstow. Through the untiring efforts of Molly, Bassett's niece, and the clever detective work of Dunbar, the mystery is at last cleared up. The young illustrator's gratitude to Molly turns into love.

The Headliners—(TWO REELS)—RELIANCE—JULY 10.—Featuring Irene Hunt and George Walsh. In an emergency, Gabriel Castinara, a life guard swimmer, is engaged to do a diving stunt in a vaudeville theater. An Italian troupe is also featured at the theater. It includes Punelli, and his beautiful daughter, Beatrice, who sings and who is accompanied by Michael Busoni's mandolin. When Gabriel and Beatrice meet, they discover in each other old sweethearts back in Italy. Suddenly Busoni flings himself upon the life guard with murderous intent. The struggling men are separated. Then Gabriel tells of an ancient grudge which exists between them. Busoni plots Gabriel's death. But, through his own carelessness, the theater catches fire. Gabriel saves the girl and her old father. Michael loses his life.

They Ran For Mayor—ROYAL—JULY 10.—Father Schultz and Father Duffy are both running for mayor against Levi. Schultz's son, Frantz, is in love with Duffy's daughter, Maggie. Their parents are so bitter that they will not allow the young folks to speak. Both lose their constituents to Levi, and they unite against a common enemy. They rain bricks against the Levi platform. But, in the end, Levi is elected—and the defeated families are left upon a friendly basis.

Tracked Through the Snow—THANHOUSER — JULY 11. — Featuring Helen Badgley and Riley Chamberlin. An orphaned girl comes to live with her grandfather, an old miner in the West. The little girl becomes a favorite of the other miners, and changes her grandfather's bad temper. Two outlaws, lost in the storm, find their way to the old miner's cabin and are recognized by the little girl. She conceals a note in the dog's long hair, awaits her opportunity, and then permits the dog to escape. The dog carries the note to the sheriff's office and the posse arrives in time to capture the outlaws. The reward is given to the old miner, making up for the bad luck which he had had with his claim.

Near the park they see a poor drunken sot, and the girl with horror realizes it is her father. She tells her escort it is her father, and he brings him home. Nan thinks her newly found romance is over, for when they arrive home Jimmy will see her home life as it really is. She goes to her room and he starts to leave when he hears her sobbing, and he asks her if she will continue their walk. Later Jimmy asks her to marry him, and he is accepted.

The Child Needed a Mother—L-KO—JULY 7.—Papa decides that his sixteen-year-old Gwendolyn needs a mother, and goes out in the park to find one. Meantime Gwendolyn, who resembles a pachyderm, visits the same park in search of a mate. After all the resulting unpleasantries have subsided, papa finds he has no wife, and Gwendolyn no mamma or no husband. The cast includes Fatty Voss, Kitty Howe, and Hank Mann.

Baffles Aids Cupid—POWERS—JULY 8.—With Max Asher and Gale Henry. Detective Duck's old enemy, Lady Baffles, cleverly forces him to facilitate the marriage of two ardent lovers. This she does by stealing all the money from a bank under the temporary management of the great detective. All ends well for him, but Detective Duck determines that the daring Lady Baffles shall not slip through his fingers next time.

Souls in Pawn—(THREE REELS)—REX—JULY 8.—Featuring Ben Wilson. John Tremaine is in love with Violet Ellis, but she has given her heart to Dick Travers. In a fight Travers kills a man, and for the sake of the girl he loves Tremaine shoulders the crime. The boy is haunted by the thought of an innocent man suffering for a crime which he committed, and seeks solace in a drug. Sinking lower and lower Travis falls ill and in a delirium he confesses his guilt. His statements are corroborated and Tremaine is freed. Months after the death of Travis, Violet and Tremaine marry.

Copper—(TWO REELS)—IMP—JULY 9.—Bill and Bert, prosperous young brokers, are rivals for the hand of Florence, the daughter of wealthy parents. Bert calls at Bill's office, and his unwelcome attentions to Violet, the stenographer, causes a qaurrel between the two men. Bert, smarting under his defeat, plans to ruin Bill financially. Violet, suspicious of the tip her employer has received, changes the order, and as a result he makes a fortune. Bert tells Florence that Bill is ruined and she consents to marry him. As the story ends Violet and Bill embrace.

Lizzie Breaks into the Harem—NESTOR—JULY 9.—Cast with Victoria Ford, Eddie Lyons, and Lee Moran. Lizzie, the household drudge, resolves to pack her belongings and become the sultan's favorite. She has a hard time being admitted to the harem and once in she is anxious to be out. Jed, her faithful lover, arrives in Turkey, and when she sees him she is more than glad to join him in an attempt to escape. There is consternation and excitement, but they make their getaway.

The Violin Maker—VICTOR—JULY 9.—Pedro decides to make a special violin for his sweetheart, Marguerita, who has lately secured an engagement at the theater. He is overcome with jealousy when he sees Marguerita and the director together, and before their eyes breaks the violin. Some time later Pedro wanders into a cafe in the Latin quarter and is surprised to see Marguerita on the stage. The girl asks his forgiveness, and he is about to turn her aside when he notices she has the violin he had made for her and then broken. Struck by this evidence of devotion, he forgives her.

The Ulster Lass—(TWO REELS)—BISON—JULY 10.—Teddy O'Neill is in love with Eileen. Phadrig O'Tool, a rogue, is the leader of "The White Boys" gang. He and Red Barney plot the ruin of Teddy. O'Tool has one of his men plant treasonable papers in the thatch of the O'Neill cottage. Teddy is found guilty by the court and sentenced to be shot. Eileen is captured by the gang and imprisoned in a ruined abbey. She succeeds in escaping and informs the soldiers who return with her. A stiff fight follows and O'Tool is fatally wounded and before dying he confesses. The girl and the officers arrive at the prison just in time to save Teddy who is being prepared for execution.

Betty's Dream Hero—POWERS—JULY 10—Betty finds pleasure in solitude and while she is dreaming of her hero, she suddenly looks up and finds herself facing Bob. Both of them realize they have met their ideal. When war is declared Bob, in accordance with his convictions, goes to the North, and joins the Federal forces. Bob, doing spy duty, is chased by the Confederates, and takes refuge in Betty's room. The searchers take her word that he is not there and leave. Bob promises that when the war is over he will return for his little Southern Belle, while she tearfully bids her "dream-hero" a sad farewell.

Was She a Vampire—POWERS—JULY 10.—Enid returns from a convent. She is an innocent girl and is horrified to see that her father keeps a gambling house. Alfred Desmond loses heavily at the gambling resort, and commits suicide. A letter is found saying he has ended all because the gambler's daughter refuses to marry him. Enid under an assumed name meets Alfred's brother, Henry. She does not connect him with the dead youth, and they become engaged. After their marriage, Henry is told that she is the gambler's daughter, and is about to denounce her, but is won by her emotional appeal and takes her to his heart.

The Closing Chapter—(THREE REELS)—BIG U—JULY 11.—Hamilton Walker, an elderly widower, is living with his unmarried sister, Martha. He receives a letter from his daughter-in-law, appealing to him on behalf of his grandchild, Beulah, and telling him of her straitened circumstances. Sixteen years previous to this he had disinherited his son because of his marriage to Beulah's mother. Despite the objections of Martha, Walker provides for his granddaughter, and decides to change his will in favor of the child. This, his sister tries to prevent but she is not successful, and Beulah receives her rightful inheritance.

Martin Lowe, Fixer—LAEMMLE—JULY 11.—Helen and Harry are in love with each other, but the girl's father, Abner Stebbins, insists that his daughter marry Richard Willis, who, unknown to Abner, is addicted to the use of alcoholic beverages. The two youthful lovers seek out their mutual friend, Martin Lowe. They tell him their difficulty and he agrees to try and bring the girl's father around to their way of thinking. Martin tries to talk Stebbins into letting the two youngsters have their way, but in vain. Finally he tells Abner a seemingly true story wherein a father forces his daughter to marry a man who turns out to be a drunkard and abuses his wife. The story is so vivid that the father gives in.

Feature Programs

Metro

Always in the Way—(SIX REELS)—METRO—Dorothy is deprived of her home by her designing step-mother. She is adopted by a missionary couple who take her to Africa. At the age of fifteen her foster-parents are killed by the natives. The girl makes her way to New York and is followed by the young prospector, who is in love with her. Armstrong finally locates his sweetheart and learning of her true parentage from a former friend of her step-mother's, takes her to her father. The step-mother is denounced and Dorothy and her lover prepare for their marriage. For further review see page 71, this issue.

Mutual Masterpictures

The Flying Twins—(FOUR REELS)—THANHOUSER. — Madeline and Marion Fairbanks, the "Thanhouser Twins," appear as twin sisters who run away from home to join a circus, and later wish themselves back again. Fred Morris, the acrobat, who urges them to go with the circus, had fallen in love with their cousin and takes this means of securing revenge on the father of the twins, who objected to the match. Eventually the girls are restored to their parents. See review on page 68, this issue. N. G. C.

North American

The Web of Destiny—(TWO REELS)—(CHAPTER ELEVEN "THE DIAMOND FROM THE SKY")—AMERICAN—Arthur Stanley, with the money left by the train robber, is enabled to buy an oil well in California. Luke Lovell finds "The Diamond from the Sky" in the desert, but is bitten by a rattlesnake and tosses it aside, and ere he can return to hunt for it, the diamond is found by an Indian crossing the desert. Blair Stanley returns home and proposes to Esther, but the girl, hating him, determines to run away, assisted by Quabba, the hunchback. See review on page 68, this issue. N. G. C.

Paramount

The Dictator—(FIVE REELS)—FAMOUS PLAYERS—Featuring John Barrymore as Brooke Travers, a wealthy New Yorker, who has a fight with a taxicab chauffeur and in the rough and tumble which follows they go overboard of the dock and Travers thinks he has killed the man. He hastily embarks on a steamer that is sailing for Porto Banis. On board the steamer are Colonel Bowie, American consul to Porto Banos, who expects to become Dictator, and Lucy Sheridan, who is bound for the tropics to marry a missionary she has never seen. Travers falls in love with the girl and is hoodwinked into accepting the consular papers from Bowie. A certain Juanita, who has been waiting for Bowie to come ashore, rushes into the consulate and is disappointed to find that Travers is not the Bowie she wants to kill. The missionary, coming to meet his intended bride, is arrested by Duffy, a detective, as Brooke Travers, who is wanted heir to a vast estate. Travers lures Bowie ashore and is about to be shot by the enraged Campos when the United States battleship comes to his rescue.

Clarissa—(FIVE REELS)—FAMOUS PLAYERS—Featuring Hazel Dawn. Two stories run through the picture. In the opening we see Clarissa expressing her disapproval of marriages between elderly gentlemen and young girls and soon afterwards she receives a letter telling that her father had married his young stenographer. On her arrival home she welcomes her mother coolly, but soon grows very fond of her. Clarissa sees her mother in a burst of emotional gratitude after being saved from drowning by young Stephen Gambier, throw her arms around his neck and learns that her father had also been a witness. She goes and quickly snatches her step-mother's shawl and tells Stephen that he must pose as her fiance to quiet the suspicions of her father. Gambier is later arrested for the murder of a Mrs. Muir and all suspicion points to him, but Clarissa knowing of the presence of an insane man resolves to go to him and get him to confess the crime. She goes to the cabin alone and by a clever ruse gets an important letter which clears Gambier and rides back to the court in time to save his life.

Pathe

Pathe News No. 51—PATHE—JUNE 26—Scenes showing how the martial spirit that is gripping England finds expression in the activities of the people throughout the land; the replica of the Liberty Bell, mounted on a motor truck and accompanied by a procession of autos, cast for the Pennsylvania suffragists, starts from Sayre, Pa., on its vote winning tour of the state; 12,000 employes of the Willys-Overland Co., of Toledo, Ohio, go to see an exhibition ball game between the Detroit Tigers and New York Giants; heavy rains cause the Kansas rivers to overflow; bark L'Avenir, until the war broke out, a training vessel for Belgium naval cadets, but now a freighter, anchors in New York City harbor; on the 250th anniversary of the installation of the first mayor of New York, the city is presented with an official flag by the city of Amsterdam, Holland.

Straws in the Wind—(THREE REELS)—PATHE-BALBOA—Tom Nash refuses to make good his promise of marriage to Nellie Brill and leaves for the city and there becomes a member of a band of crooks. To escape disgrace the girl goes away from the village. John Nash, who loves Nellie, induces Mr. Brill to search for his daughter. Brill finds his daughter and she agrees to return with her father. Later she and John agree to forget the past and marry. Tom is being sought by the police and closely pursued by detectives reaches his old home. The detectives come up with him and when he tries to escape they shoot and kill him.

Pathe News No. 50—Pathe—June 23. —Sculptor John Flanagan puts the finishing touches on the medal of award which has been accepted for the Panama-Pacific exposition; automobile truck used as a jitney in the recent car strike in Chicago, slips off a bridge; pictures of the dreadnaughts Texas and Utah steaming down the East river, New York; a mass of people gather at Brooklyn Navy Yard to see the launching of the U. S. S. Arizona; scenes from the front.

The Fruit of Folly—(Three Reels)—Pathe—Eleventh episode in the "Who Pays?" series, featuring Ruth Roland and Henry King. Edgar Clay and his partner, Wallace Irwin, are both in dire financial peril, but see a way out by proving theft on Horace Stone. They have the confession of Stone's dead clerk in Mrs. Clay's private safe. Stone learns this and knowing that Isabel Clay is indebted to Mrs. Blake whom he has promised to marry, induces her to go to Isabel's apartment and secure the confession. But finding that Stone is planning to run away with another girl, she determines to hold the confession of his guilt over his head forever. Clay and his partner bring the chief of police to see the written confession. Isabel knows how it disappeared but fears to admit her indebtedness to Mrs. Blake. Unable to recover the money from Stone, Clay and Irwin face ruin. For further review see page 70, this issue.

World

The Face in the Moonlight—(Five Reels)—World—Featuring Robert Warwick in a double role. The story begins with a prologue dealing with the loves of Ambrose, an aristocrat, and Jeanne Mailloche, a peasant girl, who is deserted by Ambrose and he marries Alice de Fontennelles. Two sons are born, one of them being Jeanne's illegitimate child and the other the lawful heir of Ambrose and Alice. One son, Rabat, is brought up by a band of robbers and with a price on his head, and the other, Victor, becomes a captain in the king's army. Victor, whose father has confided to him that he has a step-brother somewhere, is engaged to Lucile, daughter of Munier, Ambrose's secretary, who, endeavoring to steal funds, becomes associated with Rabat. Through a variety of adventures, including a murder committed by Rabat, Victor is arrested and Lucille, while awaiting her lover in the diligence office, sees the face of Rabat in the moonlight and believes at first that Victor is the criminal. She brings proof to the authorities of the existence of Rabat and Victor is later pardoned while Rabat, after an interview with his brother, faces his fate with resignation and is executed.

Miscellaneous

Nothing But Love—Federal Film Co. —Smaltz, a henpecked husband, accompanied by his better half, goes to the park. Mrs. Smaltz falls asleep and he goes out in search of excitement. Meanwhile Mr. Fish, a cruel husband, and his pretty young wife seat themselves on the bench with the sleeping Mrs.

Smaltz and soon Fish is asleep. Smaltz meets Mrs. Fish and their other halves discover them making love. Smaltz takes Mrs. Fish into a fort and tries to hide by crawling into one of the cannons, but the sentry scares them out and they jump into a rowboat. After much excitement Smaltz and Mrs. Fish arrive on shore and into the waiting arms of a policeman.

The Press Agent Says—

That Helen Badgley, the Thanhouser Kidlet, has her own way of fascinating dogs, as she proved conclusively to every one in the New Rochelle studios the other day when they were rehearsing in "Helen Intervenes," released in the Mutual program. A bull dog which had gotten in from the streets, evidently bewildered by the glare of the arc lights, began tearing around the floor in angry circles. His barking so frightened members of the company that they fled hastily from the room. Suddenly the barking stopped and men and women stole back to find Helen Badgley sitting hugging the dog in her arms. "Poor darling, he is jus' frightened," she explained. Asked how she had calmed him, she said that it was simple enough to quiet a dog if you walked towards him, your hand outstretched with the palm of the hand turned towards the ground.

Zukor Announces Increased Output

AND OTHER IMPORTANT NEWS OF THE WEEK

BEGINNING on September 1, the output of the Famous Players Film Company and the Jesse L. Lasky Feature Play Company, both releasing through the Paramount program, will be greatly increased. The Famous Players Company from that date forward will issue forty-eight pictures per year, while the output of the Lasky Company will be increased from twenty-four subjects to thirty-six and the Morosco-Bosworth faction will furnish the remaining twenty subjects necessary to make up the complete Paramount program for the year.

The above information was gleaned by a representative of MOTOGRAPHY who caught Adolph Zukor in Chicago on Friday, July 2, as he was flitting from Los Angeles back to New York, where plans for the immense new studio of the Famous Players Company are awaiting his approval ere contracts are closed for the erection of the studio that is to rise at 225th street and Broadway, New York.

Mr. Zukor declares that the new studio will have a stage approximately 130x200 feet in size and that feature photoplays will be enacted there during those months of the year when the Famous Players stock companies are not at the California studios, which are also to be greatly enlarged and which will include a massive new studio, as soon as plans can be prepared and the work of erection commenced.

In addition to the New York and California studios Mr. Zukor declares a company headed by Mary Pickford will visit Japan sometime about January of 1916, for the purpose of filming "Madame Butterfly" in the actual locations amid which much of the story is laid. This picture completed, the Pickford company will journey to Egypt where another feature will be put on and where a second company, headed by Pauline Frederick, will be sent for the purpose of producing "Bella Donna" on the banks of the Nile, where much of that story is laid.

Arrangements are also under way for the filming of "Silver King" in England and Mr. Zukor on returning to New York will take up with the Department of State the matter of securing passports for his company and directors.

When questioned regarding the possibility of the Famous Players Company releasing tremendous spectacular productions along the line of those contemplated by a rival organization, recently formed, President Zukor declared that only such subjects as merit that kind of production will be undertaken, and that personally, he considers them hard to secure, and much prefers to handle the four and five-reel subjects in which famous stars of the legitimate stage may be featured in stories that can easily be told in that length of film.

Mr. Zukor seems of the opinion that the producer is taking long chances on hitting the public's fancy when undertaking the extremely long subjects and has much better chances for success by confining himself to shorter films, for the reason that in motion pictures the appeal is made to the eye alone and through the eye to the heart; whereas, on the legitimate stage, where tremendously big spectacles are prepared, not only the eye but the ear may be reached, the actors having in addition to pantomime and gestures and beautiful stage settings, wonderful variations in color and, above all, spoken lines, that appeal to the ear when aided by a proper musical accompaniment.

In discussing the travel subjects which the Paramount program has recently offered, Mr. Zukor stated that when the South American pictures are completed, the Paramount cameramen will visit other interesting spots in the world, since there seems to be a tremendous demand for the simple travelogue and an effort will be made to fulfill these needs. In passing, Mr. Zukor mentioned that many exhibitors had suggested one-reel comedies as worthy of attention by the Famous Players Company and that he had promised to investigate the demand throughout the United States for this particular type of film, also the possibilities of producing such pictures, though he was of the opinion at present that the expense of securing talented players and suitable vehicles for them would be so great as to almost prohibit their being made as one-reel subjects.

Big Stars and Plays Scheduled

Looking forward to the first six months through the eyes of the Metro board of directors, a period of active, determined, forceful effort is perceived.

Numerous stars and numerous plays have been procured by the very ambitious management of that concern during its four months of active activities, and the promise of the future is more than glowing.

Of the permanent Metro stars who are to be seen on that program, Francis X. Bushman, Marguerite Snow, Emily Stevens, Ann Murdock, Gail Kane, Madame Petrova, Ethel Barrymore, Mary Miles Minter, Florence Reed, Olive Wyndham, and Lois Meredith will be seen at intervals, in various well-known dramatic successes and fictional classics.

During the next fourteen weeks, Metro will release on its regular release dates, each Monday in the year, the following stars and plays:

July 12, Edward Connelly, in George Ade's story, "Marse Covington"; July 19, William Faversham and Jane Grey in Sir Gilbert Parker's "The Right of Way"; August 2, Dorothy Donnelly, in "The Sealed Valley"; July 26, Francis X. Bushman and Marguerite Snow, in John Drew's former success, "The Second in Command"; August 9, Madame Petrova, in "The Vampire," an original scenario; August 16, Ann Murdock, in "A Royal Family"; August 23, Edmund Breese, in "The Spell of the Yukon"; August 30, Ralph Herz and Lois Meredith, in "The Purple Lady"; September 6, Ethel Barrymore, in "The Shadow," her most recent stage success; September 13, Francis X. Bushman and Marguerite Snow, in "Richard Carvel"; September 20, Emily Stevens and Hamilton Gravel, in "The Liars"; September 27, Gail Kane, in "Her Great Match"; October 4, Madame Petrova, in "My Madonna"; October 11, Emmy Wehlan, in "When a Woman Loves," and then in weekly releases, the following great plays, "The Silent Voice," "Pigs in Clover," "Baccaret," "My Wife," "Barbara Fritchie," "The Bridge," "Once to Every Man," "Sky Farm," "Mississippi Bubble," "Once Come from Man," "Empty Pockets," "Rosemary for Remembrance" and other plays and novels.

The Metro directors will not increase their output, it having been decided to foster long runs and more attention to detail and not so many changes on the part of the exhibitor.

Berst Differs with Griffith

J. A. Berst, vice-president and general manager of the Selig Polyscope Company, differs with D. W. Griffith, who is quoted in a Chicago newspaper as stating that picture plays appearing in the better houses should be given the same freedom that is accorded to legitimate productions, and that the smaller houses should be the only subjects of censorship.

"This latest idea," said Mr. Berst in a recent interview, "is but another method of discrimination. Film productions should be freely shown in smaller theaters as well as the larger. If the discrimination as above outlined should be carried out, the enterprising manager of the smaller theater would be barred from presenting high class films.

"The films shown today in the large theater will have to be shown later in the smaller theater, and how are price limits to be drawn? There is the large theater in the small town which cannot hope to ask large prices.

"Take the Selig production of 'The Spoilers,' for example. Released over a year ago, this production is going right along crowding the theaters. There are but few motion picture productions that can prove the same successful record. If the film production were confined exclusively to high priced theaters, many intelligent and refined people, unable to afford $2 for a seat, would never have enjoyed the film. 'The Spoilers' has been shown and is yet showing in both the large and small theaters with admission prices graded according to the judgment of the various exhibitors. In this manner all the exhibitors and all the people profit.

"If Mr. Griffith is correctly quoted in making distinctions between censoring of picture plays appearing in the larger and the smaller theaters he will probably say certain persons should be permitted to view only censored pictures and others be permitted to see uncensored pictures. In other words, we should have class legislation.

"I repeat that the play that is decent should be shown to everybody, and if it is not decent it should not be shown to anybody."

Coming Vitagraph Productions

The Vitagraph Company, in a comprehensive search for the best in literature, adaptable to picturization for screen stories, has succeeded in securing a notable list of subjects by authors of international repute. Charles T. Dazey's "The Guilty Man," "Archibald Clavering Gunter's "The Surprises of an Empty Hotel," and Will M. Ritchney's "The Living Dead," are now ready for immediate production and when completed will be presented in five parts each and released as Blue Ribbon Features, the Vitagraph trade mark that stands for the last word in photoplay production. Each picture will be enacted by a specially selected cast, composed of artists of recognized ability peculiarly adapted to the portrayal of the characters assigned them. Among the other popular books and plays that have been selected, out of a list of twenty-five of the most prominent may be mentioned, "Blue Oceans' Daughter," "My Lady's Slipper," "The Fetters of Freedom," and "Sir Henry Morgan, Buccaneer," by Rev. Cyrus Townsend Brady; "Who's Who," by Richard Harding Davis; "Black Prince Carl," by Allan Campbell; "Glorious Betsy," by Rida Johnson Young; "The Money Mill," by Roy L. McCardell; "Tootles of Treasure Town," by Frederic Chapin; and many others.

Arbuckle at Work

Maclyn Arbuckle arrived in Los Angeles last week to star for Bosworth, Inc., in a filmization of "Home and Politics," his big vaudeville success. It was written by Mr. Arbuckle and Edgar A. Guest, famous for his Breakfast Table Column in the Detroit Free Press, and made a sensation on its production at Washington, D. C.

Bosworths have augmented the studio staff for rush work on "Home and Politics," as Mr. Arbuckle must be back in New York August 1 for rehearsals of "The New Henrietta," this season's all-star revival, with William H. Crane, Amelia Bingham, Mabel Taliaferro, Thomas W. Ross, and himself, which strikes for the coast a week later, opening in San Francisco, August 22, and then coming to Los Angeles. Frank Lloyd will direct the picture.

Injunction Denied Lasky

Justice Goff of the New York Supreme Court on Friday, July 2, denied the application of the Jesse L. Lasky Feature Play Company for two temporary injunctions against the Fox Film Corporation and Valeska Suratt. One of the injunctions asked that the Fox Film Corporation and Valeska Suratt be restrained from advertising or exhibiting "The Soul of Broadway" in which the actress starred, while the second asked that Miss Suratt be restrained from collecting the large sum of money which is due her under her contract.

In a memorandum accompanying his decision Justice Goff said: "While it is claimed by the plaintiff (the Jesse L. Lasky Feature Film Company, Inc.) that the services to be performed by the defendant Suratt were unique and extraordinary, it is interesting to note that she herself denies that they are of such character and asserts that her value as a star in a moving picture is absolutely unknown. She says she never has appeared as such, and that the estimate placed upon her services is purely speculative.

"In the absence of proof I will not hold that the services of a person engaged to pose before a camera in what is known as a photo-play are either unique or extraordinary or peculiar to the person posing. The camera does not and cannot reproduce the voice and expression of an individual, which would stamp with certainty the identity of the person. Indeed, it is not beyond the bounds of probability that for the benefit of the guileless public the enterprising manager could not in an emergency substitute one person to pose for another."

According to the plaintiff's statement Miss Suratt signed with the Lasky Company on October 29 last to appear for four weeks at a salary of $5,000. After accepting $500 in advance, the Lasky Corporation contended, she signed with the Fox Company, although a clause of the contract prohibited her from doing other motion picture work before the expiration of a year. The actress stated that she sent her manager, Joseph Pincus, to find out from Samuel Goldfish, treasurer of the Lasky Company, when her service would be in demand, and that Pincus was told that there was no suitable play ready. Miss Suratt asserted that she then called upon Mr. Goldfish, and the latter admitted he was at a loss to know what to do. She declares she offered to release the concern from its contract, and tendered the advance money she received; but the Lasky treasurer told her to keep it until she saw what she could do elsewhere.

Ready for San Francisco Convention

All thoughts are this week centered on San Francisco, where the fifth national convention of the Motion Picture Exhibitors' League of America opens on Monday, July 12, for what is predicted will be the greatest session of motion picture people ever convened in the United States.

As Motography goes to press, word is received that all arrangements are completed, exhibits in place, and everything ready for the opening of the convention. Demands for space in the exhibition hall have been unusually heavy this year, and those on the ground are of the belief that when the exposition opens, the visitor will be greeted by the largest and most varied display of devices and apparatus used in the motion picture industry that has ever been on exhibition. Miniature theaters are equipped with up-to-date apparatus and during the week every one of them will be occupied practically every moment of the day with advance showings of big productions.

Leaders in the motion picture industry in their respective lines will be present to address the convention, and in this respect the 1915 convention will undoubtedly excel all previous gatherings of a similar character, for, in the past, these national gatherings of exhibitors have been devoted more to discussions of censorship matters and the consideration of business conditions in certain parts of the country, than to addresses by the real leaders of the industry.

This year, however, the program announces that such notables as Governor Johnson of California; Mayor Rolfe of San Francisco; National President Marion S. Pearce; W. W. Hodkinson, president of the Paramount Pictures Corporation; D. W. Griffith, one of America's foremost producers; P. A. Powers and Colonel W. N. Selig are to address the gathering, and undoubtedly interest will be correspondingly great in the sessions.

The formal opening of the convention takes place at 10 a. m., Tuesday, July 13, when the formal addresses of welcome will be delivered by California's governor and San Francisco's mayor. Their addresses will be responded to by National President Marion S. Pearce, and following these the appointment of committees will occur. The afternon and evening of Tuesday will be devoted to the exposition salon, where the exhibits of the various trade accessories will be made and feature films shown.

On Wednesday, July 14, at 10 o'clock in the morning W. W. Hodkinson, of the Paramount Pictures Corporation, will deliver his address and the afternoon will be devoted to discussions and consideration of important matters scheduled to come before the convention. At four o'clock a sight seeing trip will start from the exposition building and the evening will be devoted to a special entertainment.

Thursday, July 15, D. W. Griffith will address the convention on "The Rise and Fall of Free Speech and Marion S. Pearce.

National President.

T. P. Finnigan,
First Vice President

Mark E. Cory,
Second Vice President.

Peter P. Jeup,
National Treasurer.

Personal Liberty in America," the speaker relating his experience with censorship in connection with "The Birth of a Nation," and his remarks undoubtedly will give the exhibitor a newer and wider viewpoint of this important matter. Ere adjourning the national officers for the ensuing year will be elected.

Thursday afternoon will be devoted to a visit to the Panama-Pacific International Exposition, this being official motion picture day. The entire afternoon and evening will be spent on the exposition ground where many special features have been arranged for the visitors.

Friday morning, following the business session, P. A. Powers and Colonel William N. Selig are scheduled to address the convention and at one o'clock an automobile parade of screen stars, who are to participate in the grand ball, will occur, followed by a luncheon at the Portola-Louvre. At three o'clock, in the exposition salon, the picture players will hold a reception, and the convention will be brought to a spectacular close at nine o'clock Friday evening with the opening of the grand ball, which is to be attended by the celebrated stars now on the Pacific Coast. Governor Johnson and Mayor Rolfe have arranged to lead the grand march and the ball, it is declared, will be one of the greatest affairs that has ever been held by representatives of the motion picture industry.

McIntosh Starts Next One

Burr McIntosh left for the west last week with a company of thirty people to make the next production for the Burr McIntosh Film Corporation. Old theater goers, as well as those of today, will be generally interested in this coming production of Bartley Campbell's famous play, "My Partner," which was universally recognized as the greatest melodrama up to the time it was first produced, by a remarkable cast of Stars at the Union Square theater, Tuesday evening, September 16, 1879. In the present production nothing has been spared to produce an ideal picture. Mr. McIntosh will visualize "Joe Saunders," the most popular part of the late Louis Aldrich. John Leach, acknowledged to be the best Chinaman on the stage today, will be the "Wing Lee" which made Charles T. Parsloe such a classic. Arthur Deagon, remembered for splendid work in "The Follies" of last year, will do some wonderful open-air stunts on the tight rope and rings in the mountains of California. Miss Marie Edith Wells, whose beauty and ability are assisting to make "The Builder of Bridges" so successful, will be "Mary Brandon," and Miss Ethel Mantell, Robert B. Mantell's attractive daughter, will be the ingenue. The production will be made by Eugene Sanger, a master in the art of producing high grade features.

Burr McIntosh.

"Colonel Carter of Cartersville," the masterpiece of the late F. Hopkinson Smith, in which Mr. McIntosh impersonates the title role, will be released through the World Film Corporation shortly.

Selig Discusses Future Releases

William N. Selig returned to Chicago, Monday, after a long business sojourn on the Pacific Coast. While in Los Angeles he was present at the formal opening of the Selig Jungle Zoo. He returned to Chicago in an enthusiastic frame of mind and believes that the Selig picture plays in course of production in California are away above the average.

"We are doing some big things out in California," said Mr. Selig. "Our forthcoming releases through V. L. S. E., Inc., are to be even more pretentious than those released up to date. The production of 'Mizpah,' written by Ella Wheeler Wilcox, is to be one of the most elaborate and spectacular productions ever prepared by the Selig Company. Miss Kathlyn Williams, Tyrone Power and other stars will take leading roles and many hundreds of supernumeraries will participate.

"We are doing some big things out in California," Babylon and other cities of Biblical days, and Colin Campbell, dean of our directing staff, is bending all his energies to making the production of 'Mizpah' correct in every detail.

"I am of the opinion that the exhibitors, and through them, the public, will be pleased when they see 'The Ne'er-Do-Well.' The scenes taken in Panama are very realistic and Rex Beach's story is presented in a convincing manner. I am confident that our forthcoming feature releases will prove worthy in every respect."

Advertising Men Impressed

One of the most impressive features of the entertainment programme arranged for the delegates to the great Chicago advertising convention was the special performance of D. W. Griffith's great photodrama, "The Birth of a Nation," at which nearly 2,000 delegates, their wives, families and friends were guests of Photoplay Magazine. The purpose in arranging this performance for the advertising delegates was to drive home to a class of men whose business is publicity the immensity of motion picture possibilities, the dramatic versatility of the film which is bounded only by man's imagination. It was also the desire of James R. Quirk, vice-president and general manager of Photoplay Magazine, and G. Ross Stewart, the advertising manager, to have important men of affairs witness in a body the masterful photodrama which has been the pet target for the censor, and thereby make of the world's big advertising men strong allies in aligning public opinion against the narrow and stupid censorship which is retarding the artistic advance of motion pictures in this country.

The Minusa Cine Products Company of St. Louis recently closed a contract with Geo. G. Gates of Havana, Cuba, for the territorial rights for that country. Samples of the various products of the Minusa Company have been sent him and he reports great success for the line, particularly the Gold Fibre, which is the Minusa's best grade screen.

Smalleys in Chicago

Those two talented directors and motion picture stars, Phillips Smalley and Lois Weber (in private life Mrs. Smalley), arrived in Chicago last week to begin the eight-reel Universal production "The Dumb Girl of Portici," in which the celebrated dancer, Madame Anna Pavlowa, is to be featured. Work on the big production began on Tuesday, July 6, on the site of the former Sans Souci park, at Cottage Grove and Sixty-first street. The past week has seen the erection of a big outdoor stage about midway between the former Sans Souci Casino and the present Midway Gardens, where Madame Pavlowa is now filling a dancing engagement. A representative of MOTOGRAPHY, who visited the Universal's temporary studio on Friday last, found the Smalleys busily engaged in superintending the erection of the big stage and preparing for the first set, which is to represent a Spanish prison of the middle ages. Mr. Smalley, big, forceful, shirt-sleeved and bare-headed was consulting the stage carpenters and electricians, while Mrs. Smalley paused long enough to greet the interviewer, though one could see at a glance that she was literally stealing the time from her work. The pretty, vivacious, pink-sweatered Mrs. Smalley is not only to do much of the directing of the production, but also is the author of the scenario from which the picture will be staged. Despite the fact that this little woman is famous the world over on account of her scenarios and productions (particularly those of "Hypocrites" and "Scandal"), she is modest, unassuming, and generous in her praise of others. In fact it was with the greatest difficulty that the interviewer could induce her to talk of her own accomplishments and plans for the future. In that respect both of the Smalleys are notable, for neither seems anxious for publicity or public homage. Mr. Smalley positively hides from newspaper interviewers and after hinting that "Mrs. Smalley can tell you all about that" he busies himself about other things and refuses to be cornered again.

Lois Weber

Phillips Smalley.

As a basis for her story Mrs. Smalley was given an exceedingly brief synopsis of the Auber grand opera in which Madame Pavlowa is to later appear, and had then to spend weeks in the larger libraries of the country thoroughly familiarizing herself with the remarkable period of history with which the story concerns itself. The Spanish Inquisition, in which time the greater portion of the story is laid, abounds in interesting events and offers a wealth of material for the scenario writer, particularly since so few films have had that particular period for a background. Undoubtedly the skillful pen of Mrs. Smalley will weave a wonderful tale out of the material which she has collected and the talented duo will make a still more wonderful screen story out of the basic tale. Although Madame Pavlowa is making her debut in films in this production, her splendid training in pantomime will enable her to rise to great heights in the intensely dramatic scenes of the story and "The Dumb Girl of Portici" will, upon its completion, become another great screen classic.

Amid the great number of players brought to Chicago by the Smalleys to support the star one finds Douglas Girard, a famous English player; Rupert Julian, Edna Maison, Laura Oakley and Betty Schade, all well known to Universal patrons; and Wadsworth Harris, once a leading man for the celebrated Modjeska. All of them are cast for strong roles and with such a galaxy of stars and two such noted directors in charge of the production MOTOGRAPHY feels perfectly safe in predicting that the film, upon its release, will prove one of the greatest ever screened by the Universal concern.

Bert Adler, manager of the Ft. Lee studios of the Universal organization, is in charge of the business management of the temporary Chicago studio, during the filming of that portion of the story which is to be taken in the Windy City, but, later, the entire company will be moved out to Universal City, where the production will be completed.

Smiley Joins World Forces

Joseph W. Smiley has journeyed up from the Lubin studio in Philadelphia to join the World Film forces. He is another addition of whom the World Film Corporation may be proud, as he has a list of many excellent features to his credit. His first picture will be "The Renegade." Miss Alice Brady, who has distinguished herself in "As Ye Sow" and "The Boss" for the World Film Corporation, will be starred. George Ralph is to play the title role, that of an American Indian, who has received the benefits of an eastern education. Claude Fleming, pleasantly remembered for his portrayal of Serge Palma in "Hearts in Exile," will play the young hero, Captain Lane.

"Hazel Kirke" for Pathe

The Whartons, Pathe producers, announce that they have secured the picture rights to "Hazel Kirke," the play made famous by Effie Ellsler and Charles W. Couldock, and which has been running continuously on the stage for twenty-five years. Edwin Arden, William Riley Hatch, and Creighton Hale will appear in the Wharton picturization.

William F. Russell

As Blair Stanley in the big prize photo novel, "The Diamond From the Sky," William F. Russell, or "Big Bill," as he is universally known, is adding another triumph to his already enviable list of successes. As the heavy in this master production, he is setting the pace for versatility, and they who have seen him in the sweet, lovable roles, are not surprised to note with what finesse he is handling the difficult portrayal of a gentleman villain.

William Russell.

He played his first engagement as a boy actor with Charles Hopper at Wallack's Theater in "Chimmie Fadden" at the age of eight. Was taken from the stage to be educated; graduated from Fordham College, then returned to the stage, playing with Ethel Barrymore in "Cousin Kate." Later supported such stars as Blanche Bates, Chauncey Olcott, and was leading man with the celebrated star Roselle Knott.

William Russell is an all-round athlete, graduated from Bernarr McFadden's Physical Culture School. Became one of the most proficient gentlemen boxers, and follows this sport, together with his general athletic training, whereby he is always in perfect physical condition. He was acclaimed by the world's famous sculptor, Earl Frazier, as being one of the most symmetrically built men within his acquaintance. Mr. Russell became associated with the motion picture industry four years ago, seeing at that time its growth and future and the many possibilities for out of door exercise and acting. He started with the Biograph Company, then joined the Thanhouser, subsequently he joined forces with Klaw & Erlanger features, and from there went with the Famous Players as leading man, supporting female stars.

Griffith Signs Tully Marshall

Tully Marshall, remembered as the "Hannock" in the late Clyde Fitch's last play, "The City," and also the weakling husband in "Paid in Full," together with many other featured or almost stellar roles, has been engaged by the D. W. Griffith coast forces to appear in a multiple reel production to be made at the Reliance-Majestic studios in Los Angeles, California.

The purchase is also announced of the motion picture rights to Horace Hazeltine's widely real novel, "The Sable Lorcha." Mr. Marshall is to have the principal role and Thomas Jefferson is also to be featured. Mr. Marshall has been known for years, not only as an actor who created vividly the most repulsive types of men and the most heroic, with equal ease, but as a stage director of great resource.

Preparations for the filming of "The Sable Lorcha" are already being made on an extensive scale by Director Lloyd Ingraham. A force of Chinamen is now at work close to the Reliance-Majestic studios constructing a Chinese street. Experiments are being made with craft. The scuttling of a ship is shown and it is not unlikely that at least a half dozen craft of various sort will be sunk before the proper effect is attained before the camera.

The Plot Thickens

The popular serial which has been running in Motography, or "The Seven Suffering Sisters," has been scenarioized by Gilson Willets, the famous author, and the story is to be filmed in connection with the tour of the Selig Exposition Flyer. Here in brief follows the story taken from the works of U. N. Derwood:

The seven sisters, accompanied by an irate Papa, board the Selig Flyer at Chicago. Just before the train leaves a handsome stranger approaches them and presents each girl with a package, which is to be delivered to Miss Kathlyn Williams, telling them that if they succeed in this mission that they will be able to marry the youths of their choice.

After many experiences the packages, all of which disappear, are placed safely in the hands of Miss Williams by the sisters, and now comes the question, What is in the seven packages? For a correct answer to this question, which will be solved on September 7, cash prizes are to be given. There are to be no conditions or no difficult rules in the solving of this question; there are seven mysterious packages, each sealed with seven seals, each package containing one-seventh of the whole. What do the seven packages contain?

War Interfered with Pictures

"All for Old Ireland," the first of a series of made-in-Ireland comedy dramas, which will be released by the Lubin Company July 14, was finished under the greatest of difficulties last August after the outbreak of the European war. Sidney Olcott, who directed the pictures, had the day before the declaration of war by Great Britain, taken a number of scenes on the Island of Valentia, where the great cable station connecting Ireland with America is located. Not having finished the required number of scenes, Olcott and his company returned from Killarney to the island the day war was declared, and found the island under martial law and photography absolutely forbidden. When it is considered that a number of natives, together with a lugger, manned by captain and crew, had been used, and in no way could be obtained again, a serious problem confronted the producer. Olcott, however, managed to find a way out of the difficulty. The scenes were finished fifty miles away without using the same people, and yet the manner of doing so defies detection even by experts. Olcott said he was not only glad but lucky to get back with any pictures at all, after the torch had been applied which set all Europe ablaze.

Opens Another Branch Office

The V. L. S. E. chain of offices has been augmented by the establishment of a branch at Los Angeles. This new office is located at 645 South Olive street, and is in charge of H. G. Naugle. Mr. Naugle is well known in film circles, and has been prominently identified with the feature end of the industry for the last several years.

Bert Adler Married

Bert Adler, manager of the Fort Lee Universal studio, Fort Lee, New Jersey, on Sunday, July 4, celebrated Independence Day by renouncing his own independence and swearing allegiance till death do them part to Miss Kitty Katz, well known in the New York film trade through her long period of service as secretary to General Manager Joe Brandt, of the Universal Film Manufacturing Company.

The wedding occurred at the Katz home in New York at 1:30 on Sunday. Mr. Adler having sped thither on a limited train from Chicago, where he is looking after the business management of the Universal Company in that city, headed by Philips Smalley and Lois Weber, who are producing a multiple reel feature with Madame Anna Pavlowa as the featured star. Rushing madly from the depot to the Katz home, Mr. Adler took the vows of matrimony, grabbed his bride, entered a taxi and hustled for the depot, where at 2:45 o'clock he again set out for Chicago, arriving there at 11 o'clock Monday morning, and plunging back into his duties as business manager of the temporary Chicago organization, where he will spend the next four or five weeks.

Immediately after the Chicago production is completed, Mr. and Mrs. Adler will return to New York, where a seven-room house at Palisade, near the Fort Lee studios, awaits their occupancy. A host of friends join with MOTOGRAPHY in wishing both these popular young people a long and happy life.

New Film Corporation

A brand new factor made its appearance in the film world last week when the Equitable Film Corporation was incorporated in the state of Virginia for two million dollars with Lewis J. Selznick as its New York representative; Felix Feist, until recently of Chicago, as its general manager; and Wall street interests as its backers.

It is understood that the Equitable intends to supply four big feature productions each week, thus enabling the exhibitor to secure all of his attractions from one concern. It is also rumored that production facilities for the Equitable will soon be arranged for on the Pacific Coast with Isador Bernstein in charge of that studio. Two studios in New York City are also declared to be under the control of the Equitable, one of them being the former Ramo studio at Flushing, all of which indicates that the Equitable will be a producing as well as a releasing organization.

Just what is to be the status of the World Film Corporation now that Lewis J. Selznick is New York representative of the Equitable, is rather uncertain, though it is rumored that later on the World Film will be merged with the Equitable, and highly probable that other outside manufacturers will be able to market their meritorious productions through the new distributing medium.

"The Heart of Lady Alaine"

The latest release of the Great Northern Film Company, 110 West Fortieth street, New York City, entitled "The Heart of Lady Alaine," with Betty Nansen, the distinguished and world-renowned royal actress, as Lady Alaine, is one which is righteously meriting the interest and enthusiasm of the public and exhibitors.

Miss Nansen has never had so excellent an opportunity to display her scintillating pantomimic skill, and her unique appeal has never been so manifest as in this adaptation of the drama, "A Revolutionary Wedding," by Sophus Michaelis, her compatriot, who so thoroughly comprehends the Norse temperament. That accounts, in part, for the excellent portrayal of the role of Lady Alaine, whose personality of spirit and fire, passion and devotion she most charmingly and appropriately interprets.

Opposite Miss Nansen, as Marc Arron, plays Valdemar Psilander, the monarch of the silent drama, and considering that "The Heart of Lady Alaine," has two of the world's greatest artists playing the principal characters, and supported by an all-star cast, this magnificent production is one of the greatest achievements of the Great Northern Film Company.

The stage version of this production was presented at the New Theater, New York City, and had a long and successful run.

Using Panchroma Lamps

Individuality of environment and the association of the surroundings with the action of the play is the watchword of the Vitagraph Company, which has recently leased for a term of years a brown-stone mansion for home studio purposes at 30 East Fiftieth street, New York. Here any number of changes can be rung in and the accompanying picture shows John T. Kelly and Mrs. Frances Connelly in a scene from "The Cave Man" in which Robert Edeson is the star. The picture shows Director Theodore Marson in action and a part of the scene being made. The illumination is furnished from a pair of Panchroma twin arc lamps furnished by Allison & Hadaway of New York.

Taking a picture by an Allison and Hadaway light.

Ramo Films, Inc., has just completed its studios in Flushing, L. I., which are able to accommodate four sets at a time, under artificial light (of which they have abundance) on their floor space of 60 x 140 feet), and fully equipped with plenty of scenery, drops, etc., dressing rooms sufficient to accommodate one hundred performers.

Henry B. Walthall

Henry Walthall's advent into photoplay work was a mere accident.

He was killing time at the Players' Club in New York in the summer of 1906 when a well known producer asked him where Jim Kirkwood was. He knew Kirkwood well and volunteered to find him. He received a horrible shock when Mrs. Kirkwood told him he was playing in motion pictures. Being determined to rescue him, he went to a photoplay studio and there found him in convict stripes.

Henry B. Walthall.

Walthall was introduced to David Griffith and he told him to get busy. "You are just the type I am looking for," he said. "But I don't want to act in motion pictures," Walthall replied. "Never mind what you want," he replied, "Get out into that ditch and get busy. After a while your daughter will bring your dinner to you." So his advent into this work was in a sewer.

Mr. Walthall's progress into the leading rank of photoplayers was no meteoric one. He was not a matinee idol whose good looks alone caused the public to make a hero of him. His rise was slow but sure and the kind that lasts. For Mr. Walthall worked. Presently the public began to notice him, and the question went from lip to lip, "Who is that man? He is a real actor."

Lead after lead he played in photoplays where his work was the feature of the production, and soon the public began to know Henry B. Walthall as one of the really great actors of the screen. When the public had indicated that he was the man they cared most to see, he was secured for Essanay by George K. Spoor. He is now working at the Essanay studios on a three-act feature to be released in July through the General Film Company. He will play both on the regular program and in the V. L. S. E. releases.

World Film Loses Foy

Justice Goff in the New York Supreme Court on Tuesday, June 29, denied an injunction asked by the World Film Corporation, restraining Eddie Foy, the musical comedy star, from carrying out his contract with the New York Motion Picture Company, alleging that Mr. Foy had arranged with it to appear in films of its manufacture, but later decided to accept an offer from a rival concern on account of a larger salary.

In rendering its decision the court briefly declared, "There is not sufficient evidence of a valid contract with the World Film Corporation to warrant the granting of an injunction restraining this defendant from carrying out the signed contract with the New York Motion Picture Corporation." Justice Goff reminded the attorneys for both sides that he had carefully gone over the arguments presented, and was not passing on the merits of the suit, but simply holding that no evidence of a legal contract binding the comedian to serve the World Film Corporation had been offered. As a result of the decision, Mr. Foy, accompanied by the seven little Foys, is to leave this week for Los Angeles where he will begin work under his contract with the New York Motion Picture Company.

Castles Begin Film Work

Oliver D. Bailey, one of the producers of "The Melting Pot," has finished casting and began work this week on the big five-reel feature in which Mr. and Mrs. Vernon Castle are to be starred by the Cort Film Corporation. The story of the picture which the Castles are to do will be unique in the annals of motion picture production. Locations have been secured at various Long Island shore resorts, where society gathers in the bathing and also in the hunting season. The beautiful estate of the Castles, with their kennels and stables, is to be used, as well as the former home of Mrs. Castle in New Rochelle.

A cast of unusual merit has been selected for the support of Mr. and Mrs. Castle and the list of extra people will include the names of a number of men and women who are well known in New York social circles. Advantage of every fine day out on Long Island will be taken and the exterior scenes will be pushed to the finish rapidly.

Pearce Re-Elected

At the annual meeting of the Maryland branch of the Motion Picture Exhibitors' League of America held at Bay Shore Park on Friday, June 25, Marion S. Pearce was unanimously re-elected president. The other officers chosen were: William Kalk, first vice-president; Thomas J. Bohannan, second vice-president; J. Howard Bennet, national vice-president; Frank H. Durkee, secretary, and Guy L. Wonders, treasurer. Delegates and alternates to the national convention in San Francisco were appointed, the delegation being uninstructed, and after some discussion, the league went on record as favoring the efficient work of Building Inspector Clarence Stubbs of Baltimore, and passed a resolution asking Mayor Preston to re-appoint him.

The business session was followed by a sea-shore dinner, which concluded with many entertainments, especially planned by the visiting exhibitors.

Changes at Balboa

Charles M. Peck, who has been vice-president and assistant general manager of the Balboa Amusement Producing Company at Long Beach, California, on June 29 resigned his position, and will later announce his new connection.

Will M. Ritchie, well known to scenario writers the country over, has been appointed chief scenario editor, by H. M. Horkheimer, president and general manager of the Balboa Company, and is now in full charge of the script department. The appointment was made by Mr. Horkheimer, because Mr. Ritchie is considered tremendously successful as a result of the scenario he prepared for the Balboa-Pathe "Who Pays?" series of films, which, as exhibitors know, has been heavily booked all over the United States.

Business Condition Good

The V. L. S. E. private publication, The Big Four Family, publishes each week charts showing the standing of each branch office in point of efficiency, in point of average price, and in point of collections, and a glance at these tables for the last six weeks indicates the present healthy condition of the motion picture industry.

With the coming of the warm weather, a sharp decrease in business is naturally to be expected, but the business of the branch offices of the "Big Four" in all sections of the country show increases. Even the southern offices show gains in the volume of business.

C. R. Seelye, assistant general manager of the V. L. S. E., who has just returned from a visit to the exhibitors in Pennsylvania and Maryland, states that he found business in that section of the country phenomenal for this time of the year, and that he is very well satisfied with the way "Big Four" productions are moving in this territory.

"Letters From Bugs to Gus"

Ring Lardner, the Chicago sporting editor, recently became famous by the Saturday Evening Post route. He wrote a series of articles, describing the baseball and other adventures of a mythical young fellow who made Gus his confidante. Bugs and Gus are the excuse for the making of the series of pictures to be released by the World Film Corporation, in which such stars of American baseball as Roger Bresnahan, Hans Wagner, Schulte, Garry Hermann and others will be seen. There is a love interest. Bugs makes up to a pretty girl, but she prefers a husky ball player. When Bugs, who has a wealthy parent, tries to play ball, the effects are comic in the extreme. He gets drunk at a dinner at which the baseball magnates are present. He has a dog whose antipathy to umpires is ferocious. There are real baseball scenes, with real players, plus the comedy element, and the quaintness of Ring Lardner's stories is absolutely rendered on the screen. The World Film anticipates that these intensely funny comedy films will go big anywhere and everywhere.

Gollos Features Going Big

President Aaron M. Gollos of the Photoplay Releasing Company, who recently filmed and is now exhibiting pictures of the Chicago Speedway Derby, is receiving many compliments on the quality of the picture, and an exceedingly large number of re-bookings on it.

As indicating the merit of the picture, as a box office attraction, we are reproducing herewith a letter received by Mr. Gollos from George H. Heines of the Auditorium theater at South Bend, Indiana. The letter reads as follows:

AUDITORIUM THEATER.
SOUTH BEND, IND.

MR. A. M. GOLLOS, Photoplay Releasing Company, Chicago, Ill.

Dear Sir:—I have played your Chicago Speedway Races today and I have 1655 seats, and I never did such a business and I never heard such compliments. You have the greatest Auto Races ever produced, and book them back to me for July 12th and 13th. Wire me if this date is O. K. Some drawing card.—Yours very truly, GEORGE H. HEINES.

All of the advertising regarding this Speedway picture appeared in MOTOGRAPHY, dated July 3, and Mr. Gollos is particularly well pleased over the tremendous results secured, as these results are directly traceable.

Important Announcement

The announcement recently made by the California Motion Picture Corporation that they had begun a film adaptation from Edward Sheldon's "Salvation Nell" has created unusual interest in Salvation Army circles throughout the United States. This is particularly true of the Army's headquarters at San Francisco, Oakland, and other large Pacific Coast cities in the near vicinity of the producing company's studio at San Rafael, where the interior sets for the big photoplay are now being filmed. No story has ever more poignantly impressed the public with the work that the Salvation Army is doing in the big cities of this country than Edward Sheldon's. Consequently the high officials of that organization are welcoming its forthcoming popularization on the motion picture screen.

"The assistance that the Salvation Army is offering us," said one of the officials of the California Corporation in a recent interview, "is to do much toward insuring us correct detail throughout in our filmization of 'Salvation Nell.' This pertains to costumes, organization, meetings and, in fact, everything relating to the army and its field of labor."

A Recent Change

The Asher interests and those of Alfred Hamburger, both well known Chicago exhibitors, on Friday of last week came to an understanding by which Mr. Hamburger secured full control of the former Asher house, the Panorama theater on Chicago's south side, and both the Ashers and Mr. Hamburger are mutually interested in the Terminal theater and the Ravenswood theater, which are in the course of construction on Chicago's north side.

McRae Now General Manager

Henry McRae, who has for a long time directed the famous Bison-101 Features, has succeeded H. P. Caulfield as general manager of Universal City and assumed the duties of his new position on Monday, July 5.

The Major Film Co., with Benj. F. Moffatt, president, is the latest addition to the local moving picture colony at Los Angeles. This company has secured a tract of 100 acres in Laurel canyon, adjoining Hollywood, in which there will be a variety of scenery. The first release is "The Trawlers," the prize story for which Collier's gave the author, J. B. Connolly, $2,500.

Spedon on Vacation (?)

Sam M. Spedon, the genial publicity promoter of the Vitagraph Company, left Tuesday, July 6, for an extended vacation trip. He will include in his itinerary, stopovers in Chicago, Salt Lake City and San Francisco, where he will spend two weeks, representing the Vitagraph Company at the Motion Picture Exhibitors' Convention and in introducing members of the western Vitagraph company, with studios at Santa Monica, California, to exhibitors of the East, in attendance at the convention. On the way back, he will visit the largest cities of the country and make himself acquainted with the local managers of V. L. S. E. branch offices. A leisurely trip, which will occupy about six weeks, will afford Mr. Spedon a breathing spell, which he calls his vacation, the first since his joining the Vitagraph Company as head of the publicity department, six years ago.

Newman's New Ticket Chopper

The Newman Manufacturing Company, with factories located at Cincinnati, Ohio, 101 Fourth avenue, New York City, and 108 West Lake street, Chicago, manufacturing a complete line of brass and bronze poster frames, easels, railings and theater fixtures of every description, is manufacturing a new, improved ticket chopper, on which patent has been applied for. This ticket chopper, as will be noticed in the illustration, is provided with an automatic rocking comb attachment, which automatically combs or feeds the tickets into the mutilating knives without the necessity of using any other outside method, such as a wire or tilting the chopper. The tickets, after passing through the mutilators, are perforated in a manner that makes it impossible for them to be used over again. Another noteworthy feature of the Newman chopper is the fact that an emergency door under lock and key has been provided, as will be noticed on cut. This is used in cases where the coin is accidentally dropped into the machine, and for oiling the machine when necessary. This is a big improvement over the old style way of removing the top in order to get into the box. Handles provided on the sides of the cabinet make it easily handled by one person. All trimmings are highly nickel plated. The Newman concern makes these choppers in mahogany or oak finish, or in solid brass. Its new 1915-1916 catalog, describing these choppers, lobby display frames and other theater products which it manufactures, will be mailed to any theater manager for the asking.

Sam Bernard Begins Work

Following the announcement recently made by the Famous Players' Film Company, to the effect that it had secured the exclusive motion picture services of the world-famous comedian, Sam Bernard, reputed to be the highest salaried comedian on the stage today, comes the statement that this celebrated star has now begun work before the camera in his initial screen appearance. The subject selected by the Famous Players for Mr. Bernard's introduction to the motion picture public is an original story, so constructed as to display to the utmost advantage the inimitable comedy talents of the star, entitled "Poor Schmaltz—Sam Bernard 'In Dutch.'"

Mr. Bernard will portray the role of a German wig-maker, who becomes the principal agent in a side-splitting series of comic adventures and humorous difficulties. The title "Poor Schmaltz" was selected because in the best known of his stage successes he bore this character-name. From the first few scenes already taken, Mr. Bernard has evidenced a remarkable adaptability to screen performance, and the directors of the Famous Players are confident that his first screen impersonation will be surprisingly effective.

May Donate Tract to Ince

To meet an unusual situation in Santa Monica and to prevent Thomas H. Ince and his $17,000-a-week motion picture payroll from leaving that vicinity, Mayor Thomas H. Dudley and Chief of Police E. E. Randall last week started a movement to donate a 16-acre tract to the company for "straight scenes."

Inceville, the New York Motion Picture camp in Santa Ynez canyon, affords no "flat scenes" space.

Therefore the company goes into Santa Monica to make such scenes. Frequently lawns of residences are used for these "sets." And too frequently, Ince complains, claims for damages have followed the use of private property.

Ince found this so increasingly expensive that he threatened to evacuate Inceville for some other location.

More than 200 of the company's actors and attaches live in the bay district and around Santa Monica and the city officials are trying to save the $17,000-a-week payroll, which is largely spent in Santa Monica.

Announcement by V-L-S-E

Announcement is made by the V. L. S. E. of the establishment of two new offices; one at Cincinnati, Ohio, and the other at Detroit, Michigan. The Cincinnati office will be in charge of R. S. Shrader, well-known in film circles throughout the middle West, and the Detroit office will be looked after by R. R. Hutton who has distinguished himself as a member of the new school of business boosters. With the opening of these two offices, the "Big Four" family has increased from six to sixteen branch offices in less than three months time, and every one of the sixteen offices now in operation, is working to capacity.

Signs with Knickerbocker

Mary Nash, the well-known character actress of the legitimate stage, has just signed a contract with Knickerbocker Star Features to appear in a strong character part in the three-reel release of August 4 on the regular program of the General Film Company.

Knickerbocker Star Features feels gratified in having secured the services of Miss Nash as she was hesitating between many offers. She finally decided that these features would offer her the best opportunity. The part in which she is to appear will depict the five ages of woman—ages of twenty, forty, fifty, sixty and eighty—and Miss Nash is known to be capable of successfully rendering this difficult role.

Martha Hedman in "The Cub"

Martha Hedman, the Swedish actress is to be starred in the William A. Brady photoplay founded on "The Cub," the very successful stage offering of a few years ago. World Film will shortly release the picture. Opposite Miss Hedman will play John Hines, who has been seen in many favorite offerings, playing minor roles. He has alert humor; eccentricity of gesture; and remarkable powers of facial expression. He is a real comedian; a loyal worker and has earned his promotion. Miss Hedman has a wonderful record of success attendant on hard plugging and perseverance in mastering an alien tongue. In Stockholm, she played in repertoire, her work being seen in plays by Strindberg, Donny, Hauptman. Her career in Sweden was of the most artistic and gratifying nature. Then she went to London, but couldn't speak English. So she plugged at the language for nine months for nine hours a day. Then she could speak it. Charles Frohman discovered her. He wanted a type for the role of Renee in Bernstein's "Attack." Along came Martha Hedman, letter of introduction in hand and Mr. Frohman chose her on sight for the part, from a score of applicants. She came to New York, played leads with John Mason and others; was lent by Mr. Frohman to Sir George Alexander for the St. James theater, London, and then recently came back to New York, and of course, has gone into pictures.

New Actors Arrive at Universal City

"Well met by moonlight, fair Titania," said Frank Keenan as he tipped his straw hat to Julia Dean at Universal City one day last week. "I should say sunlight, instead of moonlight," the well-known actor continued, "and such sunlight!—stronger and brighter than I have seen anywhere else."

"Same to you, Frank Keenan. Pardon me, won't you? I must be off to see Director Leonard, who is to go over a script with me."

Frank Keenan is bubbling over with enthusiasm about Universal City. He thinks it is the greatest place in the world for the player folk.

"Hello, Hobart, I'm real glad to see you." This to Hobart Bosworth, who had just finished his day's work as the old actor in "The Little Brother of the Rich," Joseph Medill Patterson's powerful story, which is being produced under the direction of Otis Turner.

"Well, Frank Keenan, this is a surprise. I haven't seen you in several years. Welcome to the Big U town!"

Julia Dean plunged right into her work—plunged is the right word, for there is nothing slow about this favorite actress—at Universal City last week, and is enjoying every minute of her time. Miss Dean is in love with the work. It has interested her more, she said, than anything she has done in years.

"What do I think of Universal City? Well, it would take me too long to tell you, so I'll just condense it into the one word that expresses it so thoroughly—wonderful."

Gotham's "A Trade Secret" Finished

In spite of the accident which almost proved fatal to Frederick De Belleville and Betty Marshall, the leading people in "A Trade Secret," the final scenes have been taken and the Gotham Exchange will have the picture on time. Fortunately all the scenes in which Miss Marshall appeared had been taken and

The explosion on the canal boat that nearly resulted in a tragedy.

Mr. De Belleville's injuries were so slight that he was able to take the final scenes with his shoulder in a plaster cast.

Brenton Head Censor Board

Cranston Brenton was last week elected as chairman of the National Board of Censors to succeed Frederic C. Howe, who recently resigned to devote more time to his duties as commissioner of emigration of the port of New York. Mr. Brenton, who is a graduate of Trinity College, Hartford, Connecticut, and for ten years following his graduation was professor of English and literature there, seems particularly fitted for the position to which he has been elected.

A statement issued by the National Board of Censorship reveals the fact that in the last year more than six thousand pictures have been viewed by it, running up into a total footage of more than ten thousand reels.

Learning Lip Movement

"We are trying a new scheme out at the studio," says Buckley Starkey. "Everybody is to take a course in lip movement. It is all right too, for its object is to train the silent drama actor to accentuate the movements of his lips, so that the audience can understand what he is saying. At present the public can always tell when the hero is taking leave. 'Goodbye' is easy, but we hope to make the less familiar lip movements understandible. Hamlet's soliloquy may then be available material for the 'movies'."

Fundamental Principles

TRANSFORMED BY FEATHERSTONE

PRINCIPLES AFFECTING CENSORSHIP.

IN view of the overshadowing importance of certain problems relating to the showing of motion pictures, we are going to digress for the moment from consideration of purely physical principles and make an effort to shed a little light in corners which seemingly are shrouded in darkness.

The darkness is not real, however, and is due to the law of contrast, which makes things which are only comparatively dark seem absolutely black in the presence of bright lights. Our eyes have been so blinded by the many-sided glory of the photoplay that many of us have neglected some comparatively unimportant angles of the situation, which, when viewed scientifically, and in the broad light of reason, are seen to be of the very highest consequence.

There is but one really threatening aspect of the problem, and that is that in the absence of positive knowledge, many may be induced to take sides for or against something, they know not what, and first we know, will be engaged in an old-fashioned "fight." For one of the duties of the photoplay is to make fights unfashionable, except the one everlasting fight for progress and the establishment of truth.

Is it to be a number two staging of the venerable squabble for "free trade" and "protection?" Can it be possible that after a full decade of motion picture enlightenment the world is still so stupid as to let narrow opinion divide it into parties on a matter about which everybody is fundamentally agreed? The only trouble is that the enlightenment has been coming in bunches, and we have swallowed it so greedily that our over-fed digestive apparatus is sadly overworked, to the detriment of our thinking apparatus.

In the first place, there are just two kinds of controversies. One is based on ignorance, and the other is based on injustice. Going one step further in the analysis, we find that injustice itself is also based on ignorance. Therefore we come face to face at the very start with a broad vindication of the picture, whose mission is to shatter ignorance by scattering enlightenment.

Of the first kind of controversies let it be said simply that sooner or later they turn into mutual struggles for the real prizes of life, but history's lessons should warn us against the long and senseless tragedies that have cursed mankind just as surely as one half-blind faction arrayed itself against another. With this kind of controversy we, of twentieth century opportunities, have no right to be associated.

The other kind is right here in our midst, and whether it be one-sided, two-sided or many-sided, will depend upon the quantity and distribution of the ignorance involved. Let us, therefore, enter as fully as possible into consideration of all of the facts, in the light of such laws (natural as well as man-made) as bear directly on the problem.

THE LAW OF PROGRESS.

There is one law that embraces all other laws, and is so simple and direct in its operation, that were we to become familiar with its applications, and the duties which it imposes, and live up to such knowledge, our mistakes and miseries would vanish into thin air. It is the law of progress.

Apparently it is not in any hurry so far as the human race is concerned, for did it not wait for over ten thousand years of so-called civilization for the advent of its greatest instrument—the motion picture? And yet how could anything on earth hurry any faster than the motion picture? And here is the whole trouble. Too much speed in a musty old world that is stupid and lazy and more than half asleep, not to mention the cripples and rheumatics and dope fiends, that obstruct the path of progress. We speak of mental and spiritual ailments, for which relief has heretofore been sought in the crutches of superstition, the medicinal poisons of materialism, and the narcotics of fanciful philosophies. Sorry to jolt you, gentlemen, but when you wake up and partake sufficiently of the much more wholesome "messages of light" which are spread all about you, you too will step into the middle of the path and join the procession.

THE LAW OF REACTION.

The next law sounds a warning to the over-zealous. It is the law of reaction. It has many other names and aspects, such as vibration, periodicity, etc., but its application here is that it controls progress, and makes it normal and (in the long run) fairly uniform, by causing any too intense activity to react against itself. Thus the world has swung from barbarism to civilization, which no sooner pierces the heights and depths of refinement than the reactions of degeneracy get in their deadly work, while some race of unrefined vandals rushes in to complete the destruction, burning libraries, wrecking works of art, and seemingly setting the clock of civilization back a thousand years.

Similarly, the struggle for personal liberty has had and is having an up and down time of it. Its cause, like the cause of civilization, is normal and just. It was born of struggles against injustice and oppression. Essentially it is a battle against positive or aggressive ignorance, while education is the general name for the war against negative or passive ignorance.

Battles may be lost or won without deciding the broad issues, and the battles lost in the campaign of education are only the penalties exacted by the law of reaction. They are usually due to over enthusiasm and thoughtlessness, but here, as with the application of man-made laws, "ignorance excuses no one."

Here, however, we soon discover that nature's code is even less familiar to the average citizen than are the statutes of his own state, hence violations are much more common, which only goes to prove that we generally obey the law if we know its requirements.

DANGER OF REACTION.

It is the law of reaction that imposes the penalties for infractions of the law of progress, and now let us see the immediate application to the matter of censorship. Very few of us are concerned, at least commercially, with the undisputed fact that the twenty-first century will profit from the motion pictures of the twentieth century, as will all future time. We are living in the year 1915, and some of us are engaged in business. Part of that business is to supply entertainment to the people, and we naturally try to make the supply meet the demand. We have found this particularly easy, and the people have paid well for what we have placed before them. In short, the time was ripe, and the business has expanded tremendously.

Like all good business men, we keep our finger on the pulse of our patrons, and are in the best position to know what the people want. We have found that they want the best and they want it well served, and, for the benefit of the censors, let us state that the most scrupulous among us have noted with gratification that the people do not hanker after what is unclean and unwholesome. Therefore, as business men only, we are bound to give them what they want, and we are also apparently giving them what is good for them.

Now this relatively satisfactory condition of affairs is accompanied by a most satisfactory business condition, which it behooves us to continue, and to safeguard if necessary against anything that may cause a reaction. The pessimist who scans the horizon looking for trouble doesn't have to use a telescope or a microscope. He can see the chief bugaboo with his naked eye. He doesn't even have to look for him, for he already feels his presence. In other words, the censor has butted into the motion picture game.

Surely, he does not know the game any better than those who play it as their daily task, and just as surely, by the law of averages, he is no wiser, or more moral, or more just, or considerate of the people's welfare than they to whom an all wise providence has committed the work of supplying the people's need.

ORIGIN OF THE CENSOR.

But let us see where the censor comes from, and why he is here, and then we may perchance forecast how soon we shall be rid of him. He is not only the crystallization of retrogression and stupidity, but the natural and logical agent of the law of reaction. He is called forth in the first instance by some infraction of the law of progress, as by the presentation of a film drama which has offended audiences who were too immature or otherwise unsuited to receive it, or which was unfortunately, unfit, through coarseness or indelicacy, for presentation to any audience. In such a case, though rare, the censor wraps about him the justification of righteousness, and whatever we may say about it he is going to stick around.

Also by the peculiar operation of the law of reaction, ostensibly looking for more justification, with the temptation to find it whether it exists or not.

But whether you consider him a nuisance or a criminal, or a disease, you cannot shake him off until all reason and excuse for his existence has been eliminated and the disturbed conditions have had a chance to readjust themselves.

Particularly futile would it be to take up arms against a principle because a few of its ignorant exponents have misapplied it. The more you antagonize an overzealous opponent who knows that there is at least some justice in his cause, the more bitter becomes his opposition, until misunderstandings multiply, and for the time at least there is loss rather than gain. Now that is hardly good business.

THE REASON FOR CENSORSHIP.

Is there then any occasion for censorship? As well ask, is there any need of law? The name is rather unfortunate, as it conveys the impression of undue strictness, but essentially it is only what is practiced constantly in all other "free and unrestricted" fields of endeavor. Freedom of the press is a constitutional prerogative, but there is no line more closely drawn than that which says what shall and what shall not appear in the newspapers and magazines. They have their different standards, it is true, and their own editors do most of the "censoring," but right here bear in mind that there is a vast difference between a paper or magazine with its long established and highly "censorious" family of readers, and a photoplay house whose manager has been in the business but a few months, and must take his "service" about as it is handed to him. The time has not yet arrived when we can safely leave it to the automatic balancing of supply and demand, and the history of the stage furnishes further proof of the difficulties which lie in the way of abolishing the censor entirely.

In its limited way dirty burlesque is a paying business, but should you have the indiscretion to put it in pictures and start it on the way of all films, surely you would not expect to escape a lot of well-merited protest. Such protests might be ill-defined, and the subtlety of the performance might be such that summary action by the police (under the law) would be difficult to justify, but you know very well that you simply couldn't get away with it, and so it isn't done.

But are we going to assume that there is no producer unscrupulous enough to cater to dirty dollars? When human nature went into the film game it presumably kept all of its usual characteristics, and it is only adding oil to the censor's torch to assume that all manufacturers are good and wise, and sufficiently self-critical in the interests of the public. The proposition seems ridiculous to the average citizen, who has been gouged and abused, and poisoned and generally maltreated by manufacturers of everything else under the sun, from bread and milk to trolley cars, in spite of laws such as the National Pure Food Law, until he feels himself a rather helpless unit of the dear public who must, on occasion, join with other units in self-defense.

ABUSES OF CENSORSHIP.

The abuses of censorship are too obvious to mention, and the narrow-minded simpleton who digs down into the dregs of his think tank for an excuse to condemn a work of art, may well be dispensed with, for the chances are ten to one that few, if any, would have even noticed the alleged offense against his distorted sense of propriety if he had not directed their attention while thousands of others with clean minds and clear vision would have derived inspiration and cheer from a wealth of other things that the purblind censor crowded off the screen when he applied his microscope to those which in his opinion were offensive or improper.

Volume XIV CHICAGO, JULY 17, 1915 Number 3

The Governor's Veto

NO, the heading of this note is not a film title; it refers to the fact that Governor Dunne of Illinois has refused to sanction state censorship. He put his veto on the censor bill of the secretary of state, July 5. The Chicago censors will go right on working as usual, without the complications of supervision by a new and superior body at the state capitol.

We wish we might shout victory with the death of this bill. But it is quite apparent that however great the influence of the film men's protests may have been, the governor's veto was based largely upon a desire to placate the "home rule" advocates of Chicago. That city has been contending vigorously for final jurisdiction over its public utilities and local industries, but without much success. Here lay an opportunity to give in gracefully to the municipal protest without much loss to the state machine.

So the governor's veto, while it disposes definitely of state censorship in Illinois, and so avoids the succession of a known evil by an unknown one, still leaves the Chicago censors in undisputed possession of the local field. It now remains to be seen whether, with the sword of Damocles removed, the municipal board will wax still more arbitrary and arrogant; or the possibility of a superior power will have a chastening and salutary effect, made more potent by the new public attitude toward censorship which the state campaign plainly revealed.

Of course every censorship bill or movement defeated is a victory, no matter what the means of defeat. So the governor's veto attached to the Illinois censor bill is a matter for rejoicing. Furthermore, we can be thankful, now that it is removed, that the bill was introduced and progressed as far as the governor's office. No other event has ever done so much to awaken a realization of the un-American character of the censorship principle. Never before have the editorial columns of our greatest newspapers given space to emphatic protest against this evil, which vies with the war spirit of Europe for the medal of barbarism.

In Illinois state censorship has failed. Let those associated in defense of freedom direct their attacks now against the Chicago censor board, the Ohio state board, the Pennsylvania censors, and all the other official marplots who would restrict the advance of civilization to their own narrow and pedantic ideals.

When it is possible to find men and women whose intelligence is omniscient and whose understanding is divine, in their hands we will place our censorship problem, if there be such a problem. But we cannot submit to arbitrary supervision at the hands of persons whose knowledge and understanding are generally even less than the human average.

The Fifth Annual Convention

OF COURSE, if every exhibitor in the country attended the fifth annual convention which starts Monday, July 12, at San Francisco, it would be the biggest meeting in the world. But some exhibitors will not take the time and trouble to attend a convention in their own town. It takes some days of valuable time, and some dollars of good money, to go to trade meetings; and that is enough to keep some people away from them.

It is hard to explain to a skeptic just how he gets a big return on a small investment by going at least to the annual convention of his trade. It is one of those things that do not need cold blooded, logical explaining. The big fellows in the business go almost to a man. It may be argued that they go because they are successful and can afford it; but more than one of them will say that he is successful partly, at least, because he does gather with his fellow workers on occasion.

One of the most successful business men of the century is quoted as saying "There's no man such a fool that I can't learn something from him." As reasonable beings we must all admit the truth of that principle. It follows then that a convention, which brings in contact the biggest and brightest minds of its industry, offers the greatest possible opportunity to each to learn something. And everything you learn about your business either makes you money or saves it—which is the same thing.

It is an absolute fact that every man—and woman—who attends the California convention will return knowing more about the business—even those who think they already know it all. It is a fact that attending conventions makes better exhibitors, to say nothing of better citizens and broader-minded men and women.

And going to California is, of course, a treat in itself. There are no dissenters on the subject of its attractiveness and interest. We have people who do not like New York, and those who do not enjoy the South, and even some misguided souls who do not care for Chicago; but they all like California. It is even something to be able to say "I have been to the Coast," as one would remark, casually "When I was in Europe." And of all the times in the world to visit California, this is emphatically it. This particular occasion literally bags three ducks with one shot—the convention, the exposition, and California itself. What exhibitor with an eye to value received will be able to resist this bargain?

We need not wish the fifth annual convention a big attendance, for it will surely get that. But we must urge upon those attending that they be not enticed away from the convention by the counter attractions of the exposition and the scenery. For this promises to be a master convention. Above all its forerunners it will offer to the assembled exhibitors a wealth of discourse by the great men of the industry. The program includes so many addresses by prominent manufacturers, producers, exchange men and exhibitors, that no one can complain of a stereotyped form of convention this time.

Successful men in any line are always worth listening to. When their success has been made in the same business that their hearers are engaged in, listening to them becomes a duty to oneself. We do not mean by this that the so-called "secret of success" will be revealed; for everyone knows that secret if he will but admit it. But there is a certain inspiration in the words of the man who has made good, even if he voices nothing but platitudes and trite aphorisms. And we know that the successful film men will do more than that. They may not tell the members of their audience how to go and do likewise, but they will tell them things about the film business that will come as new thoughts, or will re-awaken old and almost dormant ambitions and aspirations.

Every year we predict the "greatest convention ever held" until it sounds like an old story. But it isn't really old; it is perennially new. Every year's convention is the greatest ever held, for it is always a little better and bigger than its predecessor, and this fifth convention, so far from being an exception, has all the facilities for setting a pace that the sixth, seventh and eighth in succeeding years will have to work hard to beat.

Increases Capital Stock

The enormous increase in the business of The Gotham Film Company, Inc., combined with the carrying out of the big plans which were laid out at the inception of the company has caused the board of directors to authorize the increase of the capital stock to $1,000,000. This increase in capitalization will give the company such elasticity that it will be able to expand in a number of directions.

The company was primarily formed to release one picture a month, putting all its time upon the one production and making it the best that money and brains could produce, but the first release has made such a hit that it has been decided to gradually increase the output of the company until by October 1 it will be releasing one picture a week.

Just A Moment Please

Now comes July, the hottest month in all the year in which to take a vacation.

LOTS OF FUN.

From time to time the friends and foes of "The Birth of a Nation," now running at the Illinois theater, Chicago, are inclined to give not a little publicity, friendly and otherwise, to that screen classic, by their quips and puns sent to Bert Taylor's "Line-O'Type Or Two" in the Chicago Tribune. The latest to appear is the following, published on Monday, July 5:

Wo Sind Sie?

Sir: What has become of those hard riding junker warriors the w. k. von Kluck's Klan? You recall they figured prominently in that moving drama of destruction days in Belgium entitled "The Death of a Nation," or "Germans' March to the Sea." Mum.

SEVEN SUFFERING SISTERS

The World's Greatest Yarn.

By U. N. Derwood,

The World's Greatest Writer

Episode Ten—"The Mystery's Solution."

"Now that the last of your Seven Suffering Sisters has finished her sad tale," demanded "Di" Rector, the $1,000,000 per year producer of the Jumbo Film Corporation, "what are we going to do?" "Why, I thought Ed Itor, our scenario shark, was going to make a photoplay out of the stories," declared Sue Brette, the beautiful ingenue of the company, whose suggestion it was that the Seven Suffering Sisters should visit the Jumbo studios and relate their amazing adventures. "Rats! It's impossible to make a story out of that junk!" asserted Ed Itor, who felt the buck had been passed to him. "If I only had one-half of the bully stories that were swiped from this concern before your Seven Suffering Sisters were even heard of, I'd give 'Di' Rector such a bunch of scripts that he'd be acknowledged everywhere as the world's greatest producer the minute the stuff was released." "Why rave about stuff we haven't got?" inquired M. A. Gnate, the millionaire owner of the Jumbo studios. "Where do you suppose those scripts ever went to?" hazarded Sue, who herself felt aggrieved over the loss of the stolen manuscripts, since there had been several fat parts to her liking amid the stories that had disappeared. Before anyone could answer, the big outer door swung open and into the studio stepped none other than P. I. Inkerton, the night watchman of the Jumbo plant who had disappeared at the same time as the scripts. Cries of amazement assured Inkerton that his return had been noted. "For the love of Mike, where have you been, and what's happened to you?" shrieked "Di" Rector, who was the first to find his voice. "Just a minute till I get me breath, and I'll tell youse all about it," gasped Inkerton. "Believe me, it's some adventure."

(To be concluded next week.)

Yep, we're almost to the end of the "world's greatest yarn," long though it has taken us to get there, and we're almost as glad as you are to have reached it at last.

"The Secretary of Frivolous Affairs"

Reviewed by Neil G. Caward.

ALMOST everyone has read May Futrelle's story "The Secretary of Frivolous Affairs" which was published by the Bobbs-Merrill Company, and thoroughly enjoyed it. Now the American Film Manufacturing Company has adapted the story for a four-reel Mutual Master-Picture, scheduled for release on July 8, and with Harold Lockwood and May Allison in the leading roles the film story is just as interesting and satisfactory as was the novel.

Events that center about a house party at one of New York's wealthiest homes form the background for the story, a situation which permits of wonderful costuming and scenes of great depth and lavish splendor. The gowns worn by the women will certainly interest all theater patrons of the feminine sex, while the exciting and mysterious dramatic events that follow the continued disappearance of jewels worn by those attending the house party, will keep the interest of the men patrons at fever heat.

As the story begins we learn that Loulie and Josephine, sisters, are confronted with the necessity of earning their own living, as their father's estate has been dissipated. Loulie at once seeks employment as social secretary, inserting an ad in the paper, which falls under the eyes of Mrs. Hazard, a wealthy New Yorker, with Hap Hazard, a son, who is in love with Natalie, much too old for him, and a daughter, Laura, in love with a penniless author.

Loulie is told by Mrs. Hazard that her chief duty is to break up the match between Hap and Natalie and also between Laura and her author.

At a house party given by Mrs. Hazard, the guests find themselves losing valuable jewels and one day suspicion falls upon Loulie, though Mrs. Hazard remains steadfast in her belief of the girl's innocence, while Hap indignantly resents the accusation made by Natalie, his sweetheart.

A few hours later Natalie loses another jewel and suspicion points again toward Loulie. Later the police arrive with Winthrop, Laura's intended, in their grasp, he having been arrested because his motor boat had been wandering over the lake on lonely trips and suspicion had been aroused that the thefts were being committed along the shore by someone who traveled in a motor boat.

Things look black for Winthrop when the police discover a number of jewels in his safe. The author explains that they are heirlooms left by his mother, a statement which is greeted with laughter by the police.

That night at the Hazard home the thieves are busy again, jewels disappearing and paintings in the art gallery being removed from their frames.

Loulie, aroused by suspicious noises, slips into a flimsy dressing gown and goes to investigate. Surprising the thieves at work, she is boldly kidnaped and lugged away, dropping her slippers as she is being loaded into a wagon, in which the thieves convey her to a lonely cabin many miles away.

The Hazard household is at once aroused, and Hap, half dressed, sets out on the trail of the social secretary, who has disappeared. Tracing her by means of the dropped slippers, he finally discovers the cabin in which she is imprisoned, but from which she has escaped, after shooting one of her jailers. While Hap is investigating other thieves appear and soon Hap and the police are able to capture the entire party.

Hap finds Loulie on the bench where she has fallen in a swoon and carries her tenderly back home. No sooner has he reached the library of his own residence than a noise in the art gallery summons him thither and there he finds Thomas, the new footman, and Duc de Trouville rolling on the floor in a terrific struggle. Hap goes to the rescue of the footman just as the nobleman is about to stab him with a knife. The struggle over and Trouville bound, the footman reveals himself as an insurance detective on the trail of the jewel thieves and declares that the Duc de Trouville is the leader of the band, while Natalie, the girl whom Hap had loved, is in reality Mrs. Cutler, also a jewel thief. Both are arrested and removed to safer quarters.

Of course, all suspicion is lifted from Winthrop, the author, and he and Laura eventually win Mrs. Hazard's consent to their marriage. The social secretary completes her mission, yielding to the pleas of Hap that she marry him, and as the picture ends, their lips meet in a bethrothal kiss.

Essanay's "Jane of the Soil"

Reviewed by Neil G. Caward.

A MELODRAMATIC love story entitled "Jane of the Soil" and featuring Lillian Drew, Richard C. Travers and Edmond F. Cobb, will be the Essanay release of Saturday, July 17. It is well produced, splendidly photographed and capably enacted, the story being one that will hold the average theater patron's interest to the very end. Though at certain places rather disconnected, it undoubtedly will get over in a satisfactory manner.

It is filmed in the Tennessee mountains, and has as its central figure an ignorant but bewitchingly pretty mountain girl, whose parents are desirous of sending her away to school that she may later in life rise to a position higher than that which her parents have enjoyed.

Jane, the mountain maid, has no inclination or desire to receive an education and vigorously protests when her father is about to bundle her off to school. At length she consents to leave the matter to chance and offers to shake dice with her father, with the understanding that if she loses she will willingly depart for the seminary.

Needless to say, the father wins, and Jane goes to college where she meets John Doyle, a romantic young city chap, who is at once struck by her beauty, and the two fall in love.

On returning home during the summer vacation she accidentally encounters John's worthless brother, Ralph, who comes to her father's farm in search of work, after failing in several attempts at a business career.

Ralph tries to pay Jane certain attentions and the girl, disliking him, resents all his overtures. When one day Ralph attacks her when they are alone together, she grabs his arm, accidentally discharging a revolver he holds in his hand and wounding him. Believing that she has killed him, she departs hurriedly for home frightened at the accidental tragedy.

Later she meets John, but when he attempts to resume again the love begun at college she tells him she is not worthy to be his wife since she has murdered a man.

Ralph, it transpires, has not been killed, but only badly wounded, resulting in his mind being seriously impaired, so that for weeks he rambles through the mountains as a veritable wild-man.

John and Ralph's other relatives are much distressed over his mysterious disappearance and institute a search for him, aided by newspaper publicity concerning the disappearance.

As a result of the wide notoriety the case receives, Ralph is found roaming in the mountains by the sheriff of a nearby town, taken to the county jail, and word sent to his relatives that a man closely resembling the missing Ralph has been found.

John hastens to visit the man believed to be his brother and on arriving at the village learns that the prisoner has strangely escaped and gone back to the mountains. All night John and the sheriff search for the missing man without avail, and as morning dawns John enters a hut in which he finds Jane, who had sought shelter there when she had been chased by the wild-man, who surprises her by being very much alive though she is confident she killed him some weeks before.

Ralph regains his memory.

While John and she are discussing the matter, Ralph comes plunging into the hut and attacks his brother. In the struggle which ensues Ralph is roughly handled, and the physical shock he undergoes results in restoring his mind once more to its normal condition. He recognizes his brother and the girl with whom he had been infatuated. Finding that she is not a murderess, Jane willingly consents to renew her engagement with John, so the story ends happily.

Lillian Drew, who enacts the role of Jane, is both charming and convincing in all the scenes, while Richard C. Travers is well cast as John, and Edwin F. Cobb, a newcomer to the Essanay Company, does splendid work in the role of Ralph.

"Sarah Bernhardt at Home"

Reviewed by Neil G. Caward.

WHEN Aaron M. Gollos, president of the Photoplay Releasing Company, purchased the negative of the two-reel feature film "Sarah Bernhardt at Home," thereby securing the sole right to exhibit the picture in the United States, he did every admirer of the divine Sarah a tremendous favor, for the picture gives the innumerable Bernhardt admirers a more intimate glimpse of their idol than has ever been offered them in any other way.

Photographically the feature is a gem, every scene being clear as a crystal and wonderful as to detail, while the splendid photography is further aided by the delicate tinting and superb scenery.

Every intimate detail of the great actress' home life is minutely pictured. One sees her arrival with her son, Maurice, at their beautiful home in Brittany and the welcome which is given her by the tenants and peasants of her estate.

Mme. Sarah Bernhardt.

After disposing of her baggage, Madame Bernhardt, remembering that a sea voyage is often tiresome, orders that tea be served her guests and then the company sets out for a trip over the vast estate, the owner being greeted with cheers and handclasps by every peasant and tenant with whom she comes in contact, for the simple residents of Brittany fairly worship the ground their famous mistress walks upon.

Beautiful glimpses are given of the old fort which Madame Bernhardt has had transformed into a palatial home. One views with interest the deep-pool and drag-net prawning, for the divine Sarah fairly revels in herself catching those denisons of the deep that inhabit the waters bordering her estate. The fantastic and unusual caves, grottos and rocks that abound in the vicinity of the Bernhardt domicile are all pictured, and after the famous tragedienne has acted as hostess at a shooting party she is seen rambling over the rocky ledges in the vicinity of her home, is finally cut off by the rising tide and forced to clamber hastily back to higher ground.

Returning home she enjoys a game of tennis, her sprightliness being truly amazing when one remembers that she is no longer young.

The second reel of the feature includes scenes that show Bernhardt's ability as a sculptress, when she is seen modeling a bust of Rostand, the famous author of "Cyrano de Bergerac," the play she made famous by featuring in her repertoire. Her library of over six thousand volumes is a favorite nook in which the celebrated tragedienne finds much comfort and her flower garden gives pleasure, not alone to her, but to all her friends.

When the sardine fishing by which many of the tenants on the Bernhardt estate make their living, was for a time impossible, Bernhardt at no little expense to herself, established a co-operative bakery at which all her tenants were provided with bread and other food at less than half price, and we see the tenants gathering to do her homage, as a token of appreciation for her kindness to the poverty stricken fisher-folk, the gala occasion closing with a folk-dance in which all the natives take part, and at the end Madame Bernhardt bestows flowers, autographs and other little tokens upon her friends, each of which is treasured and held as a sacred relic by the person receiving it.

The film ends with an intimate and close-up glimpse of the great actress in her cozy corner, enjoying a playspell with "Bellidor," her pet Pomeranian.

Taken as a whole the film is of tremendous interest, picturing as it does that portion of Madame Bernhardt's life which the public has never glimpsed or seldom even considered. Undoubtedly the film will be tremendously popular wherever shown, for this year when Bernhardt again visits this country in person, newspapers will be devoting whole pages to her remarkable career and talent, and the state rights buyer who can offer exhibitors in his territory a feature of such wide appeal ought to be able to make a fortune, due to the unusual timeliness of the subject, and to the wonderful talent of the central figure.

Mr. Gollos was able to secure the Bernhardt films through an arrangement with the Belgian Red Cross Society, who are joint owners of the copyright on the picture, Mr. Gollos perfecting his arrangement through William F. Connor, personal manager of Madame Bernhardt.

Pathe's "The Submarine Harbor"

By Neil G. Caward

INTEREST in the thrilling serial, "The Romance of Elaine," continues to increase with each passing episode and chapter four of the fascinating story, which is entitled "The Submarine Harbor," is one of the best that has yet been released, both from the standpoint of sustained interest in the story, the photography, and the sensational exploits enacted.

Lionel Barrymore in the role of Del Mar, the foreign secret service agent, is more than ever a villain, his real interest in the torpedo which was invented by Craig Kennedy is revealed more fully, and it is apparent that he wishes to dispose of the torpedo to the Japanese government, for, ere chapter four ends, we see him in a rock-hewn grotto, far beneath the waters of the placid bay, in converse with military men of what appears to be the Japanese government, since several of the officers present are Japs in full uniform.

The mysterious individual who has appeared in previous episodes as the little man with the gray whiskers, the gray friar, and, last week, as a bearded farmer, in this chapter is seen as a geologist, bewhiskered and well disguised, strolling along the shores of the lake and intensely interested in every movement made by Del Mar, the foreign investigator.

Jameson and Elaine prepare to send to the chief of the secret service department in Washington the message they so mysteriously received from the depths of the quiet pool in chapter three, but Del Mar who gets a glimpse of the address on the letter, arranges with his assistants to have Jameson captured en route to the postoffice and the letter forcibly taken away from him.

Elaine, out for a ride on her favorite pony, chances to discover Jameson's riderless horse and, suspecting something has happened to her friend, she investigates with the result that, after a daring climb down the side of a steep ledge, she is able to enter the rocky chamber in which he is held a prisoner and at the point of a revolver to aid him in escaping.

The mysterious geologist who follows Del Mar when the latter embarks in a motor boat is foiled in his plans when Del Mar slips on a diver's suit and disappears beneath the waters of the lake.

Later, the geologist encounters one of Del Mar's assistants on the rocky ledge down which Elaine and Jameson so recently made their way, and in a hand to hand fight with him, throws Del Mar's assistant off the cliff.

As the episode comes to a close we see Del Mar emerging from the rocky grotto far beneath the waters of the placid bay, this grotto being revealed as the harbor for a submarine of a foreign government. Del Mar assures those present in the room that if a certain spot, indicated by some plans laid on the table, can be captured, America will be at their mercy. At this thrilling point the story ends, to be continued a week later.

Universal's "Scandal"

Reviewed by John C. Garrett

"SCANDAL," the first of the Universal Broadway feature productions in five reels to be released July 10, is from the pen of Lois Weber, Mrs. Phillips Smalley, and directed by Mr. and Mrs. Phillips Smalley, who also take the leading parts in the picture.

This production is beautifully photographed and one of the best presented dramas ever screened. The story, which aims to unmask the hypocrisy of modern society, and to show that men are even more poisonous in their gossip than women, is an exceptional dramatic offering and will, without a doubt, become one of the popular pictures of the day.

"Scandal" is a most effective theme and every detail of the production is handled admirably and the producers have given full justice to the theme provided for them.

First we are shown "Scandal," a grotesque being, which is covered with long, stringy strands, standing in a pool of slime and mud. The figure stoops down, claws up a handful of slime, which it throws at a passing woman and the man whom she stops to speak to.

As the story begins we see the apartments of Mr. and Mrs. Wright and their neighbors down below them. The maid of the Wright's calls down the dumb-waiter, telling the maid below to send up some sugar. Mr. Wright, who has been waiting for the sugar, becomes tired and leaves for the office.

The scene changes and we see Daisy leave her home for the office. At the same time the girl next door, who is a public stenographer in the same building as Daisy works, and her brother, come down their steps and Daisy meets the young man to whom she is engaged and all four set off together.

Arrived at the office Daisy catches her foot in the elevator door and seriously injures it. Mr. Wright, who is her employer, realizing that she cannot walk home, tells her that he will take her home in his car. They are seen by the public stenographer, and when they pass the club window, wherein is sitting Wright's neighbor, gossip immediately begins to play its part.

Wright's neighbor arrives home and is overheard by their maid telling of Wright taking his stenographer riding in his automobile. The maid immediately rushes to the dumb-waiter, calls up to the Wright's maid, and is overheard by Mrs. Wright telling her of what the clubmen had seen.

Mrs. Wright becomes insanely jealous and finally leaves home, writing a note telling her husband that he can have his stenographer as she is going to get a divorce. Wright, who is on the verge of ruin, is in the act of committing suicide when his mother, who has read of Mrs. Wright suing her husband for a divorce and naming his stenographer as co-respondent, comes in and takes the pistol away from him and persuades him to go home with her.

After Scandal has wrecked Daisy's life, she marries the first man who offers her his protection, who is the brother of the girl next door. They live happily together until his sister comes to stay with Daisy while the husband is away.

Daisy's old lover comes to the same town to call on his future wife and meets Daisy. His fiancee sends a note to Daisy asking her to accompany her, her family and Daisy's old friend, on an automobile tour. As she is leaving she is seen by her sister-in-law who immediately sends for the husband.

A series of accidents delay the automobile party and they do not arrive home until about three a. m. Daisy's friend takes her home after the rest of the party have been gotten out, where Daisy sees her husband, who is crazed by the stories his sister has been telling him. He rushes upon his wife and strikes her down and then goes out and kills the other man.

We last see Daisy, who has wandered out into the country with her child, at the home of Wright and his mother. "Scandal" is still at work and we last see its form lean down, scoop up a handful of slime, throw it, and it splatters on the screen and slowly fades out.

Selig's "The Smouldering"

IN SELIG'S two-reel feature "The Smouldering," scheduled for release on Monday, July 12, Eugenie Besserer, the talented Selig player, who has not for months had an opportunity of playing a real lead, is given ample scope for her splendid talents, and as Rachel St. John, the mother of the socially prominent "Gerald Strathmore," she rises to supreme dramatic heights, and equals, if not excels, any of her previous appearances.

She is first disclosed as an aged and haggard victim of morphine: a mother whose heart is bowed down with a desire to see her son from whom she has long been separated, and yet knowing that she must not disclose herself to him, since he is now respected and admired by all his friends, and her public acknowledgment of him as her son would only tend to drag him down into the mire in which she herself has sunk. It is a role difficult indeed to interpret, but Miss Besserer convincingly enacts every scene, rising to a particularly difficult situation near the close of the second reel when she departs forever from the boy she cannot again behold.

Frank Mayo is a manly "Gerald Strathmore" and Will Sheerer and Martha Boucher get the most out of their respective roles.

As the story opens we learn that Gerald Strathmore, engaged to Dorothy Vincent, daughter of a wealthy mother, is only the adopted son of Dr. and Mrs. Strathmore, though he is unaware that such is the case, since all knowledge regarding Rachel St. John, his real mother, has been carefully kept from him, due to the fact that the mother is a morphine fiend.

By means of a vision scene we are made to understand how the mother, years before, voluntarily renounced her child and went away in the hope of overcoming her fondness for the drug, which she knew would in time lead to her own disgrace, leaving Gerald in the care of Dr. and Mrs. Strathmore, who promised to treat him as their own son.

Upon receiving an anonymous note, hinting that it would be well for her to investigate the social position of the man to whom her daughter is engaged, Mrs. Vincent informs Mrs. Strathmore that it will be quite necessary for Gerald's real mother to reveal herself and meet Gerald's fiancee and friends at Dorothy's pre-nuptial party, if the marriage is to be consummated.

Reluctantly Mrs. Strathmore confides in her husband the ultimatum issued by Mrs. Vincent, and the two are staggered at the possibilities offered, for they well realize that Rachel St. John cannot declare herself as Gerald's mother.

Learning by chance of Mrs. Vincent's decision, and knowing that Gerald's future happiness depends on his vindication, Rachel decides in spite of the opposition of her friends to actually appear at the Vincent home on the day of the party.

Though every hour without the drug means agony and torture, the mother sacrifices all for her son, and spending her last pittance for gay clothes, she appears at the Vincent home, dressed in regal style, and a woman whom Mrs. Vincent is only too glad to welcome as a guest. There she beholds her own son for the first time in many years and their reunion almost results in the mother's becoming hysterical.

By main force of will she controls herself, and after satisfying Mrs. Vincent thoroughly as to Gerald's right to happiness and position in life, she makes a hasty exit, returns to her lonely lodgings and there dies, weak and frantic over lack of the drug that has been her ruin, leaving Gerald to happiness in the arms of his fiancee.

"The District Attorney"

Reviewed by Thomas C. Kennedy

DRAMAS dealing with modern politics seldom fail to create and sustain interest, but in many instances the interest is due more to the subject which is concerned than to the manner in which it is treated. In this respect "The District Attorney," Lubin's V. L. S. E. five-reel feature, differs from the average picture, for the portrayal of a certain phase of present-day politics is interwoven with an appealing story.

The story is founded on the play written by Charles

Klein and Harrison Grey Fiske, which had a successful run on the legitimate stage. The plot presents numerous and convincing dramatic situations. The climax is reached when the district attorney, despite the desperate efforts of the gang of grafters to prevent him, brings the stool-pigeon before the grand jury. This results in the exposure of the "man-higher-up," who proves to be the district attorney's father-in-law.

The film was produced under the direction of Barry O'Neil, and a capable cast was selected to enact the story. George Soule Spencer gives a pleasing presence to the part of John Stratton, the district attorney, and A. H. Van Buren as Frank Pierson, is especially good in the scene in which he testifies at the hearing before the grand jury. Dorothy Bernard has the leading feminine role as Helen Knight.

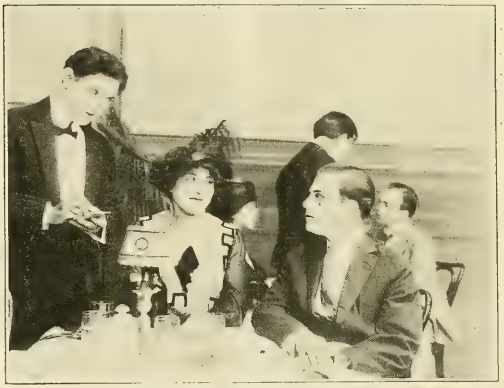
as Grace Brainerd; Peter Lang as McGrath; and Walter Law as General Ruggles, all interpret their characters, which are important ones, convincingly. Ruth Bryan as Madge Brainerd, and Florence Williams as Mrs. Varrick complete the cast.

Matthews Brainerd, the head of a grafting political ring, instructs his lieutenant, McGrath, to bribe Frank Pierson, a clerk in the warrant office, to pass some forged city warrants. McGrath offers Pierson a large sum and promises that after serving a few months in the penitentiary, the ring will use its influence to have him pardoned. The clerk is sent to prison. His letters to the politicians are ignored.



After three years Pierson's pardon is granted by his judge and prosecutor, but Brainerd, learning of this, uses his influence with the governor and the pardon is not signed. Pierson writes to General Ruggles, the editor of a reform newspaper, who publishes the facts of the case in the paper. Helen Knight, Pierson's sweetheart, is tireless in her efforts and finally interests the district attorney, John Stratton, in the case.

Stratton, who is Brainerd's son-in-law, refuses to be influenced by Brainerd and remains firm in his decision to bring Pierson before the grand jury to prove his allegation that he was the victim of a plot. When Brainerd's lieutenants learn this they desert him. The contractor becomes so worried that his health steadily fails and when his crime is exposed he suffers a complete breakdown. Since his condition is so serious, Brainerd's arrest and trial are left for future consideration.

The characters in the story are well cast, each member giving an easy, natural performance. Margaret Prussing is seen as Marjorie Wallace; Sally Crute as Jean Halliday; Mrs. Wallace Erskine as Mrs. Osborne; Agustus Phillips as John Wallace; Harry Beaumont as Bob Sheldon; and John Sturgeon as Emmett O'Neal. The picture, produced by Director Castle, shows careful attention to technical detail. The photography is good.

interruptions caused by visitors and telephone calls, and the maid and butler are threatened with dismissal should they admit any visitors. Her husband returns that evening in time to see some of his wife's girl friends being ushered from the house by the butler, and takes it upon himself to entertain them.

Marjorie's manuscript is returned by the publisher because it lacks local color. She loses no time in sending her husband to an underworld dance-hall with instructions to secure the all-important local color. Jean Halliday refuses to see her friend Bob Sheldon that night, because she intends visiting the Silver Star to obtain material for her newspaper article on cheap dance-halls. At the cafe she is seated with Wallace, who shortly explains that he is a specialist on cracking safes, to which Jean replies that she is a decoy for wire-tappers.

Marjorie becomes worried about her husband, and sets out for the Silver Star to find him. Outside the hall she meets Bob Sheldon who has come in search of Jean. They are refused admission by the proprietor and call a policeman. The proprietor warns his patrons to make their getaway as the police are coming. Wallace and Jean escape from the building, but are arrested later as suspicious characters.

At the police station their earnest explanations are not believed. Bob and Marjorie, after a long search, visit the police station. A general misunderstanding follows, but matters are finally straightened out. As a result of the escapade, Marjorie decides, to the great satisfaction of John, that she will give up writing, and Jean consents to marry Bob.

"A STORY OF THE PAST," chapter fourteen of the serial "Road O' Strife," brings the story near to a close and clears up fully all the mystery connected with Alene, now Princess of Urania, and the notable silver cup.

Gershom escapes with the Princess Alene.

There are some very good interior settings in this episode, the scene inside the palace being worthy of some praise and also the revolution in which a great number of people are used, is very cleverly handled.

To Madison and Alene, the girl listening with listless indifference, Gershom tells the story of Alene.

Eighteen years before the King of Urania had honored Gershom, then a scientist, with his friendship. One day he had sent for Gershom and upon his arrival the king told him of the oncoming revolution and realizing that their throne would soon fall, he entrusted the care of his three-year-old babe to Gershom. He had secretly transferred his private fortune to America, to be held in trust for Alene until she became of age.

Soon afterward came the terrible revolution. The king was killed in a duel and Gershom, after battling his way through the maddened mass of people, managed to escape only after receiving a terrific blow on the head from one of the revolutionists.

The scientist and the child reached America and Gershom, demented from the blow he received, had one aim in life, and that was to care for and protect Alene, whose fortune Caleb Jerome was seeking, to whom Gershom entrusted his secret. Afterward learning of Jerome's desire to get Alene's wealth, Gershom escaped with the child in the middle of the night and found a home where he kept the secret of the Princess Alene.

He placed the silver cup near the old spring as he thought that no one would remove it and that the secret would be safer there than any other place. Sometime later Caleb Jerome, intent on murder, dealt Gershom a blow, which, instead of killing him, restored his mind and he eventually saw the past clearly and he had come to place the matter in Madison's hands.

After Gershom has completed his story, Alene is taken to the home of Madison and entrusted to the care of his wife. Gershom hurries away on business, the nature of which he does not disclose. He has conceived a bold idea, suggested by recent news, that Urania had declared it would remain neutral in the great war and that the old Royalists party is reviving and urging that Urania form an alliance with the Empire and enter the war.

and the convincing portrayal of drama, dealing with problems of the day, which made the series so popular prevails in this, the final episode. Ruth Roland as Laura Powers and Henry King as Karl Hurd head the cast, and are supported by Daniel Gilfeather and Edward Brady as David Powers and Perry Travis, respectively.

Karl Hurd, a stevedore, turns on the abusive foreman, and, in the struggle which ensues, Hurd is seriously injured. He is unable to return to work for many weeks, and it falls to his wife, Mina, to provide for her husband and their little daughter. After his recovery David Powers, the president of the company, refuses to give him work. Shortly afterwards Mina breaks down under the strain of sole-provider, and dies. Perry Travis, Powers' legal adviser, is in love with Laura, Powers' daughter, and hopes to marry her.

In order to put his lumber out while the market is high, Powers orders his foreman to work the men overtime without extra pay. He turns a deaf ear to the foreman's protest against this action. The men threaten to strike unless they are paid for overime, and appoint a committee to confer with Powers. The men arrive at their employer's home while Laura's lavish birthday party is in progress. Powers orders them put out of the house.

The girl pleads with her father to grant the request of the workmen, but he remains firm in his decision. A strike is declared. Travis proposes that his client evict them from their homes owned by the company as a means of bringing them to time. The lawyer proceeds with his plans of eviction. Laura, who is visiting in the neighborhood, sees this, and when Travis refuses to allow the people to remain in their homes, she abruptly leaves him.

When the workers, who are holding a meeting, learn of Travis' action, they decide to kill their employer, and set out for his home. Among them is Hurd, who has secured a revolver. He tells the men that he will go ahead and signal them when Powers' car leaves the house. Laura, after an argument with her father, enters the automobile. As the curtains are drawn. Hurd does not know that it is the girl inside, and fires. The bullet strikes Laura and she dies.

Hurd does not realize his mistake until after his arrest.

"The Zaca Lake Mystery"

Reviewed by John C. Garrett

THE two-reel American production to be released on July 12 and featuring Ed Coxen as a forest ranger, Winifred Greenwood as the daughter of a miner, and George Field as an outlaw, is a very interesting picture, and all of the parts are portrayed exceptionally well. The plot is laid in the mountains and by splendid photography is shown some of the most beautiful scenery imaginable.

"The Zaca Lake Mystery" is a story out of the ordinary and deals with the crimes committed by an outlaw, his clever ruse in trying to make a bold escape, and of his finally being outwitted by Nell, a girl from whom he had stolen all the wealth she and her father possessed. The director of this plot deserves credit for his excellent work.

Slippery Joe, an outlaw, manages to elude a fearless sheriff and his posse in the mountain fastness. Later the sheriff goes alone on his man-hunt mission. John, a miner, strikes it rich and calls his daughter, Nell, to him, gives her the bag of gold nuggets he has just found, and together they go up into their mountain home.

Slippery Joe has seen John give the gold to his daughter and when her father leaves her alone in the house to go and saddle their horses, the outlaw confronts the girl with a pistol, binds and gags her, and steals the bag of gold. He then, after seeing her father enter the house, steals the saddled horse and escapes into the mountains, where he is shortly followed by Nell and her father, who go on foot.

The outlaw is arrested.

The lonely ranger of Zaca Lake comes upon a well dressed man canoeing, who gives his name as Mr. Bond from San Francisco. The ranger invites him to stay over night at his home in the mountains and during their conversation he tells the ranger that he is hunting for his twin brother, who is mining somewhere near.

Meanwhile we see a man resembling the outlaw rise up from the ground nearby and stagger to the water's edge, where he proceeds to bathe his head.

John and his daughter arrive at the ranger's cabin and the girl is struck with the resemblance of Mr. Bond to the outlaw. The ranger tells her that it cannot be he, because he has Mr. Bond's card. The sheriff, who is still on the trail of the outlaw, arrives at the ranger's cabin and upon being introduced to Mr. Bond, also notices the resemblance. The ranger later tells them that Mr. Bond is looking for his twin brother, whom he believes is mining somewhere near.

The girl recovers the gold.

Mr. Bond and Nell go canoeing and while they are gone the man whom we last saw at the water's edge, staggers to the cabin of the ranger and there tells them that he is Mr. Bond of San Francisco. He then relates how the outlaw had come upon him, ordered him to exchange clothes with him and then knocked him senseless. The outlaw's plot is revealed and the "Mr. Bond" out canoeing with Nell is the man they are seeking for murder and theft.

The sheriff and the others make plans to arrest the outlaw on his return. They go to the shores of the beautiful Zaca Lake and there find Nell and her companion. The girl has him "covered" with her revolver and in her hand holds the bag of nuggets. She, too, had learned of the desperado's ruse and had forced the issue.

"Greater Love Hath No Man"

Reviewed by Thomas C. Kennedy

EMMETT CORRIGAN is featured in "Greater Love Hath No Man," a five-part drama to be released on the Metro program, July 5, and as the physically and morally courageous Varge, his work is masterful and convincing. The play is an adaptation from the novel by Frank L. Packard, and was produced by the Popular Plays and Players Company. Certainly the producers have spared neither pains nor expense in making the picture, and their efforts are met with deserving success. The big scenes are impressively realistic, and the action throughout is supported by appropriate settings.

Harold sees Varge convicted of his crime.

The story centers about a man whose nobility of character is manifested by his willingness to sacrifice his own freedom to lighten the sorrow of another. Mary Martin as Janet Rand; Mabel Wright as Mrs. Merton; Crawford Kent as Harold Merton; Thomas Curran as Dr. Merton; Albert Lang as Keeper Wenger; William Morse as Warden Rand; Edward Hoyt as Dr. Krelan; and Lawrence Grattan as Randall, make up the cast which surrounds Mr. Corrigan as Varge.

Varge knocks down the overbearing keeper.

Harold Merton, in a fit of temper, kills his father, and pleads with Varge, the adopted son, to assume the guilt. To spare his foster-mother the grief of knowing her own son to be the murderer, Varge consents. As a result he is sentenced to life imprisonment. During his confinement the convicts, in an attempt to escape, try to overpower the guard. Varge, the equal of two men in strength, fights with the keeper until the revolt is checked.

He is rewarded by being made a trusty, and is given charge of the warden's garden. He often sees Janet, the warden's daughter, and they become fast friends. Janet believes Varge innocent, and begs him to tell the truth, but he refuses. A fire breaks out in the warden's house, and Varge braves the smoke and flames to rescue Janet. This brings him to a realization of his love for the girl. For her sake he decides to escape and go away.

Being a trusty, Varge has little trouble in making his escape. He reaches a coast town, and secures work on a sailing vessel. Janet visits her aunt at the seashore. During a terrible storm the ship carrying Varge is wrecked. He clings to a piece of the wreckage, and Janet sees him brought safely to shore next morning.

They plan to elope. Varge suddenly realizes the injustice he would do Janet by fleeing with her, and he makes his way back to the prison where he gives himself up. Mrs. Merton on her death bed, asks to see her foster-son. The governor grants her request. After her death Harold, forced to confess, kills himself. Varge is freed, and later marries Janet.

The Diamond From the Sky

Reviewed by John C. Garrett

"TO THE HIGHEST BIDDDER," chapter twelve of the North American serial, "The Diamond From the Sky," deals mainly with the selling of Stanley Hall to the highest bidder, who is Detective Tom Blake. The detective stands with Blair Stanley, who is very anxious to gain possession of the Stanley home, before the auctioneer's block and they both try their best to outbid the other. At last, however, Detective Blake names a price which is beyond that which Blair can pay and Stanley Hall is sold to him. He had been authorized to buy it for Esther by Arthur Stanley, who is now in the West and known as John Poweli.

Arthur looking over his oil prospects.

The diamond, which is said to bring good-luck to whoever has it in their possession, saves the life of Luke Lovell, who has been dragged to the bottom of dark waters, but suddenly manages to swim to safety. He loses the diamond, however, and it is last seen sinking into the deep waters of the bay and becoming entangled in the tentacles of an octopus.

Esther, who is now traveling with Quabba, goes to call on Hagar and is told that an operation may not be necessary to restore the woman's mind and that all of her expenses are being paid by an unknown person. From there she and Quabba go to the gypsy camp, where the girl tells the gypsies she is leaving them to go on a long journey to find an old friend, but will soon return, bringing Hagar, who is bound to get well, with her. Before she and Quabba leave the gypsies present the hunchback with a new grind organ and a horse to pull it.

Mrs. Stanley, Lawyer Smythe and Detective Blake receive word that Stanley Hall is to be sold at auction. Mrs.

Stanley and Blair leave for Fairfax as does Blake, who goes to buy Stanley Hall for Esther, the money having been sent him by Arthur Stanley.

Arrived at Stanley Hall Detective Blake and Blair Stanley are the only bidders. They outbid one another for a long time until at last the auctioneer declares that the place has been sold to Detective Blake, who returns to Richmond and here receives a note from Lawyer Smythe saying that he has returned to England and when Arthur Stanley had been found would return.

Out West Arthur, now known as John Powell, strikes it rich with his oil interests and becomes a millionaire. One evening as he is celebrating his success at one of the large hotels Vivian Marston, who is dining with an old man, sees Arthur and recognizes him. She is told that he is John Powell, the millionaire, and immediately tries to attract his attention.

Luke Lovell becomes an illegitimate seller of whiskey and he and his partner come upon the hut wherein the Indian papoose who has "The Diamond From the Sky" around its neck, lives. Catching sight of the jewel Luke Lovell tells the old Indian that he will give him some whiskey in exchange for the diamond. The old Indian squaw objects to this, but Luke Lovell snatches the diamond from around the neck of the child and gives the old Indian a bottle of whiskey.

Esther bids farewell to the Gypsies.

While walking along the bay Luke Lovell sees a white yacht anchored some distance out. He immediately calls his companion's attention to it and tells him that they will steal a row-boat, pull out to the yacht and here get the owner of it to buy "The Diamond From the Sky."

They climb down the rope ladder from the pier and pull out into the dark night toward the yacht. A passing policeman flashes his pocket light out on the waters and by the aid of this we see Luke and his companion engaged in a struggle. They fall overboard into the dark waters and then we see the diamond slip from Luke's grasp and slowly sink to the bottom.

The Gypsy manages to pull himself out upon the shore and we last see the pocket light of the policeman come toward us over the darkened bridge.

Ushers and Ushering

George E. Carpenter, editor of Reel Reels, the house organ of the Notable Feature Film Company of Salt Lake City, Utah, and one of the livest wires in the western field, the man who digs up all sorts of new and original ideas for his customers and patrons, publishes the following in a recent issue of his breezy little sheet, and it just about hits the nail on the head:

A good usher is an asset, for ushers are the making or the breaking of many a house. Patrons like courtesy, attention and consideration. An usher is not a herder, neither is he a fresh individual with a ready retort on his lips.

Many are called but few fill the bill.

In this connection here is a list of rules governing the deportment of that much abused vocation:

Ushers should report in time to be in uniform at 1 p. m.

Their hands and nails should be clean; their linen fresh and their shoes shined.

Uniforms should be kept brushed and neat.

Gum chewing and eating while on duty is forbidden.

After the house opens ushers must stay in their aisles. They should stand straight and not lounge on the back rails.

They must not run or slide down the aisles.

In conversing with each other they must talk low so that the audience is not disturbed.

In moving around during the performance they should walk quietly.

Ushers must not leave their own floors.

It is the desire of the management to have a corps of polite and gentlemanly ushers and it should ask the cooperation of the boys in making the theater staff equal to those of the large cities.

There ain't no such animile.

Oh, yes there is, but he does not stay an usher long—he soon operates a house of his own.

Griffith on Censorship

David Wark Griffith, the producer of "The Birth of a Nation," entertained on Thursday evening, July 1, five hundred visiting country editors, their wives and friends, at the Los Angeles Trinity Auditorium, at which time Mr. Griffith's sensational film was exhibited.

During the first intermission, Mr. Griffith was requested to say something to the multitude. He selected censorship as the basis of his speech, which held all present entranced for every second he remained on the stage.

His speech, in part, was as follows:

"I am very sorry, indeed, for your sake, that I am forced to bother you with my troubles—I should say, our troubles. But to have so many important people gathered together, at our mercy as it were, the temptation is too strong to resist. We want you, who have so much power to help us a little with a small part of the great power you are capable of using. We want you to seriously think on the subject of censorship.

"All new things in the world, including Christian religion and the printing press, have been at their beginnings considered as instruments of evil. The motion picture has had to undergo the same suspicion that seems to be directed at all new things.

"On the matter of censorship we think there has been very little common sense displayed by the public in general. We will not argue with you about the matter of censorship, for the ordinary motion picture play that goes into the regular five and ten-cent theaters, where programs of five or six different pictures are shown in an evening, and where the program is changed nightly, and where it is impossible for the prospective audience to ascertain the quality and matter of each picture that is to be shown. We will agree with you in the argument that for the sake of the children, censorship for this class of picture should be allowed. But for the motion picture—like the one you are viewing tonight—played at the same place, in the same theater, and under exactly the same conditions as the regular drama of the stage, we demand the same fair treatment the drama is accorded, and we are unable to see why this is not the case; but believe me it is very far from being the case.

"In some communities they do not allow the showing of crime in any form in any motion picture. This, followed to its logical conclusion, would absolutely make impossible the motion picture as an entertainment or as an art. For instance, I know it will seem as though it was beyond belief that the motion picture version of Shakespeare's drama of Shylock was forbidden in Chicago on account of race prejudice. How is it possible to portray virtue without portraying its opposite—the thing of vice? How are we to show the sweetness of the character of Abraham Lincoln save by contrast with the mistaken ideas of Thaddeus Stevens? Search your minds for any story that is worth telling, or the play that is worth seeing, that does not in some way show vice in some form.

"We believe the motion picture can be made the greatest educator the world has ever known. Its highest form will be a depiction of motion picture fiction founded on historical facts—giving an interesting evening of entertainment and imparting in part truths of history, and in the large, a desire to investigate for one's self into the period supposed to be depicted in the play. What better instruction in the living of life today and tomorrow, than a true knowledge of life in the past.

"Again, once allow the idea of censorship for the motion picture to be accepted quietly, and as a matter of course by the American people, how easy it will be for the spirit of intolerance that has already grown so important in our nation to attack the stage, and then the press itself. The motion picture is a form of speech, as clean and decent and respectable as that of any art mankind has ever discovered. A people that will allow the suppression of this form of speech will also have no hesitancy in suppressing that which we all consider so highly—the printing press. I find all through the country, among all classes of people, the idea that the motion picture should be censored. That same spirit of intolerance which one by one is taking away the personal liberties of the American people, will find an easy task to attack in turn, and with success, all forms of free speech.

"When the first little board of censorship was established six years ago, we who took it seriously, then expected exactly what has come to pass—when a man of the caliber of the second deputy superintendent of police in the city of Chicago can tell two million American people what they shall and shall not go to see in the way of a moving picture. And people submitting to this can also be very readily persuaded by an autocratic form of government as to what he should or should not read in the daily and weekly papers; and when this comes to pass the old-fashioned idea of a form of government by laws will be a thing of the past in America.

"The policy of the censorship is to approve of pictures which offend no one; that is one way of saying, 'We will have nothing in the pictures but milk and water'—ridiculous, insipid mediocrity, that could not possibly interest anyone. A motion picture of this class would be as interesting and efficient as a newspaper that never steps on anyone's toes, and you can imagine how many people would be interested in that kind of a newspaper. We believe that we have as much right to present the facts of history as we see them, on the motion picture screen, as Woodrow Wilson has to write these facts in his history."

The moment Mr. Griffith concluded his speech, deafening cheers and hearty applause filled the air, as the film genius modestly retired from the stage.

Dunne Vetoes Censorship Bill

Governor Dunne on Tuesday, July 6, formally vetoed the Olson bill, which would have created a state board of moving picture censors, and filed the veto with Secretary of State Stevenson.

The governor took this action because he thought it unwise to pile a second censorship board on Chicago and failed to find any demand for the measure from the down-state faction. Secretary of State Stevenson, who led the fight for the bill in the legislature, told newspaper representatives on Tuesday that he had personally urged Governor Dunne to veto the measure, as a result of his investigation of the Chicago situation and his discovery that a double censorship would impose prohibitive expense and hardship on the Chicago public, and that the enforcement of the law would be difficult.

The Olson bill having been definitely laid to rest, censorship in Illinois will continue as usual with Major Funkhouser, second deputy superintendent of the Chicago police department, as head of the Chicago censor board and with authority to censor films for the city of Chicago alone.

Fox Managers Meet

Some twenty-two branch managers of the Fox Film Corporation throughout the United States convened at the Knickerbocker Hotel in New York last week, where an entire floor was engaged by President Fox for convention headquarters. The business sessions were devoted to important discussions of branch office management and heart to heart talks by William Fox, Winfield R. Sheehan, general manager of the organization; Abraham Carlos, its general representative; Louis T. Rogers, manager of the Now York branch, and other prominent officials.

Though the greater part of the week was devoted to strictly business matters the visitors to New York were elaborately entertained between business sessions, and felt that the gathering was a profitable one in every respect. Those present included the following branch managers:

Louis T. Rogers, 130 West Forty-sixth street, New York City; O. P. Hall, 619 Rhodes building, Atlanta, Ga.; H. F. Campbell, 10-12 Piedmont street, Boston, Mass.; C. L. Worthington, 515 Mallers building, Chicago, Ill.; A. M. Muller, 34 East Fourth street, Cincinnati, Ohio; P. C. Mooney, 618 Columbus building, Cleveland, Ohio; Leo. F. Levison, Box Office Attraction Company, 1907 Commerce street, Dallas, Tex.; Field Carmichael, Ideal building, Seventeenth and Champa streets, Denver Colo.; A. E. Siegel, Box Office Attraction Company, 407 Smith building, Detroit, Mich.; Chas. W. Hardin, 928 Main street, Kansas City, Mo.; A. T. Lambson, 734 South Olive street, Los Angeles, Cal.; E. A. Westcott, Jewelers' Exchange building, Minneapolis, Minn.; Nat. Beier, 43 Strand theater building, Newark, N. J.; S. T. Stephens, 826 Common street, New Orleans, La.; Joe Levy, 315 South Sixteenth street, Omaha, Neb.; Jack Levy, 1333 Vine street, Philadelphia, Pa.; H. B. Day, 121 Fourth avenue, Pittsburgh, Pa.; Jos. B. Roden, 318 McIntyre building, 68 South Main street, Salt Lake City, Utah; W. J. Citron, 107 Golden Gate avenue, San Francisco, Cal.; E. R. Redlich, 1214 Third avenue, Seattle, Wash.; S. J. Baker, 3632 Olive street, St. Louis, Mo.; Herman Robbins, 400 Eckel theater building, Syracuse, N. Y.; Lieut. J. P. Anderson, 305 Ninth street, N. W., Washington, D. C.; Harry Leonhardt, Pacific coast manager, 734 South Olive street, Los Angeles, Cal.

Raymond McKee, Athlete

Before a crowd of over three thousand people at the Fourth Annual Field Day of the Edison employes, held at Olympic Park, Raymond McKee, the Edison comedian, proved by carrying away a big slice of the honors and a splendid silver trophy against a big field of trained athletes recruited out of Edison's five thousand employes, that the Motion Picture actor of today—and particularly the comedians—must possess all the hardihood of a professional athlete and the nerve of an acrobatic specialist.

The prizes.

Comedy of some motion was furnished by McKee in the obstacle race, when he took a high dive under the canvas nailed close to the ground and ploughed up considerable of the muddy field, but he came up smiling and first, which process he repeated again in the sack race and came in third for the 100 yards thin fellows' race. A 16-inch high silver trophy, donated by Studio Manager Horace G. Plimpton, and a gold medal were awarded McKee, very much bedraggled, by Mrs. Thomas A. Edison. He was also awarded a bad knee for his triumph.

The Edison Grand Prix cup, a handsome large silver trophy donated by Mr. Edison personally, was fiercely contested for by eight teams from the different Edison divisions in the 880-yard relay race, but the honors went to the Edison studio contingent, composed of S. B. Field, B. H. Geiger, W. E. Graf, and H. D. Gunther.

Unfurled Big Flag

Broadway and Forty-second street, New York, was the scene last Monday of a most unusual exhibition as part of the Fourth of July program for a safe and sane Fourth. Between the towers of the Heidelberg Building and the Times Building was unfurled the largest American flag ever made.

The flag was manufactured by a New England cotton mill expressly for the Metro Pictures Corporation. It was 165 feet long and weighed 1,560 pounds. The stars measured three feet in diameter and the stripes were four feet wide. As there are thirteen stripes to every American flag, it will be appreciated the flag is 52 feet wide. In order to adequately support the flag and make the anchorage secure, the steel cable was two inches in diameter and had an anchorage pull of 10,000 pounds, it being estimated should a strong wind be blowing, the flag would nearly pull that weight. Heavy girders inside each building were installed to hold the cable.

The Metro Pictures Corporation wished to exhibit the flag first to the New York public before taking it to the Panama-Pacific Exposition, where it will be floated on the Exposition grounds, July 15, the big day there at the convention of moving picture exhibitors. Mr. Bushman, one of the actors apearing on the Metro program, will be presented with a gold medal by the Exposition officials and the Metro Company in turn will be hosts at a banquet to the Exposition officials at the St. Francis Hotel.

Laemmle Praised by Actors' Society

Carl Laemmle, president of the Universal Film Company, recently stated through the columns of the New York Evening World that he would not use any people in Universal films on account of notoriety acquired by committing crimes or getting before the public through the police courts, but would use only actors and actresses of established reputation. In appreciation of Mr. Laemmle's action the following letter has been sent to him by the president of the Actors' Society of America:

Dear Mr. Laemmle:

On behalf of the Actors' Society of America I desire to express the sincere appreciation of the organization for your commendable action in barring from the Universal Film Company's productions persons who have only criminal records in the way of drawing power or who have figured unfavorably in the newspapers, in favor of bona fide actors and actresses.

The Actors' Society considers this step of yours an important one and one that will be to your lasting credit. As president of the Actors' Society of America, entering upon my third consecutive term, I speak for every member of our organization and extend our most sincere thanks and assure you of our support and well wishes.

With kindest regards, Very truly yours,

William F. Haddock.

Gold Rooster Plays

Pathe has acquired so many splendid plays and books by well known authors that it has been decided to call the features made from them "Gold Rooster Plays." Features put out under this name will be most carefully selected for quality representing the best talent only in authorship, cast and direction. The first of them will be released early in the fall. Quite a number of these features will be in Pathecolor.

Richard Carle with Pathe

Pathe announces the acquisition of the picture rights to Richard Carle's big dramatic success "Mary's Lamb," which enjoyed a run of three years upon the stage. Mr. Carle himself will play the lead in the Pathe picture. The famous player in his own famous play should prove to be a strong attraction.

Weiss, Metro Manager

Harry Weiss, who was the manager of the Chicago office of the World Film Corporation for some fourteen months, resigned his position and on June 28 became Chicago manager of the Metro Pictures Service. Mr. Weiss is succeeded by Joseph Klein, who promises the exhibitors that the excellent service afforded them in the past will still keep up.

Launch New Program

Among the events of the past week, is the announcement that the "Combined Photo-play Producers, Incorporated"—making the productions of Gaumont (Empress Brand), Crystal, Ideal, Starlight, Graindin, Pyramid, Lariat, Premier, Sunshine, and others have entered into a long contract with the newly formed Standard Pictures Incorporated, which company was just formed for that purpose by Messrs. A. & H. Warner and Al. Lichtman.

In an interview with Motography's representative, the heads of this latest enterprise made the following statement:

"We have for a long time studied the conditions of the industry trying to determine by what method the exhibitor can best be served at this time, and our observations have convinced us that there is a crying need for a combination program of meritorious feature attractions supplemented by one and two-reel subjects of the same class as the highest type of feature.

"Under present conditions, the exhibitor is forced to obtain his service from no less than four or five exchanges, with the result that he is burdened with a tremendous expense for the film his patrons demand. It is our purpose therefore to enable the exhibitor to secure a number of such selected subjects from one exchange, each subject being the highest type of its kind that can be secured.

"Our years of experience in the distribution of fiims have convinced us without a doubt that best results, both for the interest of the producer and exhibitor, can only be obtained by having responsible individual exchange owners handle the program in their respective territories. The most successful distributing companies have operated and are still operating on this plan.

"All of the brands connected with Combined Photo-play Producers, Inc., are well known throughout the country and some of the men connected with the producing corporation have achieved great prominence and success. Among them being: Ludwig G. B. Erb, Joseph A. Golden, G. V. Hamilton, Emiel Offerman, Otis B. Thayer, Harry and Aubrey, Mittenthal, A. N. and Ray Smallwood. Among the stars appearing in the productions of this program, are such favorites as: Ethel Grandin, Edwin August, Dot Farley, Reeva Greenwood, William V. Mong, Walter Fishten, Wharton Jones, Charles Hutchinson, Edith Thornton, George and Dolly Larkin, Edna Payne, Fred Hearn, Will Scherer, James Aubrey, Walter Kendig, Frederick Church, Lillian Hamilton, Marian Swayne, Joe Levening, and many others."

"Melting Pot" Going Big

Although the picture has only been released as a regular booking proposition about one week, the first repeat has been recorded for "The Melting Pot," the Cort Film Corporation's picture production of Israel Zangwill's famous play, in which Walker Whiteside was starred. The Mt. Morris Theater at One Hundred and Sixteenth street and Fifth avenue, New York City, booked the picture for a three day run through the Herald Film Corporation, which has the picture for Greater New York and Long Island. The picture was in its second day showing at the Mt. Morris when the management engaged it for a return showing of two days.

The sale of state rights on "The Melting Pot" has convinced John Cort, president of the Cort Film Corporation, that there is satisfaction in disposing of a feature on that basis. The picture had not been offered two days before New Jersey was purchased by N. Edward Mallouf, who is playing the picture at the Cort theater in Atlantic City for a week.

New York State, outside of the Greater City and Long Island, and all of Pennsylvania were purchased by the Author's Film Company of New York City. Nat A. Manger of San Francisco bought California, Nevada, Arizona and the Hawaiian Islands. I. N. Garson of Detroit took Michigan; A. H. Blank of Des Moines, Iowa and Nebraska; the Wichita Film and Supply Co., of Wichita, Kas., Kansas and Nebraska, and Dick P. Sutton, of Butte, took Montana. Offers have been made sufficient to insure the disposal of the remainder of the territory in the United States within a short time.

Montague Love

Montague Love, the celebrated English romantic actor, after having refused many tempting offers to appear in a motion picture, has at last capitulated and is to make his screen debut in George W. Lederer's production of "Sunday," the play in which Miss Ethel Barrymore made such a triumph a few years ago. Miss Reine Davies is being starred in this photoplay with Mr. Love as leading man. Mr. Lederer feels he has a pair of stars who will win much favor with the motion picture audiences.

Montague Love.

Mr. Love is the sort of actor who wins favor with all of his audiences and is conceded to be one of the best romantic actors on the stage. His success in "Grumpy" in London was such that when Cyril Maude brought the play to this country, Mr. Love was brought here to support the titled actor. Following his appearance in "Grumpy," Mr. Love was leading man for Miss Frances Starr in "The Secret," and has been co-starring with Arnold Daly in a revival of Bernard Shaw plays.

Equity Motion Picture Company's Star

The motion picture theaters throughout the country, who will undoubtedly play Billy Van's releases, should be greatly benefited by the publicity tendered to him as a comedian and mirth provoking dispeller of gloom. The Equity Motion Picture Company not only intends presenting Billy B. Van in one and two-reel comedies, but their object is to produce four and five-reel features of the very highest standard. Owing to the location, their studio, which is situated at Van Harbor, Sunapee Lake, N. H., right in the midst of the White Mountains, surrounding magnificent and rural scenery in this vicinity, offers such opportunities for exterior effects, and warrants the praise that Mr. Van and his associates have for their coming releases. Associated with Billy B. Van in this new enterprise is that energetic and hustling distributor and promoter of feature films, Mr. Bob Russell, who has made a name for himself in placing with the exhibitors from coast to coast some of the largest and best feature films that have been on the market for a number of years.

Pathe Signs Gail Kane

George Fitzmaurice, who is producing "Via Wireless" for Pathe, has signed Miss Gail Kane for his leading woman. Miss Kane has the well earned reputation of being one of the most beautiful women on the stage today, and her talents as displayed not only in Broadway successes but pictures as well, prove the excellence of Mr. Fitzmaurice's judgment in signing her for his picture.

Gail Kane.

Miss Kane was born in Philadelphia. It is safe to say that if all Philadelphia girls possessed her attractions, Broadway would soon be depopulated of its men. She went to boarding school in Newburgh, N. Y., and through amateur theatricals in school got the stage fever. While summering at Long Beach, L. I., she was offered a small part in Charles Frohman's "Decorating Clementine" and eagerly grabbed at the chance. Her next engagements were with Marie Tempest in "Vanity Fair" and in Augustus Thomas' "As a Man Thinks." Her first leading part was with Chauncy Olcott in "Macushla." Then came leading parts in Augustus Thomas' play "The Model," "Anatol," at the Little Theater, "Seven Keys to Baldpate," "The Miracle Man," and "The Hyphen."

Orchestra Director of Note

Following closely on the announcement that he had engaged the well-known composer, Alfred G. Robyn, as organist of the Rialto theater at Forty-second street and Broadway, New York, comes the statement from Managing Director S. L. Rothapfel that he has placed under contract as director of his orchestra, Hugo Riesenfeld, formerly concert master and one of the directors of Hammerstein's Manhattan Opera Company. Mr. Riesenfeld, who was born in Vienna and who was a student at the Royal Conservatory of Music there, is equally well known on both sides of the Atlantic as a violin soloist and conductor.

Mr. Riesenfeld will have under his direction the largest orchestra ever installed in a moving picture house, and his musicians will be chosen for their particular capability in their various lines and from symphony orchestras all over the country. Mr. Rothapfel has given him a free hand to make the Rialto orchestra the most notable organization of its kind in the country.

To Open in London

Thomas E. Davies, one of London's best known motion picture men, has reached America to take D. W. Griffith's great spectacle, "The Birth of a Nation," back to England. Mr. Davies saw the picture for the first time Monday night and is enthusiastic about it for English and foreign consumption. He predicts that it will more than duplicate its vogue in America when it reaches the other side.

Mr. Davies' present plan which he has just completed with Mr. Griffith's consent, is to produce the picture in London at either the Alhambra or one of the more modern theaters there. Following its establishment in the British metropolis other productions will be organized for a tour of the provinces simultaneous with the run in London. In this move it is said that Mr. Davies will have the encouragement of the British military authorities who are keen for the great spectacle because of its tremendous appeal to national pride and patriotism. While it will not be used in any sense as a propaganda, the Englishmen who have seen the picture say it will be extremely useful at this time in stirring up sentiment that will encourage enlistments in the cause.

To Prepare Musical Score

Frederick Arundel, who has general charge of the music for D. W. Griffith's motion picture productions, returned to New York Tuesday from a trip to the west where he was in consultation with Mr. Griffith regarding details for future photo-spectacles which this master director is planning to bring out.

Mr. Arundel will remain in New York long enough to equip the several orchestras which are to accompany the road tours of Griffith's current masterpiece, "The Birth of a Nation." As soon as this work is finished he leaves for Palestine and the Orient, to gather material for the forthcoming score which will be made an important detail of Griffith's ambitious plan to reproduce in motion pictures "The Quest of the Holy Grail," as outlined in Edwin Abbey's immortal paintings which now adorn the walls of the Boston Public Library. Mr. Arundel, before he returns to America to complete his score, will have visited the entire field covered by the locale of this celebrated work.

New Booklet By Automatic

An interesting little booklet on its new automatic ticket selling machine has been issued by the Automatic Ticket Selling and Cash Register Company, 1478 Broadway, New York. The ticket seller, which is operated by the "press button method" and relieves the cashier of all the labor of selling tickets, except, of course, that of making change, is explained in detail in the booklet, accompanied by illustrations of the machine in action. Progressive exhibitors, whether or not they contemplate installing an automatic ticket seller, will find this booklet of great interest.

Brevities of the Business

Harry Graham, for the past year and a half manager of the Butterfly theater, Milwaukee, severed his connections with that house Sunday, July 4, and immediately took charge of the new $100,000 Merrill building theater, now being constructed. Mr. Graham's resignation came as a distinct surprise, not only to his many friends, but to his employer, J. R. Freuler, president of the Mutual Film Corporation, who is major stockholder in the corporation that owns the house. Mr. Graham's knack of making revenue producers out of theaters that had been failures long ago attracted to him the attention of owners, both in Milwaukee and Chicago. The first house that he turned from a "loser" to a "winner" was the Atlas theater. This house, prior to Mr. Graham's regime, had never proven a paying proposition, but thanks to his ability, it soon was made the best paying of the outskirt houses. From the Atlas he was transferred to the Butterfly theater. He was put in charge of the house at a time when it was losing heavily. Though a five-cent admission fee was being charged at the time, the house seemed unable to lure the crowds. Upon assuming charge Mr. Graham immediately boosted the price to 10 cents and despite the fact that the wiseacres predicted the immediate closing of the Butterfly it remained open and prospered until today it is one of the best paying theaters in Milwaukee. In his new position Mr. Graham will have charge of one of the most modern and largest photoplay theaters in Milwaukee.

Frank Powell, director of "A Fool There Was," "Children of the Ghetto," "The Devil's Daughter," and many other feature films of note, is producing "The Sorceress," by Victor Sardou, the author of "Princess Romanoff," which Mr. Powell also produced. Miss Nance O'Neil will be the star of this picture and the part which she enacts is one that is eminently fitted to her superb tragic genius. This drama excells in thrilling situations and great dramatic climaxes and under the able direction of Mr. Powell should prove a wonderfully successful picture and add further laurels to his reputation as one of the foremost producers of the present time.

Harry Spingler, the leading juvenile of the Fox Film Corporation, has completed a five part scenario entitled, "The Westerfall Mystery," written by Arthur E. MacHugh, who has been employed on the business staffs of such prominent firms as the Shuberts, John Cort, Lew Fields and the late B. F. Keith and Charles Frohman. Mr. MacHugh entered the play in the amateur prize play contest that was conducted during the summer of 1912 by the Philadelphia Evening Telegraph. While the play did not receive the allotted prize, the judges of the contest remarked that with several slight changes the play would be worthy of a metropolitan hearing. A prominent film concern has secured an option on the scenario, and intends to give it a screen production in the very near future.

In the "Case of Becky," in which Francis Starr starred, on the speaking stage, Carlyle Blackwell, Blanche Sweet, and Theodore Roberts will appear for the Lasky company with Frank Reicher at the directing end.

Arrangements have been completed by D. W. Griffith's forces for the presentation of "The Birth of a Nation" for a summer engagement at the Brighton Beach Music Hall beginning Friday night, July 2, and continuing indefinitely. This is the first time on record that a big Broadway hit has been duplicated for a summer engagement in the greater New York territory at the same time the original offering remains on Broadway. The same scale of prices will prevail in both theaters.

The Smalleys are getting ready to go to Chicago for the first four reels of the Madame Pavlowa picture, and Edna Maison who has the big acting part in this production is busy buying clothes.

Cyril Maude has departed and "Peer Gynt" is completed and Myrtle Stedman who acted so finely opposite Maude is taking a short rest between pictures.

Colonel W. N. Selig and Colin Campbell, director of the great feature, are busy cutting the "Ne'er Do Well" at the Selig Edendale studio at present. This is a tremendous task as more than 20,000 feet of negative was exposed in putting Rex Beach's adapted novel into film picture.

Ada Gleason, former star of the spoken drama, a well-known stock player in Chicago and the East, and formerly with the Selig company, hereafter will play in Murdock MacQuarrie's company at Universal City.

Madame Adoni Foireri, a former member of Sarah Bernhardt's company, has just been engaged for prominent roles in Reliance and Majestic photoplays. After three years as a member of the Divine Sarah's company in her Paris theater, Madam Foireri came to the United States. Here she played in the support of a number of leading actresses. She will play type parts in a number of forthcoming Reliance and Majestic features.

Mutual Film Corporation—Still continues weak. It is possible there may be developments in the Mutual along the line of the V-L-S-E Co. (Vitagraph-Lubin-Selig-Essanay) in the General, while the New York Motion, Majestic and Reliance will devote a portion of their energies to very pretentious feature films, they will still be a part of the Mutual organization in their regular program productions.

World Film Corporation—It is reported in financial circles that the Equitable Motion Picture Corporation (capitalized for $3,000,000) is being financed by two well-known New York Stock Exchange houses and that they will have a working agreement with the World Film Corporation. If the reported earnings of the World Film Corporation were not keyed in such an extravagant tone by some of the stock houses that are interested in seeing the securities advance, the public would be more inclined to invest in the securities.

Biograph Company—The market has been dull and featureless in these securities for the past several weeks.

New York Motion Picture Corporation—Stock is wanted at from 74 to 75. However, most of the stockholders are awaiting more definite news in regard to future developments and offerings are therefore very scarce.

General Market—There has never been a time within the past two years when film stocks have been so inactive. Competition of the severest kind is now being felt all along the line and purchasers of securities, who wish quick action, now find a more profitable field in the ordnance and war munition stocks. That the security market in the film field is undergoing the third stage of an evolutionary process seems to be apparent to even the casual observer. It is freely prophesied that in 1916 a number of the more sound companies will have their securities actively traded in on the New York curb, and that the list of stockholders will be very largely increased. Film stocks have now established themselves on a very reasonable collateral basis with many banks throughout the country. This will naturally tend to increase trading.

Earl R. Hewitt, who has been on the scenario staff of the Western Universal plant, has been made assistant to Calder Johnstone, manager of that department.

The Picture Playhouse Film Company states that it is nearly ready to release "The Pursuing Shadow," the first of its features starring Tom Terriss. This play had remarkable success on the legitimate stage in the past, when William Terriss and Edwin Booth appeared in this production, both in the United States and in England.

House Peters, the well-known leading man, whose work in a number of Lasky productions, has stamped him as an actor of merit, is the latest acquisition to the ranks of the New York Motion Picture Corporation. He has just been signed up by Director-general Thomas H. Ince and will arrive at Inceville within a few weeks to begin work as leading man in support of some of the women stars to be presented by the Kessel and Baumann organization.

The Globe Feature Picture Booking Office, A. J. Duffy, general manager, has taken over some of the former Majestic-Reliance features and will arrange all bookings for them. These films are "The Escape," "Home Sweet Home," "The Battle of the Sexes" and "Avenging Conscience."

"The Eternal City," the Famous Players Film Company's great photo-spectacle of Hall Caine's novel and play, which is considered one of the few most notable photoplays ever presented in the entire annals of the screen, was last week shown in Connellsville, Pa., the home town of its chief producer, Edwin S. Porter.

Clara Kimball Young, she of the lustrous eyes, heads a party of actors and actresses at Gedney Farm near White Plains, N. Y. There they intend to take the summer hotel scenes which figure so largely in the photoplay "Marrying Money" which Mr. James Young is putting on elaborately for the World Film Corporation. Among those going are Chester Barnett, Winthrop Chamberlain and William Jefferson.

Following a series of one-reel comedies, the Headline Amusement Company announces that it will make a miniature production of "Romeo and Juliet" with Little Will Archie and diminutive Violet Howard in the title roles. The entire company will be made up of the stars of the Lilliputian world, "Romeo and Juliet" will be in five reels. The present plan is to start making this picture September 1.

Dustin Farnum, America's champion matinee idol, arrived this week, at the studios of the New York Motion Picture Corporation, and is now at work, under the direction of Reginald Barker in "The Iron Strain," a powerful story of Alaska, by C. Gardner Sullivan and Thomas H. Ince.

Another one of Miss Kathlyn Williams' unusual stories, written by that able Selig star and played by her, is under way at the Selig Jungle-Zoo.

The Burton King and Joseph De Grasse Universal companies have left Universal City for the mountain country back of Los Angeles for ten days in order to make exterior scenes in western productions soon to be released.

P. J. Doran, manager of the "World in Motion" Theater, Glen Falls, N. Y., writes the Pathe Syracuse office as follows: "The 'Who Pays?' series of dramas has pleased my patrons so well that I am inclined to repeat the whole series again."

President Charles C. O'Hara of the All Celtic Film Company, is now hard at work on two more comedy series that are to succeed the Peaceful Rafferty comedies now playing to capacity houses all over the entire United States. The success of the Rafferty comedies has been almost instantaneous, and he says that the ones to follow will even be still greater. "Rafferty at His Summer Home," the fifth of the series, was started this week by Director J. A. Fitzgerald.

"Red Robin," by Fred Jackson, author of the big New York success "A Full House," will be put into a feature by Wharton, Inc., and released by Pathe.

Eddie Foy, father of the innumerable little Foys, and comedian of note, will be soon seen in Keystone pictures. Mr. Foy was recently signed to appear under the direction of Mack Sennett, managing director of the Keystone Film Company, and will arrive in Los Angeles in the near future. He will start work immediately after arriving at the Keystone studios.

George LeGuere, the well-known Broadway player, has just completed his work on Essanay's six-act drama, "The Blindness of Virtue," written by Cosmo Hamilton. Mr. LeGuere is well remembered in his parts in "The Man from Home" and "The Dawn of Tomorrow." He has played with Eleanor Robson, David Warfield and Gertrude Elliott.

Sir Gilbert Parker's greatest novel, "Jordan Is a Hard Road," which critics have pronounced to be even better than "The Right of Way" and "Seats of the Mighty," penned by Sir Gilbert, it has just been announced, will appear in the near future as a Mutual Master-Picture. Preparations are now under way at the Majestic studios, in Hollywood, Cal., for the filming of this graphic story of the great Northwest.

For photoplay technique, excellence of production and photography, "Scandal," the latest masterpiece produced by the makers of "Hypocrites," has won a place in the Hall of Fame to be proud of.

Guy Oliver, one of the Selig favorites, will be seen playing opposite Kathlyn Williams in her animal feature, "The Mark of a Lioness."

Julia Dean is out in California at the Universal City studios working on the first scenes of the big feature play which she is doing for the screen.

Charles Chaplin and his company has moved from his temporary plant on Court street, Los Angeles, Cal., to the new Essanay studios on Boyle Heights. The Essanay-Chaplin company has been augmented by several new players.

Mack Sennett's large staff of funmakers engaged in the producing of Keystone (Mutual) comedies has been augmented by the arrival of Cecile Arnold at the Inceville studios.

Eugene Mullin, one of the most popular scenario writers of the Vitagraph company, has been appointed a director.

Edwin Stevens, who starred in "The Devil," the Molnar play, which created such a sensation some years ago, has signed with the Big U company and will appear in a feature play in the near future.

Richard C. Travers, leading man with Essanay, who recently completed work in his part playing opposite Viola Allen in "The White Sister," has gone to Chattanooga, Tenn., where he will take the leading role in "Affinities," the play by Mary Roberts Rinehart, which is being produced by Essanay's southern company.

Violet Mersereau and Billy Garwood are now being featured in a big three-reel production called "The Wolf of Debt." It will be in the able hands of Jack Harvey, formerly a Thanhauser director, and judging from the extensive preparations which were made promises to be a banner production.

The new Las Vegas studio, recently secured by Coast Manager Thomas Persons for the Selig Polyscope Company, will shelter but one company at present. Tom Mix and his high-spots company will rough it in the wilds of New Mexico. Later another company may be added. Mix will be sufficient feasting for Las Vegas for a while at least.

A scene from Vitagraph's "The Sins of the Mothers."

"The Blindness of Virtue," Essanay's six-act feature written by Cosmo Hamilton, has been booked one month earlier than at first scheduled. The release date now set is July 19. "A Bunch of Keys," Charles Hoyt's comedy, which was booked for July, will not be released until August. Both these photoplays, released through the V. L. S. E., now have been completed by Essanay.

Dr. Edward A. Salisbury, the pioneer naturalist, who has taken remarkable motion pictures of wild life in the jungles and biological reserves of the United States government for scientific research purposes, has just exhibited his motion pictures to the inmates of Sing Sing, having yielded to an invitation from Warden Osborne, who has been doing so much since his appointment to render the lives of the inmates of New York state's penitentiary less dreary and barren.

T. N. Heffron is another versatile director of motion picture productions who was recently captured by the Selig Polyscope Company. Mr. Heffron is engaged at the Chicago studios of the Selig company in directing the production of Selig Red Seal plays. His first production completed was "The House of a Thousand Candles."

Six more Essanay players have gone east to join the company of Essanay players headed by Joseph Byron Totten, to take scenes for plays requiring an eastern atmosphere, especially along the coast. The players who have just left the Chicago studios are June Keith, Richardson Cotton, Ben Hendricks, Jr., Alfred Gronell, Hazel Daly and Marian Sullivan.

Harry Lorraine, one of the actors in the cast of Oscar A. C. Lund's Universal production, "Just Jim," is in Universal City hospital as the result of an overpowerful dynamite explosion which fractured his arm in two places and cut a six-inch gash in the back of C. T. Edmundsen's head.

Thomas MacLarnie, who played for twenty years on the stage, now is engaged in work with Essanay in photoplays. His first part was that of the Rev. Mr. Pemberton in "The Blindness of Virtue," the Essanay six-act feature to be released through the V. L. S. E.

John D. Spreckels, the San Francisco millionaire, has granted permission to the Universal Film Manufacturing Company to use his yacht during the filming of Joseph Medill Patterson's novel, "A Little Brother of the Rich." Permission to use the yacht, "The Venetia," was granted only after an exchange of reams of correspondence and a personal interview with the millionaire.

Essanay has entered a new field in putting out scenic pictures. These scenes are being taken largely in the west. There are many views taken in Colorado and in states bordering on the Rocky Mountains. It is its intention, however, to take scenes of all the beauty spots in America, especially those not too much frequented by tourists.

Carl M. Le Viness, for two years director with the Eclair Company, has been employed by the Universal Film Manufacturing Company to direct Sydney Ayres and his company of Big U players, including Doris Pawn, Val Paul and Rea Martin. His first production will be a two-reel story, entitled "Around the Corner."

FILM FOLK FLASHES.

Bobby Fuehrer, the juvenile player at the Reliance-Majestic studios is growing up. Bobby is seriously considering the purchase of full length trousers.

Hampton Del Ruth, managing editor, of the Keystone Film Company, gave a novelty dinner last Sunday night at a Los Angeles cafe. A small group of friends were present and all were enthusiastic over the souvenirs and the special entertainment. A theater party followed.

The waiting film world still is in the dark as to that impending wedding at the American studios.

A number of the "Flying A" actresses took prominent parts in a charity bazaar at Los Angeles last week. Miss Neva Gerber, the "Beauty" star, whose latest success is "His College Wife," was one of the shining lights. She made the boast that her booth took in the largest sum of money.

Boyd Marshall, Fairbanks Twins, and the Thanhouser Kidlet carried off the popularity honors at the big field day of the New York police department. Director Moore piloted them out there to do some scenes, and Boyd in a cop uniform shook hands with Commissioner Woods.

Complete Record of Current Films

Believing the classification of film pictures by the nature of their subjects to be of greater importance to the exhibitor than classification by maker, MOTOGRAPHY has adopted this style in listing current films. Exhibitors are urged to make use of this convenient tabulation in making up their programs. Film manufacturers are requested to send us their bulletins as early as possible. Films will be listed as long in advance of their release dates as possible. Reasonable care is used, and the publishers cannot be responsible for errors.

Brief Stories of the Week's Film Releases

General Program

Road O' Strife—(EPISODE FOURTEEN OR "A STORY OF THE PAST")—LUBIN—JULY 5. —Gershom tells Madison and Alene the story of the past, of how the King of Urania, knowing that a revolution was about to take place had entrusted to him the care of his little daughter, Alene. They had escaped to America and Caleb Jerome had tried to gain possession of the girl's wealth. Gershom had placed the cup by the old spring in order that he might keep the secret, thinking that no one would remove it. Alene is left in the care of Madison's wife, while Gershom goes out on business, which he does not disclose. For further review, see page 116, this issue.

Hearst-Selig News Pictorial No. 53—SELIG—JULY 5.—Earthquake along Mexican border in Imperial Valley does strange freaks, El Centro, Calif.; monument to the restoration of the mineral springs by the state of New York is unveiled, Saratoga, N. Y.; committee lays wreath at foot of Washington monument in Paris to show appreciation of aid rendered to war victims by Americans; annual horse show of South Shore Country Club, Chicago, Ill.; floods from heavy rains sweep great wheat fields of central Kansas; summer fashions by Lucile, Lady Duff Gordon; following news of sinking of Lusitania riots against Germans broke out in South Africa, Johannesburg, Transvaal; students march to join colors at call to arms, Rome, Italy; Cornell wins varsity race on Hudson River, Poughkeepsie, N. Y.

Hearst-Selig News Pictorial No. 54.—SELIG—JULY 8.—Youthful inventor exhibits model battleship at Panama Fair; Mystic Shrine parade in Brooklyn, N. Y.; fire arms taken from persons at police stations in Chicago are confiscated and dumped into the lake; novel summer fashions designed by Lucile, Lady Duff Gordon; Battery F, New York National Guard, holds field day at New York; women put roof on shed when carpenters strike is on; Serbian battle line in Belgrade, showing their fighting against the Austrians.

Whom the Gods Would Destroy—(THREE REELS)—LUBIN—JULY 9.—Rice and Strong are partners in the firm of mining engineers. Rice is a widower with an only son, Tom. Laska Ayon, a wealthy Brazilian, meets Rice and falls in love with him. Strong is a married man and through excesses and bad speculation he is placed on the verge of bankruptcy. Strong decides that the death of his partner is the only way he can get back on his feet again. On the evening that there is to be a double wedding between Rice and Laska and Tom and Nell Strong, Rice receives a box of bon bons, which Strong has poisoned. Before the wedding ceremony can be completed Rice falls to the floor dead. Later through the efforts of Laska, Strong is almost arrested, but escapes in an automobile, which is hurled by an express train through the air and retributive justice comes to the murderer through the hand of fate.

As It Happened—BIOGRAPH—JULY 12.—Featuring Claire McDowell and Harry Carey. The new foreman after seeing the ranchman's daughter bestow a warm welcome on the young "tenderfoot" draws his pay and leaves the ranch. Some time later he sees the young "tenderfoot" and recognizes him. He manages to save his life and after a few moments the "tenderfoot" tells him that the large sum of money which he was gambling with had been stolen from his "father." The ex-foreman takes the money back to the ranch house and he places the money in a drawer. He is come upon by the rancher who attacks him and orders him out. Later his honor is cleared and he wins the girl.

The Rev. Salamander Unattached—ESSANAY—JULY 12.—John Thorn and Beverly Bayne featured. The Rev. Salamander was a minister because his mother determined to make him one. He is given a parsonage in a small town and everything is fine except that Charlotte Bingham refuses to have anything to do with him. Then one day the catcher of the town baseball squad nearly lost the league pennant and the Rev. Salamander swung his college arm in the box and struck out two men and the game was won. After the crowd had finished cheering the minister and Charlotte drew aside and kissed. No one objected for the town now held the pennant.

The Smouldering—(TWO REELS)—SELIG —JULY 12.—A splendidly acted story with Eugenie Besserer as Rachel St. John, a morphine fiend, and the mother of Gerald Strathmore, socially prominent. When the mother of Gerald's fiancee questions his social status and demands to see his real mother, Rachel sacrifices all, and is able for a few hours to pass as the queenly type of woman her son's friends believe his mother should be, though later she returns to her lonely lodgings to die in torture. See review, page 114, this issue. N. G. C.

Mr. Jarr and Gertrude's Beaux—VITAGRAPH—JULY 12.—Gertrude, the Jarr's servant, accepts the invitations of Claude, the fireman; Gus, the saloonkeeper, and Hogan to go on an excursion with them. She is to meet them at the park bench at seven o'clock and on this bench Willie and Emma Jarr smear a bottle of glue. The three swains arrive, sit on the bench and cannot arise. They are sold three pair of white duck pants by a laundryman and in this way manage to get up from the bench. On board the boat Gertrude, who has gone with Casey, the cop, meets the commodore, whose trousers had been sold to the three swains and then on comes the three who had planned to meet Gertrude. After much excitement they are all seen to enjoy the dancing on the deck.

Coincidence—(TWO REELS)—BIOGRAPH JULY 13.—Madge Kirby and an all-star cast. The blind violinist is taken into the hearts of all in Willow Creek. One day he overhears Stinger Johnson read a news item to the effect that a notorious desperado is dying in jail at San Bernardino. The old man requests that he be taken to San Bernardino, where he asks the dying man "what have you done with my daughter and her child." The question dates back to twenty years ago when the old man had forbidden his daughter to marry a worthless fellow. Later the old man is blinded with pepper and the desperado takes his wife and child away. Dying the desperado tells how after his wife's death he had left the child in care of an old neighbor and had never learned what became of her, but coincidence reveals his long-lost daughter in the person of Stinger Johnson's wife, Marietta.

Temper—(THREE REELS)—ESSANAY—JULY 13.—Featuring Henry B. Walthall and Ruth Stonehouse. Frank Bradbury, because of his father's ungovernable temper, leaves home. He battles hard to conquer the same emotionalism he has inherited from his father. The only vicious exhibition of his temper occurs when a school chum annoys his childhood sweetheart. He is expelled from school because of the terrific beating he gave the youth. He becomes engaged to Rose and they return to his home, where he hopes to get his father's consent to their engagement. Because his mother had sanctioned the return of her boy she is attacked by his father and Frank arrives while he is shaking his fist in her face. He picks up a paper weight and kills his father. He is brought to trial and acquitted on the grounds that he was justified in the act as he was protecting his mother. Rose and he are later married.

A Flashlight Flivver—KALEM—JULY 13.—Featuring Ham as a photographer. He is unlucky because Bud, his assistant, places a seltzer bottle in the camera and when Ham attempts to snap some pictures he douses the patrons with water. Later when a delegation of firemen are ready to pose, the fire bell rings and they madly rush out. Angelica Footlights visits the studio with her son, Billie. She removes her cloak and stands before the photographer clad only in tights. Bud places nitro-glycerine and gunpowder in the flashlight pan and when Ham goes to take Angelica's picture what follows ruins the studio and buries Ham and his camera under the wreckage.

Studies in Clay—LUBIN—JULY 13.—Animated cartoons showing a sculptor after consuming a schooner of beer transformed into dreamland where his studio assumes many changes. The statue again assumes its unfinished state and once more the sculptor produces a beautiful masterpiece. Finally the little pen and ink tries to take liberties with a tempting girl of clay and meets with rebuff which knocks him out of sight. On the same reel:

What a Cinch—Lubin—July 13.—Chief of Police Meyers and his lieutenant, Dick Young, are in love with Molly Mason, who tells the chief that she might marry him when he gets $500. Dick hits on a scheme to get some money. He goes to Cohen, a pawnbroker, and offers him $500 for a ginger box which had been left there. He leaves a fictitious address and departs. Meyers drops his bank roll and when Dick returns he sells the box to Cohen for $400. Meyers blames it all on Cohen and proceeds to beat him up.

The Parson Who Fled West—Selig—July 13.—The Rev. John Grant upon discovering that his sister's husband has lost $10,000 of church funds entrusted to him and knowing that he has a wife and child to care for, takes the blame for the lost money. He goes out West and arrives at Ten Strike, Nevada, where he opens a little church among the rough westerners. While there he meets and falls in love with a girl, but cannot marry her as he knows that there is an order back East for his arrest. His whereabouts are discovered and orders are sent to arrest him. Just as he is about to be pushed into prison a telegram comes stating that the guilty man has confessed and Grant is freed and proposes to the girl.

A Natural Man—(Two Reels)—Vitagraph—July 13.—Featuring Alfred Vosburg and Myrtle Gonzalez. Karl Holden, who has been brought up in the woods, is a lover of nature. Rose, a wealthy heiress, visits her uncle in the West and meets Karl, who afterwards tells his father that he has found his mate in the woods. The next morning Rose's uncle calls for her and Karl, seeing his mate being led away, is very anxious to follow. Later Karl calls upon Rose at her town house and after many heart-breaking experiences for him, Rose is awakened to the fact that he is indeed her real mate.

The Fable of the Scoffer Who Fell Hard—Essanay—July 14.—Featuring Harry Dunkinson and Sydney Ainsworth. Mr. Pallzey is a great baseball enthusiast and vowed he would never waste any time watching a game of golf. But one Sunday after trailing after eighteen holes he declared he would like to swat the ball just once and it was not long before he had a complete supply of clubs. He took lessons from a professor, giving up business, and after eight years at a cost of $18,000 he won something which looked like an eye cup and was called a trophy. Now Pallzey declares that golf has added ten years to his life.

Cartoons in the Laundry—Edison—July 14.—Animated cartoons by Raoul Barre. The wife on her way to Reno to secure a divorce, stops in a laundry to have her skirt pressed. The husband happens along just as she is in a rather embarrassing position, and his protection is more than welcome to her. Together they look at the animated grouch chaser, and the wife after seeing the cartoons, cancels her trip to Reno and returns home with her husband. T. C. K.

All for Old Ireland—(Three Reels)—Lubin—July 14.—Valentine Grant featured. Eileen Donaghue, the belle of the countryside, is in love with Myles Murphy. Colonel Reid of the English army, seeks to thwart Irish independence and he dares Fagin to press his attentions upon Eileen and he is thrashed by Myles. After that Myles is Fagin's most hated enemy and through him is in danger of execution. Eileen manages to hand Myles a metal bar and he is about to escape when he is discovered and pursued. He barely escapes and we last see him leaving Eileen and bound for France, promising to send for her and her mother as soon as he finds a haven for them there.

The Straight and Narrow Path—(Two Reels)—Kalem—July 14.—Marin Sais and Arthur Shirley featured. Frances is the sole support of her mother and is worried by the attentions of Harris, one of the employees of the Dominick store, in which mysterious thefts have occurred and a special investigator is hired. Leonore and her assistant discover that Frances promised to attend a stag party Harris is giving that evening and though Leonore pleads with the girl not to go, she is fearful of losing her position and leaves for the stag. Here she evades Harris' outstretched hands and runs is found in the act of rifling the safe of the Dominick store and is captured.

Pup, the Peacemaker—Selig—July 14.—Jake Adams and his wife cannot agree. The wife leaves home taking the little girl and leaving the boy with Jake. They go to a nearby home, where the little girl becomes lonely and sighs for her dog. She wanders away from her mother and finds her little brother and the beloved pup. The children and the pup play together. The mother on the trail of her missing child meets the two children and their father and is convinced of her folly and she and her husband are reconciled.

The Moneymoon Baby—Vitagraph—July 14.—Featuring Mr. and Mrs. Sidney Drew. The frat members give the newlyweds, Alexander and Enid Nast, a big send-off. During the journey to their destination the Nasts attract much attention. A few stations on Billy Squires, a member of Nast's fraternity, and his wife and baby board the train. As the train pulls into Sunnyview, the Nasts are terrified to see a crowd of young people with a decorated auto, a brass band and much hilarity, awaiting their arrival. Alexander borrows Squire's baby and steps off the train and when Squire and his wife step off the train the crowd carry them off, struggling and protesting. Meanwhile the Nasts are having an awful time with the baby. Finally everything is cleared up and the newlyweds are left in peace and happiness.

The One Forgotten—Biograph—July 15.—Featuring Frank Newburg and Isabel Rea. Grant Allen bids goodbye to his neighbor, Louise Summer. In the woods he falls in love with Marie, the daughter of a trapper, and marries her. After some time he returns to the city, bids farewell to his wife and departs never to return. The following summer Louise goes on a camping trip to the same locality and sees Marie strewing flowers on a new made grave, it is the grave of her child, named after its father. Louise persuades Marie to go home with her, and there Grant Allen implores her foregiveness and takes his wife to his arms.

The Pipe Dream—Essanay—July 15.—Billy Mason and Ruth Hennessy featured. The tramp seeks breakfast at a nearby house and the fat cook ushers the bull dog into the scene and it chases the tramp up a tree where he falls asleep with his corn cob pipe in his mouth and dreams that he picks up a pocket book filled with bills and is chased by its owner into the woods, where a fairy appears, but when he tries to kiss her, she disappears. He gets into a barrel to take a nap and it is rolled down the hill, strikes a tree and explodes. Then he awakes, having fallen out of the tree.

A House of Cards—(Two Reels)—Lubin—July 15.—John at first stands "ace high" in the esteem of his companions and his sweetheart, Mary Clark. He is called to the city and before leaving slips an engagement ring on the girl's finger so "the deck is cut." He becomes a clerk in the city and "the deal is on." Here he falls in love with the broker's daughter and "a heart flush" results from his growing intimacy with her. His position with Myrtle's esteem corresponds to "three aces and a queen kicker." He makes a "lucky draw" and is made junior partner and Myrtle consents to become his wife. There is "a broken suit of hearts" back home, where Mary is heart-broken. John's ambitions lead him onward and he dabbles in stocks and later he goes back to see Mary whom he finds is dead. At the same time he receives a telegram telling him that all his securities are gone. All is lost for "it was an imperfect deck, and souls are cast away."

The Fighting Kid—Mina—July 15.—Jerry drops down on a park bench between two tramps and is soon asleep. He dreams that he is in a harem and is kissing a beautiful woman. He awakens to find himself kissing one of the tramps. He then leaves the bench and saves Nellie from a masher. He goes to the girl's home and while there sees the fellow who had been annoying Nellie waiting outside for him. The fellow goes to sleep outside and Jerry removes his shoes, sprinkles tacks all over the ground around him and then begins to pummel the sleeping bully. Jerry is satisfied with the results but the bully goes to get re-enforcements and they are about to attack Jerry, when a policeman comes along and quells the disturbance.

Billy, The Bear Tamer—VITAGRAPH—JULY 15.—Featuring Constance Talmadge and Billy Quirk. Constance and her father, who consider themselves great hunters, go to a mountain cabin to rough it and are followed by Billy, Constance's lover. Billy purchases a bear costume and puts up a sign in the woods reading something like this: "$50 fine for killing bear under fourteen feet long," then the guide extracts cartridges from pa's rifle and substitutes blanks in their place. Finally Billy in his costume steals up behind pa and touches him on the shoulder. Pa takes a shot, with of course no result, except that Billy turns and chases after him. Later upon pa's arrival home he sees the big bear pick Constance up and carry her off. Then Billy in his natural clothes appears, does the hero act, and returns with his clothes torn, a bear skin and Constance. Pa then consents to their marriage.

Broken Ways—BIOGRAPH RE-ISSUE—JULY 16.—Henry Walthall, Blanche Sweet and Robert Harron featured. The road agent wins the love of the young telegraph operator and after their marriage she learns of his true character. She leaves him and obtains a position as operator at a railroad station in a different town, where she meets the sheriff, who asks her to marry him. Her husband, a bandit, comes to her station and implores her to aid him. In a pistol duel which follows he is killed and the wife thus freed, weds the sheriff, turning her back upon the tragic past.

Her Vocation—(THREE REELS)—EDISON—JULY 16.—Mrs. John Wallace decides to become famous as a writer of fiction. Her first manuscript is returned by the publisher because it lacks local color. Marjorie sends her husband to an underworld dance-hall to secure for her the necessary local color. Jean Halliday refuses to see her friend Bob Sheldon that night, because she intends visiting the Silver Star cafe to obtain material for a newspaper article on cheap dance-halls. Jean is seated at the table with Wallace, and they strike up a conversation. Marjorie becomes worried about her husband and sets out for the Silver Star. Outside the hall she meets Bob, who has come in search of Jean. When they are refused admittance, they call a policeman, and among others Wallace and Jean are arrested. This causes disconcerting complications, but matters are finally straightened out. For further review, see page 115, this issue.

For Her Brother's Sake—KALEM RE-ISSUE—JULY 16.—Alice Joyce and Carlyle Blackwell featured. Bob Graham's wife, Mary, receives a message from her brother, Allen, that he is wanted on a smuggling charge. She asks Bob for money, but she refuses to tell him for what purpose she wants it and he, therefore, declines to give it to her. Later Bob sees Allen meeting his wife and believes her guilty of a clandestine love affair. Mary hides her brother in the mine, not knowing that that work has been suspended because a cave-in is feared. Bob follows Mary and Allen and to his horror they enter the mine and the cave-in occurs which blocks up the entrance. Bob returns to his home and finds a picture of Allen which reveals the boy's identity. Mary and her brother are saved in the nick of time and Allen is given money by Bob and makes his escape.

An Hour of Freedom—LUBIN—JULY 16.—Arthur Johnson and Lottie Briscoe featured. Edith Walton is engaged to Thomas Goddard. What more can a girl ask? He is the catch of the season surrounded by wealth and luxury. As the dawn peeps in Edith dons simple clothes and tiptoes downstairs and goes out for a walk. The milkman, a husky red-cheeked youth, who mistakes Edith for the maid, asks her to go for a ride with him and she in the mood for any sort of adventure, accepts. While they are driving down the country road the milkman makes advances toward the girl and at this moment Tom arrives upon the scene. There is a fight in which the milkman comes out second best and Edith and Tom go to a country minister's and are married. Afterward they are happy to think that their marriage was not unattended by a little bit of romance.

Welcome to Bohemia—VITAGRAPH—JULY 16.—Featuring Wally Van and Nitra Frazer. Paul Venner, an artist, does not want to bring his wife home to his Bohemian apartment, so wires ahead to have it fixed up like a real place. Paul receives a telegram stating that his mother-in-law is coming to look over her new son-in-law. A knock at the door and in comes a dolled-up creature who flings her arms about him wildly. Then the bell rings and a trim-tailor-made lady steps in, who he thinks is his mother-in-law and he greets her warmly. Then Agnes, his wife, hears pounding at the door of the closet wherein Paul had hidden the painted lady and upon opening it she cries "mother." Finally things are straightened out and Agness and her mother are given a hearty welcome to the circle of Bohemia.

The Little Runaways—BIOGRAPH—JULY 17.—Featuring George Stone and Zoe Bech. The little girl finds a companion in the son of the gardener at her mother and father's summer home. One day she smashes a vase and mamma promptly scolds her, while daddy takes her part, making matters worse. She goes out into the garden and meets the gardener's son and they decide to go in search of new parents. By the lake they find a boat and are about to embark in it when the gardener finds them and has a long swim before rescuing the two. Meanwhile mamma and daddy have missed their daughter and are frantically searching the ground for her. In joy over her safe return they become reconciled after a quarrel they had.

For His Mother—EDISON—JULY 17.—Cast with Carlton King, Herbert Yost and Helen Strickland. Jim befriends the Kid, a raw recruit who is a butt for the jibes of the "regulars" at the army post. Later the Kid attempts to desert, but he is caught and put in jail. Jm learns that the Kid is his brother. He helps him escape, and for doing so he is sentenced to eighteen months in jail. Jim dreams of the time when he will be able to returns to his mother who he has not seen for fifteen years. T. C. K.

Cobb are featured in this story of the Tennessee mountains which concerns Jane, a mountain girl, who is loved by John Doyle, but later accidentally shoots John's brother, Ralph, with the result that Ralph loses his mind and Jane believes herself a murderess. Eventually Ralph's mind is restored, and Jane learns she has harmed no one. See review, page 111, this issue. N. G. C.

A Deed of Daring—(AN EPISODE OF THE "HAZARDS OF HELEN" SERIES)—KALEM—JULY 17.—Daniels, Helen's relief, is a member of a smuggling band and keeps in touch with his chief by means of messages concealed in oranges, one of which Helen gets and discovers that a number of Chinamen are due to be smuggled across the border inside a freight car that morning. Helen and her men commandeer a locomotive and go in pursuit of the smugglers. In accordance with Helen's plan the locomotive overhauls the freight and passes it. Reaching a bridge Helen makes a leap for the brace bar and climps hand over hand until she is directly above the center of the parallel track and when the freight approaches she drops to the roof of one of the cars. She surprises Daniels and the smugglers are placed under arrest.

Wifie's Ma Comes Back—LUBIN—JULY 17.—Featuring Billie Reeves, who is informed that his mother-in-law is on her way to pay them a visit. On his return from the office his mother-in-law is there to meet him and he tells her that she needs strenuous exercise. He gives her boxing lessons and mauls her about. Later wife hires a real boxing instructor, who soon has Billie's mother-in-law in tip-top shape and she mauls him about until he is counted out. She then takes the reins of the establishment and rules the household.

Lives of the Jungle—SELIG—JULY 17.—A Selig Jungle-zoo wild animal picture-play which contains thrills and throbs and wild beasts enact convincing parts. There is a wealth of jungle scenery and versatile acting.

The Confession of Madame Barastoff—(THREE REELS—JULY 17.—Featuring Jack Costello and Edna Holland with an all-star cast. Through Nicholas, a servant, General Barastoff learns that his wife is secretly in love with Lieutenant Sergius Kauver. Kauver receives notice that he must go on a dangerous mission and steals from his quarters to bid goodbye to Constance Barastoff. The next morning Kauver is summoned and is confronted with the charge of being a traitor, who had been conveying information to the enemy. The young man swears that he is true to the country, but refuses to tell where he was the night before. He is ordered to be shot without delay. Constance through the window sees the brave young officer prepare to meet his maker. The strain is too much and with a wild cry of "Stop!" she is about to confess, but it is too late, her cries mingle with the crash of the rifles.

Mutual Program

Court House Crooks—(Two Reels)—Keystone—July 5.—The Judge buys his wife a necklace and loses it on the street. District Attorney Ford finds it and gives it to the Judge's wife. The Judge sees a boy with the box and accuses him of the theft. Later, the youngster escapes from jail, and, pursued by the police, enters the Judge's home, to find the District Attorney there. Ford promises the boy that he will free him at the trial, and, as the boy is taken away, makes a thrilling escape. It looks rather dark for the young offender, but the boy's sister queers the game, and the Judge's wife enters wearing the necklace.

Fifty Years After Appomattox—Thanhouser—July 4.—Dorothea, a little old lady is seen leaning over the graves of her husband and brother and recalls the days of the Rebellion when her brother, a Union Soldier, went to the front. She recalls her arrest, and how a Southern officer appealed to Jefferson Davis for her release. Later, while a nurse in a Federal hospital, she meets the Southerner, who is wounded and a prisoner. She wins her brother over and aids the Southerner to escape. At the close of the war, the Southerner comes North, marries Dorothea and little by little, her husband and brother forget their old enmity. They now lie side by side.

A Maker of Guns—(Two Reels)—Thanhouser—July 6.—Featuring Arthur Bower. An American manufacturer of munitions hopes to profit by the war in Europe and sends his only son abroad to represent the firm. He receives word that two great powers are interested and is elated, but his daughter does not share his enthusiasm. In due time, the guns are sent abroad and the manufacturer not hearing from his son becomes uneasy. At last, the son's valet returns with the news that his son had enlisted and, during an attack on a fort, had been killed by guns bought in America. His father's guns were responsible for the death.

At the Postern Gate—Reliance—July 9.—Featuring Teddy Sampson. A boy and girl meet secretly at the postern gate, as did his father and her mother twenty-five years before. The girl's mother has not forgotten the way the boy's father deserted her on their wedding eve to marry another, and determines that her daughter shall marry a rich young man. She is warned by the latter of the secret meetings, and, taking his place because of his cowardice, garbs herself as a man and challenges the boy to a duel. The boy seeing through the other's disguise does not thrust back, but the girl prevents her mother from killing her sweetheart. Reconciliation follows and the young couple marry.

The Mountain Girl—(Two Reels)—Majestic—July 11.—Featuring Dorothy Gish and Ralph Lewis. Nell's grandfather, an aged mountaineer, tells Ned, her sweetheart, of the powerful grip of his hands before he became paralyzed and helpless. A stranger is found sick and delirious in the forest and brought to the cabin by Ned. Nell nurses him back to health. He forcibly makes love to her while she struggles to resist his embrace. The old man prays for the return of his strength. His prayer is answered and he makes short work of the stranger. A little later, Ned finds the intruder dead, and the old man dying in Nell's arms.

The Zaca Lake Mystery—(Two Reels)—American—July 12.—Featuring Ed Coxen and Winifred Greenwood. Slippery Joe, an outlaw, is tracked into the mountains and there enters the home of John, a miner, and steals from Nell, his daughter, a bag of nuggets. The lonely ranger of Zaca Lake comes upon a stranger, who gives him a card which reads, "Mr. Bond, San Francisco." Later the girl and her father, who have followed the outlaw, come to the ranger's cabin and there meet Mr. Bond, and the girl thinks he is the outlaw. The sheriff also arrives, and after some time the real Mr. Bond, who has been wounded by the outlaw, comes and tells them his story. Later the girl gets the gold from the outlaw and he is arrested. For further review, see page —, this issue.

The Arrow Maiden—Reliance—July 12.—Featuring "Billie" West. Dove Eye, a tribal medicine woman, is persuaded by Eagle Eye to cast an evil charm over his rival. Brave Heart dies the next day, and Arrow Maiden follows her lover's body to the grave. Eagle Eye, gloating in his victory, contrives to be chosen medicine man, but Dove Eye frustrates his plan. She avenges herself and resurrects Brave Heart who later hurls Eagle Eye over the cliff. The lovers are reunited.

Applied Romance—Beauty—July 13.—Neva Gerber and Webster Campbell featured. Lucia Norman, a wealthy young woman, is besieged by fortune hunters. Circumstances throw her into the association with Oliver West, who comes into the scene just in time to prevent the girl from signing a paper, which would have meant the loss of her birthright. The girl then tells Oliver that he must marry her. He assents to her proposition, however, insisting that the wedding take place at the expiration of two months. The two months elapse and Oliver has fallen in love with the girl, but his attitude toward her has been strictly a business manner. He then adopts different tactics, writing highly romantic letters to her, leaving them where she may find them. He signs no name and Lucia falls in love with the anonymous writer. She later learns the identity of the writer and they live happily ever after.

A Ten-Cent Adventure—Majestic—July 13.—Juvenile comedy with Violet Radcliff, Carmen de Rue, and George Stone. Joe, a poor boy, in order to make a birthday present to the banker's daughter, applies at the bank for a loan of ten cents. His application is granted. When he comes to return the loan he discovers some crooks at work and saves the bank from being robbed. The bank president gives the boy's mother a substantial sum of money as a reward for her son's bravery.

Mercy On a Crutch—(Two Reels)—Thanhouser—July 13.—Featuring Helen Fulton and Wayne Eyrie. Mercy Tanner, orphaned by a flood, is taken care of by relatives who curse and abuse her. One day, while dodging a blow, she falls and arises from her sick bed a cripple. She is shunned by girls of her own age who laugh at and ridicule her. A lounger siezes Mercy's crutch, holds it beyond her reach, but quickly surrenders it when demanded to by a stern faced stranger. Mercy, a few days later, overhears a conversation between the sheriff and his posse and surmises that they are after the stranger. She rides to a deserted cave to warn the stranger, and finds him wounded and alone. The sheriff's posse arrive and surround the cave, but Mercy with a leveled rifle defies them to approach. The stranger turns out to be a new marshal who has captured his man after a desperate fight.

To Melody a Soul Responds—AMERICAN—JULY 14.—Featuring Joe Galbraith and Vivian Rich. Krieg, an old master of the violin, is dying and Edler, the manager of a phonograph company, promises him a fortune if he will play his masterpiece "The Sunbeam Path" to make a phonographic record. Krieg agrees and then he dies, promising to guard over the agent, Edler, from the heavenly world to which he soon is to journey. After her father's death, Elsa marries Edler and they are blessed with a little child. Dehoff, a famous pianist, comes between them and through the power of his talented fingers upon the piano works an evil influence on the young wife. Edler finds them in a compromising position and with a drawn revolver advances into the room when the strains of "The Sunbeam Path" strikes his ear. The sound comes from his daughter's room, where she has placed the record on the graphophone. Elsa, too, hears the strains and repells the man, who would destroy her home. The old music master has kept his promise and repaid the debt of gratitude.

The Ruse—(TWO REELS)—BRONCHO—JULY 14.—Featuring William S. Hart, Bat Peters visits John Folsom, president of a rich Chicago firm, to arrange to sell his mine. Peters meets May Dawson, Folsom's secretary, and rents a room in her home. May overhears her employer planning to fleece Peters of his mine, and he imprisons her in the attic of an old house. That night Peters is asked to sit in at a game of poker by the rich crook's associates. He suspects them, and, covering the company with his gun, he backs from the room. From above, he hears a woman scream, and recognizes Mary's voice. After a fight with the gangsters he frees the girl and takes her home to her mother.

His I. O. U.—THANHOUSER—JULY 16.—Featuring Ray Johnston and Mildred Manning. A small boy runs away from an orphan asylum and finds a sympathizer and friend. The little newsgirl invests fifty cents of her money in newspapers for the waif. He is discovered by an uncle who takes him to his home and all the little girl has to remember him by is an I. O. U. The girl now grown to womanhood, secures permission from the city to conduct a news-stand, but a politician envying her success induces the mayor to cancel the privilege. She appeals to a young senator, who was the boy she befriended years ago, and he has the news-stand privilege restored to the girl. The childhood friendship is renewed and ripens into love. Later their children ask the meaning of the I. O. U.

The Burglar's Baby—(TWO REELS)—DOMINO—JULY 15.—Bill Slade, out of work, endeavors to provide for his wife and child. At last, desperate, he decides to burglarize the home of Dr. King. The doctor sees Bill at work. Later, the mills re-open and Bill secures a job. His baby ill, Slade begs the druggist to call a reliable doctor. Dr. King takes the case, and recognizes in Slade the burglar. The latter makes a confession to King, who is greatly moved by the story. He promises to keep the secret and brings the baby safely through its illness. Bill and the doctor become fast friends.

A Breath of Summer—RELIANCE—JULY 14.—Agnes, a garment maker, cannot support her mother on the small wage she receives and sews appealing notes in several outing shirts. The replies are unfavorable. Her mother continues to fail in health, and Agnes, desperate, takes some money from the factory cash drawer. A rich bachelor answering one of the appeals, arrives in time to save the girl from going to jail by reimbursing the manager for the theft. The girl and her mother are taken to the mountains and later Agnes is won by the bachelor.

Dot on the Day Line Boat—FALSTAFF—JULY 16.—Featuring Arthur Bauer, Mignon Anderson and Morris Foster. A reporter, through a subterfuge, gains admission to the office of a Wall Street financier who is known for his reticence. He begs for an interview and is ejected by the financier. Dorothy Dimples, his sweetheart, and a fellow reporter sees him evicted and swears vengence. She watches the financier's movements and follows him closely. The time arrives and she through her weeping attracts the attention of the financier while on the boat to Albany. She tells him her troubles and he comforts her. Thinking that she is unsophisticated, he discusses financial affairs and later consents to hav-

A Chase By Moonlight—Komic—July 18.—Featuring Fay Tincher. The trouble starts with a park flirtation, but does not materialize until Fay's father and mother go to a movie theater. Their auto is appropriated by a lady-crook, who is being pursued by a motorcycle policeman. Frightened by the thief's entrance, Fay leaps from the window, pajama-clad, speeds for the police. A breakdown causes her to dodge into the first house which happens to be that of the flirt. The motorcycle policeman arrives, exonerates Fay, and returns both her and the auto to her parents. At the same time he is received into the family.

Old Jane of the Gaiety—Thanhouser—July 18.—Old Jane for many years took care of the costumes at the Gaiety theater, and is regarded as a fixture. A shy, quiet little girl joins the chorus and old Jane instantly takes a liking to her. She proves to be clever, and the manager promises her advancement. On the opening night of the play, she attracts a wealthy man's attention and receives a note from him, inviting her and two companions to a little supper. Old Jane keeps her from accepting the invitation by telling her a story of her life and how she gave up a good man for a stage career. The little girl gives up her theatrical career and marries the man she loves.

When Father Had the Gout—Nestor—July 12.—Father is easily peeved, and when he sees his daughter making love to a boy, becomes very angry. The doctor tells him that he needs a change and he takes an outing to the beach. When they arrive, the boy is near by and awaits his chance. They are enjoying themselves, when the girl's father appears and threatens the boy with jail. The boy manages to get a position of waiter at the hotel, but the old man is suspicious and catches him spooning with his daughter. Dad chases the boy about the corridors. The old man's attendant, who is supposed to be a woman hater, receives a letter and hurries to a lady's apartment. He is tied and his whiskers are cut off and the boy, using glue, disguises himself and returns to the old man. Father is pushed to a lonely spot on the beach and kept there while the tide rises until he consents to the marriage of his daughter to the boy.

The People of the Pit—(Two Reels)—Gold Seal—July 13.—Featuring Cleo Madison and Joe King. Robert Fuller, a grain broker, discovers that his daughter Hilda is in love with his confidential man. He informs Sherwin that he wants a man higher than a clerk for a son-in-law. This leads to an argument and Sherwin states that he can go out on the market and whip Fuller. The challenge is accepted and Sherwin is discharged. He goes into business, corners the wheat market and ruins Fuller. Hilda then cleverly tricks him, causes a fall in the market and buys all his holdings. Later she receives a letter from Sherwin explaining matters, and, with her father, visits him in a hospital, where he had been taken after being shot by a crank. Fuller gives his consent to his daughter's marriage and tells Sherwin that the firm name will be Fuller & Sherwin.

King Baggot in His New Automobile—Imp—July 13.—Featuring King Baggot and Jane Gail. King Drake is about to buy a car and tells his sweetheart all about it. A few days later it arrives, and in trying to manipulate it he amuses his fellow boarders. He and Jane give it a tryout and consult the book of rules. King loses control of the car and finally succeeds in stopping it. He inspects the feed tank, but something goes wrong, which results in a terrific explosion. King, looking like a tramp, picks himself up, and looks around for Jane. He finds her in an adjacent lot and when he looks up, spies the remains of his auto smoldering in the branches of a tree. They sadly limp down the road.

The Prize Story—(Three Reels)—Victor—July 14.—Martha Turner and John Reynolds are sweethearts, but Dick Osgood, a city chap, obtains old man Turner's consent to marry his daughter.

Martha pleads with and persuades her father to give his consent to her marrying John, providing he earns $1,000 within a year. John arrives home, sees a magazine advertisement offering a prize of $1,000 in a photoplay contest, and writes a scenario, depicting Martha as a society girl, Dick Osgood as the villain, and himself as a successful artist who later saves Martha from the clutches of Dick Osgood, her husband. John receives a letter some time later and finds he has won the prize. He and Martha show the check to her father, who consents to the marriage.

The Opening Night—(TWO REELS)—BIG U—JULY 15.—Nina Vaughn's married life of two years is made unhappy by her husband's unfaithfulness and continual gambling. She decides to go back to the stage and is persuaded to accept Benheim, a theatrical manager's, offer to star in a new play. Meanwhile Vaughn is paying attention to May, a chorus girl, and in order to secure grounds for a divorce, follows Nina to Benheim's apartment. Vaughn's suspicions are unfounded and he is ejected by Benheim. He swears that he will spoil the opening night of the play, but when the time arrives, calls on May with the intention of leaving the city. He is introduced to May's husband and, angered by the discovery, leaves and goes to the club. He then goes to the theater, connects a coil of wire to the phone in Nina's dressing room and at the close of the third act, when Nina phones for help, answers, telling her that he is committing suicide. She hears the shot over the wire, gains control of herself and goes on with the act. The play is a success.

Dear Little Old-Time Girl—Laemmle July 15.—Kitty Bruce has grown up in the hills of old Virginia, knowing nothing of the outside world. Her aunt sends her to Mrs. Van Trump, a wealthy sister, in New York, on a visit. At the same time, James K. Lee, a wealthy southerner, is sought by all the matrons with marriageable daughters and is invited to Mrs. Van Trump's ball. He compares the picture in his watch with that of Dorothy Van Trump and dozes. He dreams of the girl with the old-fashioned hoop-skirt and poke bonnet and a vision of his mother appears. She takes Dorothy's picture, shakes her head and drops it on the floor. She leads him about the rooms and he witnesses the fickleness of present-day women. He awakes to find that he has been dreaming. Kitty Bruce, who had arrived before the ball, is received coldly, and later appears in an old-fashioned costume. Lee is missing, and is found just as Kitty tiptoes upstairs. Mrs. Van Trump notices the affection in Lee's eyes and orders Kitty to her room.

Captain Kent's Seals—Powers—July 15.—A popular vaudeville act, entertaining, well photographed and cleverly performed. Split with "Friends of the Animal Wizard," an educational picture made under the direction of Roy L. Ditmar, director of the New York Zoo.

The Eleventh Dimension—(Two Reels) Imp—July 16.—Professor Singleton believes that there is existence after death. He disapproves of his daughter's love for Lloyd Chambers and favors Dr. Lovejoy's attentions. He spends most of his days and nights in the laboratory experimenting. On one occasion, after a flash, he becomes frenzied. Dr. Lovejoy appears and is chloroformed and strapped to a chair by the professor. When he regains consciousness and pleads for mercy, the professor suggests that they play a game of chess, the loser to give up his life. The doctor cheats and wins. The professor shoots himself, and is surprised to find that he still lives. The police arrive, break open the door to the laboratory, and when the professor, whose life has been saved by the deflection of the bullet on his watch, sees his daughter being embraced by young Lloyd, his reason is restored. He realizes that there is but one real dimension, and that is love.

The Tide of Fortune—(Two Reels)—Kay Bee—July 16.—Colonel Long ejects his daughter and her child from his home, for marrying a Federal officer. After the war, his plantation in ruins, he goes to Washington in the hope of obtaining the postmastership of his village. He is turned down because of his animosity toward the Union, but later on his son-in-law gets the appointment for him. He then becomes reconciled to his daughter and her husband.

Her Rustic Hero—Nestor—July 16.—Featuring Eddie Lyons and Victoria Ford. Eddie tires of club life and goes to the mountains for a while. Victoria, who longs to be an authoress, is told that she must study her types. She decides to write about a mountaineer, and persuades her father to take a trip to a mountain resort. Victoria discovers Eddie fishing, and from his borrowed rough clothes, knows that she has found her character. Victoria indulges in a little love making. Eddie decides to teach her a lesson, and, with the aid of his father's friend, a mock marriage is performed, regardless of her protests. She informs her father, and while he is on the way to the cabin, Eddie meets Victoria and tells about the joke. They return to the cabin and are surprised when they hear that the marriage is binding and was performed by an ex-minister who has full authority. Victoria's father is not averse to the marriage, so they make the best of it.

The Trust—Victor—July 16.—Jim Mason's wife, through her extravagance, breaks up the home. Mason becomes a thief. His first attempt at burglary brings him face to face with Florence Allison, whose husband has neglected her. He sympathizes with her, and suggests a plan to restore her husband's love. Florence insists that he keep the pearls, and if the plan fails, to return them in six months. After a night out with the boys, Allison returns to find his wife bound and unconscious. He realizes his neglect, and the shock rekindles his dormant love. Jim is suspected of having the pearls. During a fight, he is injured, but manages to drag himself to the Allison home. He finds Florence happy and realizes that his plan was successful. He is allowed to keep the pearls.

The Toll of the Sea—(Two Reels)—Bison—July 17.—Captain Nelson, about to sail from San Francisco to an European port, determines to tell his employer's daughter, Virginia Mendon, of his love for her. He is overwhelmed at seeing Virginia kiss Randall, a secret service officer, good-bye. Randall leaves and he hears that she is engaged to him. He tries to drown his troubles in drink, and at the suggestion of a sailor, kidnaps Virginia and places her on board his vessel. The first mate, a loyal friend of Mr. Mendon, hears of it and, with a gang of men, tries to save her. During the battle, the contraband cargo is ignited and blows the ship to atoms. Virginia, almost drowned, is rescued by a crew of salvage pirates, who battle with another salvage crew. The victors then engage in a battle with the secret service boat. Virginia is taken to the pirates' camp and is discovered by Randall, who takes her home. Randall then captures his men and has them brought to justice.

Freaks — Joker — July 17.— Featuring Max Asher and Gale Henry. Herculo, the strong man of the sideshow, showers his attentions on Yum Yum, the beautiful Circassion maid. Hamus, a broken-down actor, is very hungry and tries to steal a handout from the mess tent. The manager notices how thin Hamus is and engages him as a living skeleton. Yum Yum transfers her affections to the newcomer. Herculo starts a riot and gets the worst of it. Yum Yum finds a photo of a woman among Hamus' effects and, sure that he is false, returns to Herculo.

The innocent Hamus pines away, gets thinner, and has his salary doubled. The original of the photo arrives with her ten children and recognizes Herculo as her long-lost husband. Yum Yum collapses in the arms of Hamus.

The Stranger—Powers—July 17.—Dayton Lee neglects his wife, Dorothy, for the bright lights and cafes. While purchasing a diamond lavalliere for his wife as a peace offering, he is observed by Sydney Strange, a gentleman-crook. On the night Lee is dining with his secretary, Nan Clark, at the cafe, Strange enters his home and takes the jewel from the safe. Lee, disgusted with Nan's flirtations, returns home to find his wife with a strange man. He discovers the robbery, disregards his wife's appeal and phones for the police. Dorothy swears that she will claim the stranger as her lover, and when the police arrive they are told that it was all a mistake. Strange places the lavalliere on the table before Dorothy, while her husband kneels and asks forgiveness. Strange passes out into the night.

For His Superior's Honor—Laemmle —July 18.—Ruby, daughter of Colonel Granden, is the pride of the regiment. Her mother objects to the familiarity, especially toward her husband's orderly, Jim Austin. Mrs. Granden receives a message from Jack Raymond, an old friend and admirer. She shows it to the colonel, who is delighted, as he thinks Raymond's presence will eliminate the coolness between them. Ruby is suddenly taken ill, and Austin, who is sent for her mother and father, finds Mrs. Granden about to embrace Raymond. Later Mrs. Granden, who is about to elope, kisses Ruby good night and drops Raymond's note, unnoticed, on the bed. The nurse finds it and shows it to Austin. He overtakes the couple, sends Mrs. Granden back on a pretext, thrashes Raymond and compels him to write a farewell note. Austin has brought the colonel and his wife to better terms.

A Doomed Hero—(Two Reels)—L-Ko —July 18.—Featuring Billie Ritchie. The baron departs and Billie, the groom, impersonates him. The maid, to whom he is affianced, sees him making love to an heiress and tells her father, who makes it lively for Billie. He attends a reception in his honor, and is mistaken for the baron by the vendetta. The bombs disturb the dinner party, and one, exploding in Billie's rear, causes him to rise in the atmosphere. His descent is more rapid and he meets several unpleasant obstacles, but the baron gets him.

Feature Programs

Fox

Should a Mother Tell—(FIVE REELS)—FOX.—Betty Nansen featured. Rose Baudin gives her child Pamela to the Brassard family to rear in order to shield the girl from her husband's brutality. Pamela grows to maidenhood and becomes bethrothed to Louis Brassard. Baron Gauntier arranges to blackmail Phillip, the son of Countess de Montsorel. Gauntier gives a signed agreement to Phillip, gets the money and goes to Gaspard's inn, where he is murdered and robbed of his pocket book. The crime is witnessed by Rose, who gets the pocket book from her husband, goes to the de Montsorel home and slips the money in a drawer of a desk in Phillip's room. Phillip is arrested for the murder of Gauntier and later when he is being led to be executed Rose admits that her husband is the guilty one. In the meantime Gaspard mad with drink throws himself into the river and is drowned.

Metro

Greater Love Hath No Man—(FIVE REELS)—METRO.—Doctor Merton is killed by his son, Harold. For the sake of his foster-mother, whose grief would be twice-fold, Varge takes the guilt, and is sentenced to life imprisonment. At the prison he is rewarded for his good conduct by being made a trusty. Varge falls in love with the warden's daughter, Janet. To save her from himself he determines to escape, and being a trusty, he has little trouble in doing so. In a distant town he meets Janet who is visiting a relative. Varge overcomes the temptation to flee with her, and gives himself up at the prison. After the death of Mrs. Merton, Harold confesses and kills himself. Varge is freed and marries Janet. For further review, see page 118, this issue.

North American

To the Highest Bidder—(CHAPTER TWELVE OF "THE DIAMOND FROM THE SKY"—(TWO REELS) — AMERICAN.—Arthur Stanley now known as John Powell becomes a millionaire. Stanley Hall which is sold at auction to the highest bidder, who is Detective Blake, who buys the place for Esther with money sent him by Arthur Stanley. Luke Lovell gains possession of "The Diamond from the Sky," but loses it and we last see it entangled in the tentacles of an octopus at the bottom of the bay. Esther and Quabba have started out on the journey to seek Arthur Stanley. For further review, see page 118, this issue.

Paramount

Chimmie Fadden—(FIVE REELS)—LASKY.—Victor Moore featured. Fanny, the daughter of millionaire Van Cortlandt, while engaged in slum work hires Chimmie Fadden as her footman. One night he sits up with Hortense, the French maid, and on starting upstairs discovers burglars in the dining room. He finds that one of them is his brother and at this moment hears the family descending the stars. Antoine, Chimmie's brother's accomplice and valet to Mr. Van Cortlandt, tells Chimmie that he will have Larry arrested if he betrays his guilt to his employer and rather than give up his brother, Chimmie pretends that his being intoxicated was the cause of the noise and Larry gets away with the silver. The next day Chimmie is discharged and later arrested on the charge of burglary, but Larry confesses and Chimmie is freed and returns to the Van Cortlandt household, where his true love, the French maid, lives.

Pathe

Pathe News No. 52—PATHE—JUNE —Baby parade on the Boardwalk in decorated rolling chairs, Atlantic City, N. J.; Colonel James M. Thomson and Miss Genevieve Clark, daughter of Champ Clark, are shown enjoying favorite sport; Black Diamond, the oldest buffalo in captivity, on auction block at the Central Park Zoo; Dario Resta wins 500 mile race in new Speedway Park, Chicago; Cornell wins varsity boat race at the intercollegiate regatta, Poughkeepsie, N. Y.; Pathe's American fashions; little New York boys, who left school, but who do not weigh the minimum at which the state permits them to work are taken to a camp to fatten up, Denville, N. J.

Toil and Tyranny—(THREE REELS)—PATHE.—Twelfth in the "Who Pays" series. David Powers, the president of a large lumber company, orders his men to work longer hours without extra pay. The men strike, and he has them evicted from their homes, which are owned by him. This makes the men desperate and they decide to kill their employer. One of the stevedores, Hurd, is armed with a revolver. As Powers' automobile leaves the house, he fires, and, by mistake, kills Laura, the president's daughter. The girl dies from the wound and the stevedore is arrested. For further review, see page 116, this issue.

The Submarine Harbor—(CHAPTER FOUR "THE ROMANCE OF ELAINE")—(TWO REELS)—PATHE.—The letter which Elaine and Jameson prepare to send to Washington is taken forcibly from Jameson by an assistant of Del Mar's, who kidnaps him. Later Elaine rescues Jameson at the point of her revolver, and Del Mar is followed by a mysterious geologist, who loses him when Del Mar, in a diver's suit, disappears beneath the waters of the bay, to come up in a submarine grotto that is the harbor of a mysterious submarine boat belonging to Japan, in whose employ Del Mar appears to be. See review on page 113, this issue. N. G. C.

Traitors to Their King—(FOUR REELS) —PATHE.—An interesting drama dealing with the intrigue and daring efforts of a set of ambitious courtiers who seek to overthrow their king and secure, for their own gain, the control of their government. The infamous plot is exposed by a loyal young count, and the traitors are punished. The count is handsomely rewarded by his king. The picture is artistically treated, and the beautiful settings are greatly enhanced by beng done in natural colors.

The manufacturer who brands his films and advertises them in Motography is so sure of their quality that he is willing to stand the full force of possible complaints.

He is making something for which he is proud to be responsible. His trade mark secures for him the increased sales that result from satisfaction and identification. At the same time it secures to the great mass of exhibitors the certainty of quality which the known manufacturer must maintain if he is to continue to be successful.

When you book films, book films that are trademarked and advertised in Motography. The manufacturers of such films stand behind them. Your satisfaction is vital to the continued success of the trade-marked advertised films.

Trade marks and advertising in Motography are the two greatest servants in the film business today. Their whole tendency is to raise qualities and standardize them while reducing prices and stabilizing them.

Laughing Gas—Pathe.—A one-reel comedy concerning the affairs of Heinie and Louie who buy a dentist-parlor with counterfeit money. A pretty miss visits the office to have her tooth treated. The girl objects to being kissed, but Heinie remedies this by administering laughing-gas. Administering gas becomes a habit with Heinie and a profitable one, as it offers an excellent opportunity for picking pockets. When the dentist learns that the money is counterfeit he summons a number of policemen. Heinie and Louie prove to be good runners, and easily outdistance their pursuers.

Andalusian Scenery—(Split Reel)—Pathe.—Showing the beautiful mountainous country of Andalusia, its natives and their primitive customs. On the same reel with:

Beneras.—Scenes of the many beautiful and interesting points of India. The Palace of Dagor, the market place, the sacred river, and a caravan starting upon its long journey are especially interesting.

Colonel Heeza Liar, Dog Fancier—(Split Reel)—Pathe.—Animated cartoon, made by the Bray Studios. The colonel takes a fancy to a stray dog, but the dog does not care much for the colonel, and proves his dislike by "wishing" a flea on his new friend. The antics of the little flea and the efforts of the colonel to get rid of it are good for many laughs. On the same reel with:

Lourdes.—Interior and exterior scenes of the cathedral at Lourdes, taken during an American pilgrimage to the Grotto.

The Butterfly—(Two Reels)—Pathe-Balboa.—The society girl trades identities with a pretty waitress at a seashore hotel. The little waitress, given the advantage of becoming clothes and an opportunity to meet wealthy young people as their social equal, becomes very popular. This results in her making a very desirable marriage with a young man, who, when she tells him her real identity, protests that he loves her just as much as before.

Universal Special

Scandal—(Five Reels)—Universal—July 10.—Lois Weber and Philip Smalley featured with an all-star cast. This picture shows how scandal wrecks the lives and homes of all who are drawn into its clutches. Kindness on the part of Mr. Wright to his stenographer is misinterpreted and results in his wife leaving him and getting a divorce. His stenographer later marries and lives happily until scandal again attacks her. Her husband commits murder, her mother refuses to let her into the house and she is last seen wondering where she will next go. For further review, see page 113, this issue.

The Broken Coin—Universal Special Feature.—Fourth two-reel episode of "The Face at the Window." Grace Cunard and Francis Ford featured. Kitty is about to open the package she sent to herself and show the coin to King Michael, when Frederick, panic-stricken, tries to stop her. Just to peeve him, she opens it, and finds it empty. She suspects Frederick, and in answer to the king's query, passes the matter off as a joke. While the ball is in progress, Kitty makes some wonderful discoveries and realizes that Frederick is aspiring for the throne. Later Kitty sees Count Sachio plotting with a diplomat of Grahoffen and hears them mention a coin. They talk of plans and fortifications, and when Sachio takes the coin from his pocket, it is the one that Kitty had sent to the palace. The next day, while Kitty and Roleau are on their way to Sachio's lodge, they pass Frederick's house just as he and Sachio come out. Their attention is called to Sachio's diplomatic accomplice sneaking into the apartment, and no doubt in search of Frederick's coin. They enter unobserved, await developments, and then tie and gag the man so that he cannot reach Sachio. They rush to Sachio's lodge and climb in through a window. Sachio and his friends are watched by Kitty and Roleau from behind the curtains of an adjoining room. At the same time, they are watched by a man outside of the window, whose face appeared at the palace window on the night of the ball. Wanting to get the coin before they do, he sneaks into the room and holds a knife above Kitty's head as the picture fades out.

World

Colonel Carter of Cartersville—(Five Reels.)—Featuring Burr McIntosh. The opening scenes tell the story of Nancy Carter's marriage to Robert Gill, a young man addicted to drink. When Nancy refuses to forgive him for breaking his pledge to her, her husband commits suicide outside her window. Years later the war breaks out and Nancy's daughter, Laura, falls in love with Tom Klutchem, who is a member of a northern raiding party. Colonel Carter goes North with hopes of retrieving his lost fortune. The house of Klutchem & Company refuses to back his scheme for building a railway bridge and Klutchem insults the proud colonel by laughing at his railroad. It afterwards develops that the colonel's land contains some valuable deposits of coal and Klutchem is willing to listen to the colonel's proposition. Tom and Laura become engaged and the North and South sit down to dinner together to celebrate the bethrothal.

Miscellaneous

The Pursuing Shadow—(Four Reels)—Picture Playhouse.—Tom Terriss featured in a double role. At a dance given by Mrs. Dexter her pearl necklace is stolen by Craig Dare, a gentleman thief, and handed out the window by him to Tony Oscaros. Craig Dare later learns that Viscount Acheson is to be at an inn owned by Dexter's father and he goes there with him and they fall into the hands of Oscaros and his gang. Earl Dexter comes to the inn to see his father, who returns just in time to find the murdered Acheson and see Tony dashing out of the house. There is a great resemblance between Tony and Earl, who is later accused of the murder and convicted. At the last moment Oscaro's little boy recognizes that Dexter is not his father so guilt points to Tony and he is arrested.

SOCIETY ORGANISED ON BOARD SELIG MOVIE SPECIAL

PROMINENT MEN JOIN
MYSTERIOUS SOCIETY

It was rumored on board the Selig Movie Special yesterday that the Ancient and Everescent Order of the Yellow Dog has been founded. Much secrecy surrounds this mysterious organization and full details have not as yet been determined. "Yelp"

It will be known as the Selig Movie Special Local No. 1 and the charter members and officers are as follows:
Jos. A. Andreucetti, Grand Mastiff; Geo. W. Heinbuch, Grand Watch-dog; Edward Kohl, Yellow Dog Organizer and Kiel G. Conard, Keeper of the Pound.

It is said that a large number of applications have been recieved and indications that the membership will reach a high mark.

All male members of the Special are eligible for membership and those interested may apply to any of the above named officers to recieve their application blank. There will be no initiation fee and no dues. Further developments of the Yello Dog Society will be announced later.

SEVEN SUFFERING SISTERS TO BE STARTED TODAY

CAST OF CHARACTERS HAVE BEEN SELECTED

Director Wm. R. Coleman, who has been selected to produce the celebrated and much heralded movie "The Seven Suffering Sisters" has made a canvas of the train and has selected a well balanced cast from those on board. Active work will be commenced at Ogden, Utah, where the special will stop for some time.

The production will be in three reels and no doubt will prove to be a master picture. It was his first intention to start work on the picture in the CANW R. Station in Chicago but owing to the tremendous throng gathered to bid the Special farewell he was unable to find enough space available to stage the opening scenes. It now has been decided that the station facilities at Ogden Utah afford an excellent opportunity to take the first scenes so if the weather permits the production will be started. The cast of characters of the Seven Suffering Sisters probably will be announced in tomorrow's

PERSONAL MENTION

Willard Howe representing the Washington Times of Washington D C is a member of our party and will make notes along the trip that will be of interest to the Movie Fans in Washington.

Miss Hoot and holds an official position in the Capitol is accompanying Miss Howe.

A merry party on board are the Misses Carrie Selig and Ruth Welsh accompanied by Mrs. F. A. Selig and Mr. and Mrs. John Selig.

The Kaempfer family of Chicago is well represented on the Special by F. W. Koempfer, Miss Koempfer and Mr. and Mrs. Fred Kaempfer.

Among the beautiful girls on the train the editor has so far discovered Misses Sapphire S. Simon of Newark N. J., Estella Bauer of Chicago, Mary Weisenberger and Carrie Young both of Louisville Ky. So far as the editor could ascertainn these are unattached.

MOVIE FLIER JOLTS

No one was hurt at the station yesterday at 11 A. M. than H. C. Hoagland. He was on a hop and a jump. We take pleasure in thank that we finally got started and that the delay was not more than 20 minutes. Then he forgot his own baggage.

OLD FILM MEN IN NEW COMPANY

Fifteen of the leading exhibitors of the country have been invited to attend a meeting in Chicago for the purpose of discussing a plan for forming a one-half million dollar company. The company will manufacture and buy films outright. Among those who will attend the meeting are John H. Kunsky of Detroit, Mitchell Mark of Buffalo, Warren Sievers of St. Louis, E. Mandelbaum of Cleveland and A. Gordon of Boston.

FREULER TELLS EXHIBITORS HOW TO BALANCE PROGRAM

A most interesting talk by John Freuler, president of the Mutual Film Corporation, was given to the exhibitors recently. Following is a copy of this talk given by Mr. Freuler:

I am and have been for many years a constant patron of motion picture theaters. I go to see the pictures, the audiences and the methods used in the conduct of the house. As an exhibitor and as a maker of motion pictures I find this one of the profitable ways of keeping in close personal touch with my business.

During the present week I went to four motion picture theaters in as many parts of the city and in each place I saw satisfactory pictures. The projection was good, the auditoriums were well ventilated, the house forces were courteous—but the audiences were evidently not satisfied. There was a general restlessness as the pictures proceeded, and many persons went out before the entertainment was completed.

The reason was plain enough. In each theater of the four the program was badly balanced. The pictures were secured from various sources without regard to proper contrast or harmony. And right here I want to emphasize to every exhibitor the vital mistake of haphazard, conglomerate pictures. A program needs balance. It needs practical, experienced selection to be a complete well rounded, satisfying entertainment.

To take a homely example, if I were to send a messenger to a restaurant for food and he were to bring me back a course dinner consisting exclusively of roast meats, or if he were to bring me several different kinds of soup, I would not consider I had before me a proper meal. If, on the other hand, he were to provide a repast beginning with oysters and ending with small coffee, and including between these, soup, fish, entree, roast and salad of an excellent quality, I would be satisfied that I had a well balanced meal.

It is much the same with a motion picture entertainment. All the elements of entertainment should be represented, and they should be in their proper order if the audience is to be pleased and encouraged to come again. The Mutual Program might be called a magnificent "table d'hote" entertainment. The complete program begins properly and ends properly. It contains all the well prepared elements of a complete entertainment. There is no great mystery about this. It is merely showmanship, and the showman instinct in each exhibitor will respond to this.

The Mutual Film Corporation is better able to serve its exhibitors with its complete program than by any other method or business arrangement.

I am satisfied that the Mutual Program is the best money-maker for the exhibitor. I want him to try it, and if he does not make as much money as he anticipated I want him to try the others. There is no doubt in my mind but that he will come back, and that he will do as so many thousand of Mutual exhibitors are doing, reap the benefits of the consistent and well prepared program and of the persistent and consistent advertising and publicity campaigns. He will realize, as so many Mutual exhibitors do realize, that the course of the greatest profit is in the regular program provided by the Mutual.

LONGER RUNS BECOMING COMMON, SAY V. L. S. E. BRANCH MANAGERS

From the reports coming in from its branch managers, the V. L. S. E. states that a decided change in exhibition methods is taking place throughout the entire country.

In the last few months a decided decrease has been noted in the number of one day bookings of feature productions. The exhibitors even in small towns, with populations ranging from 2,000 to 3,000 are booking strong features for two and three days, while in the larger cities, runs of a full week are becoming common occurrences. This does not apply merely to the downtown sections of these cities, but the condition also exists in the outlying residential sections.

While the V. L. S. E. has been doing business for less than three months, many of their features that were originally booked for three days by exhibitors, have been repeatedly recalled to the same houses, and in one case, that of the Mary Anderson theater in Louisville, one of their features, "The Juggernaut," was booked four times. While the feature played to phenomenal business on each occasion, there is no doubt that even a greater volume of business would have been done had the feature been originally booked for a long run, thereby permitting the house to take advantage of continuous advertising and billing.

It is predicted that the greatest change the motion picture industry has ever seen will take place within the next year in its methods of exhibition, and the four companies affiliated in the V. L. S. E. have for the past year been working in anticipation of this change. In selecting the subjects for the big features, they have had constantly in mind this change in exhibition methods, and in consequence it has not been difficult to demonstrate to the exhibitor that the efficiency of his house is greatly increased by the running of meritorious features for long periods.

MINERVA COURTNEY IMITATES CHAPLIN IN METROPOLIS FILM

The Metropolis Film Manufacturing Company presents Minerva Courtney, who is well known in vaudeville circles as an impersonator of men, in a two-reel comedy entitled "Miss Minerva Courtney in Her Impersonation of Charles Chaplin." This release is the first of a series which is being issued by the company. The popular comedian has often been imitated in the past, but the producers of this film are the first to announce that their offering is strictly an impersonation, which proves their confidence in Miss Courtney's ability to imitate Chaplin.

Miss Courtney's make-up is excellent and her impersonation of the now famous walk and practically all of the other laughable mannerisms which made their originator the screen's most popular funny man, are enjoyably clever and thoroughly amusing. The picture will no doubt prove an attraction to all of the Chaplin fans, who will certainly not be disappointed in their anticipation of being entertained by the laugh-provoking antics of their favorite as performed by another.

The situations which are provided Miss Courtney in the picture have been selected from the "Champion," as produced by the Essanay company, and all the parts which were chosen are well reproduced. The many details of the original production are presented in both the acting and direction. The other members of the cast give material aid to the lead in conscientiously working to sustain the illusion.

The opening scene shows Miss Minerva Courtney, a vaudeville actress, out of work and unable to pay her rent. She explains her unavailing efforts to secure a position to the rent collector. The real estate agent proposes that she try the movies, and gives her a letter of introduction to the manager of a studio. The manager laughs at her when she claims that she can impersonate Charles Chaplin.

Finally the girl is given a trial, in which she proceeds to imitate the hero of the "Champion." All the strenuous training stunts, and even the fight, are performed by the girl imitator. The director is so well pleased with Miss Courtney's work that he promptly advises the manager to give her a long contract at her own price. The next morning the agent's question as to whether she will pay the rent brings the reply that she will buy the house.

RILEY CHAMBERLAIN

Grand Rapids, Michigan, is the place and 1854 the year that Riley Chamberlain, for forty years a famous entertainer on the legitimate stage and screen, first saw the light of day. But Riley—his legion of friends always call him Riley, despite his sixty-one years—isn't ready for the old man's home by any means. Just the contrary, for the old boy, like good wine, improves with age.

Riley Chamberlain.

Once a member of the legitimate, it wasn't long before Riley began to make a name for himself. During the thirty-five years he was connected with the stage, Riley appeared in support of stars in such successes as "The Blue Mouse," "Tillie's Nightmare," "Lulu's Husband," "Madame X," "Excuse Me," and others too numerous to mention.

When Edwin Thanhouser organized the New Rochelle studios, Riley quit the legitimate for the movies and has been there ever since. As the chief comedian of the Thanhouser forces, Chamberlain has won for himself an enviable reputation, often being referred to as the "Jefferson of the screen." Character leads in Falstaff releases has been his chief work for the past few months.

Riley spends his spare time in a handsome home in New Rochelle. He is an enthusiastic golfer, and a good one, too, and a thorough lover of the great outdoors. Motoring and swimming (outside of golf) are his favorite pastimes. But above all, Riley loves the kiddies and hardly a week end passes but that he is acting as host to a crowd of the little ones at his home.

Some of the Selig Producers and Writers

EXCLUSIVE DIAMOND-S TALENT

WILLIAM N. SELIG, president of the Selig Polyscope Company, one fine day took an inventory of the great company which he founded and which he upbuilded to its present state of wonderful achievement.

Along about that time the preliminary plans for the V-L-S-E Inc., were being formulated. "Here," said Colonel Selig to himself, "the burden of administrative affairs are becoming too heavy for me to carry; when the V-L-S-E is started there will be altogether too much business for one individual to transact. We must have new producers, additional actors, etc., in order to carry along our feature program as well as to keep our regular program up to its present high standard. I need a man to look after all these things; I need some one deep in the knowledge of the film business; a man who also knows the technical side of motion picture making; a man in whom I can repose trust and who will carry along the large business enterprises of the Selig Company whenever I should feel that I need a rest."

Then it was that Colonel Selig put across another of his sudden surprises. He engaged J. A. Berst as vice-president and general manager for the great House of Selig. He gave Mr. Berst carte blanche; told him to go ahead and Mr. Berst has gone ahead. He has rejuvenated where rejuvenation was deemed necessary because of the important changes in the film manufacturing company, but he has also retained those artists in various lines of the film industry who in the past have proven themselves worthy of the confidence of the Selig Company.

When two such men as Messrs. Selig and Berst co-operate there are certain to be decisive and beneficial results. Working shoulder to shoulder they have indeed accomplished wonders and, in the few brief weeks of their collaboration, many and important changes have occurred in the ranks of the Selig Company and new blood injected is making its presence felt in all lines of the film world. Others are keeping an eye on the rapid succession of accomplishments being registered by the "Diamond S" outfit, not the least of these being the wonderful releases which for strength of story, careful production, clear photography, and artistic acting, are not surpassed right now in Filmland.

When the administrative shifts were being made the Selig Company started on a still hunt for the best directors and stage stars that money could attract or the industry supply.

Many have been engaged within the past few weeks and these, together with the directors and artists retained by the Selig Company, are given every convenience in order to enable them to do noteworthy work.

We present the names and the faces of the producers now engaged in filming the Red Seal Plays, the Selig Diamond Specials in three reels and the one and two reel comedies and dramas and Jungle-Zoo wild animal picture plays that are making Movieland sit up and take notice.

Selig Producers and Writers.

There is Colin Campbell, dean of the producing corps, whose production of "The Spoilers" set a new standard; Edward J. LeSaint, Thomas Santschi, producer and star; Guy Oliver and Tom Mix, who produces and stars in Selig Western dramas and whose dare-devil feats of horsemanship have thrilled the multitudes. These directors are producing worthy productions.

The new producers signed by the Selig Company within a few weeks are all men of high standing in the ranks of their difficult profession and the list of names is one of which any motion picture company could well be proud. There is Marshall Neilan, producer and actor; T. N. Heffron, in charge of production at the Chicago studios and who is specializing in Red Seal Plays; Louis M. Chaudet, Frank Beal, and George O. Nichols. All are hard at work producing Selig films of quality.

And it was not only in the producing and where the stimulus to the hardest kind of artistic work is being felt. Both Messrs. Selig and Berst believe that the story, the plot of the pictureplay is the foundation for the entire structure. In other words, they agree that if the story or plot is weak, then no matter how beautiful the acting or how artistic the direction of the pictureplay, there will be something sadly lacking.

So it is that the best editors and authors in the film world are regularly engaged by the Selig Company. Gilson Willets, for example, writes exclusively for the Selig Company. He has world-wide fame as a novelist and short story writer. He wrote Selig's "Adventures of Kathlyn," "In the Days of the Thundering Herd," etc., and adapted such Red Seal Plays as "The Millionaire Baby," "A Black Sheep," etc.

Lanier Bartlett is another veteran author and editor long exclusively engaged by the Selig Polyscope Company. He wrote "Ebb Tide," that noteworthy Selig Diamond Special, in three reels, adapted "The Ne'er-Do-Well" for the screen, and accompanied Colonel Selig and a company of players to the canal zone where the scenes in Rex Beach's novel were taken. Wallace C. Clifton, Pacific Coast editor for the Selig Company, has written hundreds of pictureplay stories, and is particularly happy in the writing of wild animal comedies and dramas. Emma Bellis, another versatile editress and authoress, who is employed in the Selig Pacific Coast editorial department. In Chicago, Clarence A. Frambers, successful as a writer, is engaged as Eastern scenario reader, and C. H. Lippert, another versatile writer, is at work at the Selig Chicago studios. These authors are all constantly striving to give Selig producers high-class stories and are succeeding along that line of endeavor for otherwise they would not be affiliated with the Selig Company where results count.

STANDARD PROGRAM INCLUDES MANY BRANDS AND STARS

"We think that every exhibitor in the country should be interested in the Standard Program," said Al. Lichtman, at the offices of the corporation in the Times Building.

"The producing companies that release through the Standard Program are all of them companies of established reputations. They are all well-known producing companies with excellently equipped studios and with complete organizations.

"The fact that everyone connected with the organization is experienced and is today turning out pictures of merit, is the best proof that we will continue to do so in the future, and the only changes which we can possibly make in our producing companies, will be changes that will mark a higher standard of our product.

"With regard to our distributing organization, A. and Mrs. H. M. Warner and myself are too well known to the trade to require any introduction. We are today in possession of contracts to release the following brands of films, Gaumont (Empress), Crystal, Ideal, Starlight, Pyramid, Lariat, Premier and Sunshine. And with this representative group of manufacturers to produce for us, we are prepared to go ahead and give the exhibitor the very best service.

"We believe that the best interest of the exhibitor can be most efficiently taken care of by the local exchangemen. The exchanges for the distribution of the Standard Program will not be dependent upon a central office. Each exchange will be operated by the man whose best interests lies in giving his customers person attention.

"The method of distribution which we will pursue in marketing Standard pictures avoids heavy overhead and abnormal centralization, expense. We are able to give the exhibitor such stars as Edwin August, Dot Farley, Reeva Greenwood, William V. Mong, and a host of others.

"We confidently believe that a rationally conducted manufacturing and distributing concern whose effort will be to improve the quality of its product and give the exhibitor and the exchangeman the chances for liberal profit to which their enterprise, knowledge, skill, and hard work entitle them."

CLAIRE WHITNEY

Dainty, petite Claire Whitney, who has endeared herself to the hearts of thousands of motion picture fans through her excellent interpretations of the roles entrusted her in many of the Fox Film Corporation's most notable screen triumphs, was born in New York City. After graduating from Public School No. 68 she entered the Wadleigh High School.

Claire Whitney.

Her photodramatic debut was made in the year of 1909 with the Biograph Company, of which the now renowned D. W. Griffith was the director. After a stay of three months, Miss Whitney tendered her resignation and returned to the legitimate stage as leading lady with a stock company located at Holyoke, Mass. This engagement lasted eighteen months. For the next six months Miss Whitney returned to the silent-speaking stage, appearing in support of Marion Leonard, who was starring under the Rex banner. In 1913 Miss Whitney returned once more to the motion picture field as leading lady for the Solax Company. Last September Miss Whitney was placed under contract by William Fox, head of the Fox Film Corporation. Mr. Fox had been watching Miss Whitney's excellent work on the screen for some time past, and was so impressed that he placed the talented young lady under a long-term contract, and also promised that the name of Claire Whitney was to be featured in all the billing of the photoplays she was cast for since joining the Fox Film Corporation.

According to Consul Henry P. Starrett, the success and steady development of the motion picture theater in Canada, has been, comparatively speaking, as phenomenal as in the United States.

EQUITABLE CORPORATION NEW FEATURE PRODUCERS

With a capital of $3,000,000 underwritten by the well-known financial house of Ladenburg, Thalman & Co., Broad street, New York City, the Equitable Motion Pictures Corporation has commenced the production of feature films for the United States and foreign markets.

The offices of the Equitable are at the Leavitt Building, 130 West 46th street, New York City, fourth floor. The principal officials of the new corporation are: President, A. H. Spiegel, who is president of the Spiegel-May-Stern Company, of Chicago; vice-president, Lewis J. Selznick; secretary and general manager, Felix F. Feist; technical director, Isadore Bernstein.

The corporation's releases will consist of a five-reel feature and a one-reel comedy, released weekly, also special feature productions consisting of more than five reels. During the next few months the corporation purposes to manufacture its features in New York City exclusively, but arrangements are well under way to build and equip a large modern studio in southern California. Work has already commenced at the Wizard studio, West 52nd street and 8th avenue, New York City, where the comedies will be made, and at the E. M. P. studio, Flushing, L. I.

The Equitable has entered into a contract with the World Film Corporation whereby the latter will arrange for the distribution and exhibition throughout the United States and Canada of pictures controlled by the Equitable Motion Pictures Corporation, thereby giving the World two features and two comedies a week, which opens the way for the World to release eventually a large number of features on their schedule. As is well known, the World Film Corporation is an established distributing company, owning exchanges located at twenty-six of the prominent cities of the United States.

BRUCE MITCHELL FORMS PLANS FOR NATIONAL CORPORATION

The National Film Corporation is a new concern with studios at Hollywood, Cal.

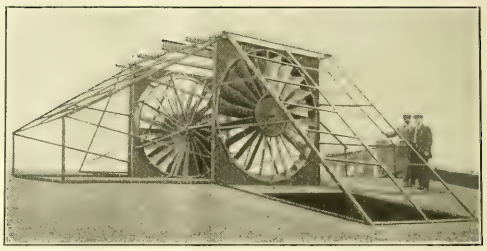
Bruce Mitchell presents William Parsons in "You Can't Beat It," a comedy, and Norma Talmadge, former Vitagraph leading woman, in feature dramas. Miss Talmadge will first be seen in "Captivating Mary Carstairs." Anthony N. Coldewey is the editor.

Bruce Mitchell, on whom largely rests the matter of production policy, has very advanced ideas on the subject. His views are quite up-to-the-minute.

"So far as I am concerned the pure slapstick comedy is on the shelf," says Mr. Mitchell. "I intend to make comedies with Mr. Parsons that will be merry and unique and still contain thrills. Recently I made nineteen high class comedies in ten weeks. While I do not expect to continue producing at this rate of speed, I do not expect to dally."

It is interesting to note that Mr. Mitchell's entry into the motion picture industry is the indirect result of a meeting with Mary Pickford. Two years ago Mr. Mitchell was a constructing and civil engineer in New York. He met Mary Pickford at a dance and her conversation impressed him so with the possibilities of the motion picture industry that he decided to enter the lists. He is applying to his motion picture work the same keen qualities of mind which made him a success as an engineer.

Mr. Mitchell entered the business in 1912, working with Bob Leonard and Otis Turner of the Universal forces. In 1913 he and Donald McDonald organized the Thistle Brand Film Company, which was merged with the Crown City Film Company August, 1914.



Anthony W. Coldewey, the scenario editor, is a former newspaper man and writer. He was engaged as a member of the Universal scenario staff in March, 1913. Then he wrote scenarios for Edwin August and acted as assistant director. He returned to the Universal in October, 1913, after leaving to join the Balboa forces.

CENTAUR COMEDIES PROVE HUMOR AT PRIVATE SHOWING

On Thursday, July 8, the Centaur Film Company exhibited a quartet of its most recently produced comedies at the Stanley Theater, Times Square, New York City, to an invited gathering composed of exhibitors and representatives of the trade press. The pictures shown were "Life's Mysteries," "A Night's Lodging," "Father Forgot," and "The Fighting Kid;" all good, clean comedies with consistent stories and plenty of quick, peppery action. One of the pictures, "The Fighting Kid," contains one scene which has seven exposures of one person, all arranged side by side across the screen. The screamingly funny effect of this can well be imgained. Since their advent on the General Film Program, Mina films fought their way into a place in the front row of semi-slapstick, harmless comedies, replete with ludicrous situations and bubbling over with fun and good humor.

TYPHOON SYSTEM INSTALLED

The Duffield Theater of Brooklyn, New York, has recently been equipped with a Typhoon cooling system. One illustration shows the Typhoon twin blower on the roof with a steel frame for the housing, and the installation completed with a galvanized iron enclosure. The enclosure is open on each side of the fans to allow free intake of air. The air is then blown down through a chute discharging through the ceiling in front of proscenium arch.

The Typhoon system was tried out in the Duffield Theater during the hot weather, and the results proved far beyond the expectations of the owners.

Although smoking is allowed in the theater, not the slightest sign of smoke could be detected. The theater is kept cool in the hottest weather, in fact, the apparatus cannot be run except at reduced speed during the cooler days.

The principle of the Typhoon System is entirely new, inasmuch as it blows the air in through the roof thereby causing the current of air to face the audience. A tremendous volume of air forced through the roof and the air motion can be felt throughout the auditorium. The air is allowed to escape through the transoms above the front doors and through the windows in rear of the gallery. In cold weather the apparatus is reversed and running at a low speed exhausts the air through the ceiling.

"PEACEFUL RAFFERTY'S" CREATOR TALKS ABOUT THE FILM'S SUCCESS

"Success like everything else must be fought for," said Charles C. O'Hara recently in an interview with the writer, "and you can believe me when I say that it is hard to attain it, and no one knows better than I do for I had my rocky road to travel.

"When first my character, Peaceful Rafferty, was shown to a few people supposed to be very good judges of stories in the film line, they informed me there was nothing to it and that I had better drop the idea, for my chance of making it a success via the picture route was hopeless, but the same people come to me today and slap me on the back, you see you can't always tell.

"One thing that I was sure of and that was I could sell the idea or the scenarios if I cared to, for numerous big companies having heard of the series made me tempting salary offers to join their staffs and write the scripts, but I figured that if they were worth that much to them why they'd naturally be worth double the amount to me and so you know the rest."

Others in the company that are working in cooperation with its ever hustling president are Gene Techenor, the general manager; Harry Schlatter, vice-president and treasurer; and J. A. Fitzgerald, the youthful and capable director who has been in the company since its inception. Joe Sullivan and pretty Peggy Shannon, two names that have become famous overnight, portray the principal roles in the Rafferty series with such prominent players as Tammany Young, former Mutual star, Billy Bowers and Charlie A. Mason and others.

"A few weeks ago I made an extended trip around the East here in an effort to find out just how my company's product was going, and really I was surprised for nearly every exhibitor that I visited spoke very highly of the pictures and felt sorry that he could not get them every day.

"It goes to prove that first class comedy pictures are in demand, more in demand in fact than feature subjects, for the public does not want to look at long pictures all the time, they like something different, and the comedy film sends them home with a smile on their face. This is what an exhibitor wants and it is that want that the Peaceful Rafferty series is filling for they are high class, refined, and do not at any time descend to scenes of vulgarity."

METRO'S POSTER DEPARTMENT; HIGH ART TO BE ITS AIM

The Metro Pictures Corporation has established a separate poster department under the direction of Robert E. Irwin, who has had much experience in the designing and printing of artistic and attractive poster advertising. In this new department he will make it his chief endeavor to give exhibitors paper which will be distinctly in advance in quality and design of anything seen heretofore in the line.

A large staff of artists and illustrators of the better class are already under contract to the Metro, to produce poster designs exclusively for this company. Metro's poster department will be conducted along the same lines as are the art departments of the better class of magazines. Among those who have already made posters or are making them for Metro, may be mentioned C. B. Falls, the well known illustrator; Robert J. Wildhack, probably the best poster artist in this country; Ernest Haskell, whose poster portraits of Mrs. Fiske and Mrs. Carter were the first really art posters produced in this country; Edward Penfield, F. G. Cooper, whose Edison posters have attracted the attention of the world; Rae Irvin, of Life; D. Cory Kilvert, Sewell Collins and others.

THE CASTLES HAVE BEGUN WORK WITH CORT FILM CORPORATION

The Castles, as Mr. and Mrs. Vernon are known in New York, and wherever the modern dance has taken hold, began their first week's work this week in the polite melodrama in which they are appearing for the Cort Film Corporation. They appeared in several big scenes which were taken at their summer home, Castles by the Sea, on the south shore of Long Island. Several society folk, friends of the dancers, appeared as extras in the scenes and enjoyed it as they might have enjoyed an outing. Oliver D. Bailey, who is directing the picture for Mr. Cort, said that he would like to have such intelligence shown on the part of all the extra people with whom he has to deal in "mob" scenes. The burden of the poor producer would be lightened considerable, if such were the case.

PATHE EXCHANGE MANAGERS HOLD THREE DAY MEETING

Pathe held a three-day convention in New York, beginning Monday, July 12, to be attended by all the managers of Pathe exchanges east of the Rocky Mountains, as well as by the officials of the concern.

The first day was devoted to the new Gold Rooster features and "Neal of the Navy," the coming big serial, followed by a motor car excursion to Brighton Beach in the evening. On Tuesday morning the Pathe program was the subject and the afternoon was devoted to visits to the Pathe studio in Jersey City and the factory at Bound Brook. An informal dinner in New York followed in the evening, after which the six-reel production of "The Beloved Vagabond," was shown together with "Via Wireless," "The Galloper,"

"Simon the Jester," and "The Spender," the first of the Gold Rooster plays.

On Wednesday the Pathe advertising in all its phases of trade papers, the new posters, the new bulletin, came in for some good words and in the afternoon agency accounting was the subject. Wednesday night was the big wind up with a banquet at Rectors to celebrate the attaining of $1,000,000 in business on the great Pathe serial "Elaine." The gratification of the Pathe officials is all the more increased at this wonderful showing of "Elaine" since they remember that "The Perils of Pauline" did its biggest business after the release of the last episode and "Elaine" has still some weeks to run before the last episode will be shown.

Vice-president Charles Dupuis and General Manager Louis Gasnier presided at the banquet which was also attended by the various department heads of the home office.

MIKE DONLIN SIGNS WITH ARROW FILM CORPORATION

The Arrow Film Corporation, of 71 West 23rd street, New York City, has completed arrangements with Mike Donlin, probably the best-known ball player in the world, whereby the famous son of Swat will be featured in a five part photoplay entitled "Right Off the Bat." The scenario, which is by Albert S. LeVino, follows closely the big moments in Donlin's life, from the days when he was a small town lad, crazy about baseball, to the time when he achieved his ambition and became a Giant.

The producers have provided an all-star cast to support Donlin in "Right Off the Bat." Among his associate players are the Misses Claire Mersereau, Fay Bourke, Rita Ross Donlin, Beatrice Dauncourt, Doris Grey, and Mabel Wright, and Messrs. Charles Mather, George Henry, J. Arthur O'Brien and Frank Crane, jr.

"Right Off the Bat," which has been in course of production about ten days, is being directed by Hugh Ketteker, one of the younger school of photoplay directors who, experienced by years on the speaking stage, is employing his keen imagination in the newer art of screen production.

Most of the scenes are exteriors, taken in a beautiful city in the Berkshires. More than forty well-known ballplayers have been engaged to take part in the play, which is a comedy drama that deals with baseball but is not devoted solely to the national game. Exclusive of Donlin's salary the production will cost in the neighborhood of $20,000. "Right Off the Bat" will be released late in August and will be seen for its premier in a leading Broadway theater.

FILM AND STAGE DRAMA FROM SAME SCRIPT, METRO SCHEME

What, without a doubt, will prove the most novel and far reaching innovation instituted in the history of amusements, is the plan of General Manager Richard A. Rowland of the Metro Pictures Corporation, announced for consummation early in the coming fall.

The plan is nothing less than the simultaneous production of a feature film and spoken drama from the same script, both to be produced with the same cast of artists and both to be presented upon an elaborate scale in houses so close together that the general scheme can be successfully carried out. The production to be thus treated will be B. A. Rolfe's play, "When a Woman Loves," in which Emmy Whelen, the Viennese actress, is now preparing to work.

"When a Woman Loves" is an original concoction from the pen of Charles Horan, and which is said to possess admirable material for dialogic situations as well as pantomimic. Mr. Horan will conduct the staging of the pictorial production and will undoubtedly have an important interest in the stage production. Mr. Rowland promises definite details as to the theaters and cast and date within a few weeks.

"The scheme is so great and the prospects so promising," said Mr. Rowland, "that we will require considerable time to complete them, but we are concrete in our determination to offer a great many novel innovations during the last half of the Metro year. So we expect to put Mr. Horan and Mr. Maddock, of the Rolfe company, in charge of the dual production.

HEINIE AND LOUIE TO APPEAR IN STANDARD PROGRAM COMEDY

James Aubrey and Walter Kendig, who have made an enviable reputation as motion picture comedians in the roles of Heinie and Louie, will be seen regularly in their now well-known characters on the Standard Program. The Mittenthal Brothers studio force in Yonkers, New York, where the Heinie and Louie comedies are produced, has been busily engaged for the past month in preparing new single-reel comedies under the able direction of Chester De Vond, and Aubrey, and Harry Mittenthal, who are delighted with the class of film that is now ready for projection.

EXHIBITION SPECIALIST BOSNER RUNNING BOSTON PARK THEATER

As W. Fred Bosner, P. P. D. he should sign himself. P. P. D. stands for Paramount Theater Doctor.

As a successful exhibitor of Paramount pictures he has recently come to take charge of the Park theater in Boston. He is an exhibition specialist, that is to say, his expertness concerns chiefly the proper presentation of films. Good films may be hurt by poor presentation. Mr. Bosner is bent upon excluding poor presentation from the vast chain of theaters showing the Paramount Program. He is a typical film expert, young, observant, energetic, intensely eager to provide ideal conditions for the pleasure of the public, equally intense in his enthusiasm over the accomplishments and prospects of the photoplay, and particularly of what he sincerely believes to be the best pictures produced today. He is a native of Pennsylvania, who took Greeley's advice literally and trekked west, after some experience as telegraph operator and train dispatcher on the N. Y., N. H. & H. For a time he worked on the Salt Lake Herald, and it was in Boise, Idaho, that he hitched his wagon to the moving picture star nine years ago.

Upon arriving in Boston, Mr. Bosner found that the long film play had a host of friends, as indeed it has everywhere throughout the country.

HARRY BEAUMONT AND CARLTON KING EDISON'S NEW DIRECTORS

Harry Beaumont, who will be remembered as an actor in most of the many successful Edison productions, was made an Edison director after the showing of his production "For His Mother" and of his own play "The Bedouin's Sacrifice." Mr. Beaumont at an early age joined a repertoire company and after a season went into vaudeville in what was then Proctor's Theater at 28th street, New York; he then played in "Under Southern Skies," "The Country Chairman" and in stock in Hamilton, Ont., Brooklyn, and Atlanta, Ga. Mr. Beaumont played his first role in motion pictures with the Vitagraph Company, staying but one month and after another vaudeville appearance he permanently joined the Edison Company where he has been for about four years, playing juveniles and heavies, notably the heavy in "The Stoning."

With the directorship of Mr. Beaumont were also that of Carlton King, who is now producing one of Mary Pider's stories in which Mariam Nesbitt has been featured and Edward C. Taylor from stagemanagership. Mr. King is one of the most versatile actors on the screen, for though he earned his reputation on the stage as a featured singing comedian, he has been uncommonly successful in playing serious and eccentric character roles. Mr. Taylor, though but a short time at stagemanagership, made a distinct impression in designing unique, accurate and architecturally beautiful sets and effects.

To be at the age of twenty three years spoken of by a leading critic as "an exponent and pioneer of what the best in the future of the motion picture holds" and never to have been an actor on stage or screen is of itself significant of the record and ability of a director. Such is the unique record of John H. Collins, Edison director, who has to his credit the direction of many of the most successful pictures produced by that company. His first production was "Jim's Vindication" and it easily vindicated his selection for the directorship. Since then he has left an impression upon the screen in such plays as "On the Stroke of Twelve," "The Phantom Thief" and "Greater Than Art." Perhaps one of the most distinctive feature of this director's work is his ingenuity of lighting effects which always serve to strengthen the scene.

Another advancement in the Edison Company is that of Bernard Durning from assistant stage manager to stagemanager-ship, recently an assistant director to Director John Collins.

TOM MIX AND HIS SELIGITES ENTER LAS VEGAS IN TRIUMPH

It now "Tom Mix of Las Vegas."

The New Mexico city received Selig's doughty son of the range like a returned native son. It is doubtful if ever a motion picture company, or any other kind of a company, received the welcome the Selig cowboy actor and his company did when they arrived at Las Vegas. He told the Las Vegans that he and his company were "just plain home folk and wanted to be treated as such." The parade through the streets was one triumphal reception. Tom Mix has been in Las Vegas less than a week and already there is hardly a man he has met but what he is calling them by their first names and they he. The studio of the Selig Company is situated in an attractive part of the city. The company has taken over a large three story stone residence where are located the makeup rooms, dark room, office etc. There is an outdoor stage 40x40, and property room covering a space 14x70. Ample table and corrall[illegible] have also been built.

VALENTINE GRANT

The series of Made-in-Ireland pictures which are to be released soon under the Lubin banner again bring to the fore Miss Valentine Grant, the Seattle girl who created much favorable impression by her work as leading woman with Walker Whiteside in the Cort Film Corporation's screen production of "The Melting Pot." Miss Grant is featured as the star in these Irish pictures, which were made in Ireland by Sidney Olcott on the occasion of his last trip abroad, a tour, by the way, which was halted by the outbreak of the European war.

Valentine Grant.

Miss Grant has played many parts in her time, her last one, that of the daughter of a Russian baron, being by no means the least in merit, but she has never had a more congenial role than that which fell to her lot in the Irish pictures. She is the Irish colleen so thoroughly that several London critics who saw the pictures before they were brought to this country counted her the best woman portraying such characters on the screen today.

It is a noteworthy fact that Miss Grant has never played any part on the screen in which she has not appeared as the leading player of the piece save in "The Melting Pot," in which her opportunities were quite as numerous as those for the star, Mr. Whiteside. Miss Grant was starred in her first picture, "A Mother of Men," and these, her latest releases, show her as the bright and shining luminary of each subject. The Irish pictures are each written around some incident of Irish history and her struggle for freedom.

IRWIN OF V-L-S-E PRAISES "THE BLINDNESS OF VIRTUE"

Walter W. Irwin, general manager of the V-L-S-E, in speaking of "The Blindness of Virtue" says, "The beautiful and chaste manner in which this production handles the question so important to the morals of our country; a subject in which all mothers and fathers are at once so deeply interested in, and at variance on the advisability of enlightening their children, stamps this Big Four production as a most exceptional achievement in the silent dramatic art.

"Dr. Eliot and other great educators consider the subject of sex hygiene so important, that they have advocated its being taught in all the schools and colleges. Strong objection has been made to this, mainly on the ground that competent instructors were not available, and in this connection, I believe the motion picture steps in as the sought-for instructor.

"With 'The Blindness of Virtue,' the silent dramatic art has qualified itself as the greatest of all educational forces, competent to handle the most delicate of subjects, without giving the slightest offense to the most sensitive person."

CHICAGO DEFEATS "NON-FLAM" ORDINANCE FOR EDUCATIONALS

Last week an ordinance said to be worth thousands of dollars to motion picture interests was defeated in Chicago. A committee referred the measure to a subcommittee for further investigation of charges that it discriminated in favor of certain manufacturers. The effect of the ordinance will be to create a new field for the exhibition of motion pictures. Hitherto the restrictions on the display of films in schools, churches, halls, department stores and the like has been prohibited. The new ordinance was drafted to permit the use of noninflammable educational pictures in places that do not comply with the requirements.

It was on the recommendation of Professor Frederick Starr of the University of Chicago that the ordinance was first framed. As the ordinance stands Victor H. Tousley, chief engineer for the electrical department, asserts that it plays in the hands of the manufacturers of the Pathoscope, Portoscope and Edison machine.

BELASCO'S "FIGHTING HOPE" STARS LAURA HOPE CREWS

Laura Hope Crews, one of the most distinguished American dramatic stars, makes her debut as a photodrama artist on July 19, under the joint management of Jesse L. Lasky and David Belasco in the elaborate picturization of Mr. Belasco's famous dramatic hit, "The Fighting Hope," by William J. Hurlbut. In addition to Miss Crews herself, the cast of this notable offering will include George Gebhardt, Gerald Ward, Thomas Meighan, Richard Morris, Florence Smythe,

Laura Hope Crews in a scene from Lasky's "The Fighting Hope."

Theodore Roberts, Cleo Ridgley, Tom Forman and Billy Elmer.

"The Fighting Hope" tells of the struggle of a good woman to believe in the innocence of her husband, a bank official who has been condemned to prison, and to remain true to him despite the fact that she falls in love with another man.

Miss Crews made her first stage appearance in San Francisco when only four years old and has devoted her entire life to dramatic art. Among the leading productions in which she has played important roles are "Ranson's Folly," "The Great Divide," "The Faith Healer," "The Havoc," and more recently "The Rainbow" and "Blackbirds." She has appeared also with success in London.

LOUISE GUNNING, AMERICAN PRIMA DONNA, WANTED IN FILMS

Since the announcement in the dramatic and musical papers that Miss Louise Gunning, the American prima donna, was now under the management of Philip Mindil, her new manager has received several tempting offers for this well-known singer to become a moving picture star. While Miss Gunning's popularity, beauty and acting ability fit her eminently for the screen, it is not probable that she will listen to the tempter's voice for more than one or two pictures at the most, as her superiority in stellar operatic roles has placed her in a position where she is in great demand. However, Mr. Mindil regarded the offers from filmdom as of sufficient importance to wire his star, asking her to come on as soon as possible from her western ranch, where she has been resting, for the purpose of considering them. He stated that he expected her at an early date, when she would also decide which one of the several musical starring offers to accept for the coming season.

CHARLES FROHMAN'S MEMORY PERPETUATED BY BIG COMPANY

The administrators of the late Charles F. Frohman's estate are now organizing a company to perpetuate his name. The company will have a paid-up capital of $900,000, and will take over and manage all of Charles Frohman's stars and theaters.

This splendid monument to the great impresario is a particularly fitting tribute not only to the man, but to his works. Only the great constructive ability which Frohman so thoroughly demonstrated could carry its post mortem influence to the organization of a corporation to carry on the labors from whose completion he was so unfortunately cut off. The commercializing of his ideas is but evidence that his plans will go on to help the world.

POWER CAMERAGRAPH WINS EXPOSITION GRAND PRIZE

The connection of motion pictures with that largest and most impressive of World's Fairs, the Panama-Pacific International Exposition, is interesting to note. One can enter comparatively few of the very beautiful buildings without finding the omni-present motion picture screen with the machine busily grinding out what the exposition exhibitor most desires to present to the public.

It would take many pages to mention the applications of motion pictures in detail and the methods by which all this is accomplished deserves the greatest consideration. There is shown in a very interesting exhibit the means by which animated photographs is presented in its highest possible development, viz., the motion picture projecting machine at the Nicholas Power Company's exhibit. Showing their interest in the efforts of the "man behind the machine" a collaborative medal was awarded to one of the many unheralded projection experts using a Power's cameragraph No. 6A for the most perfect operation of a projection machine. Also the highest possible honor ever given a motion picture projection machine, the grand prize, was given to the Power's Cameragraph.

WILLIAM DUNCAN

William Duncan, whose greatest part in moving pictures is William Newbold, in the picturization of Rev. Cyrus Townsend Brady's remarkable story of life, "The Chalice of Courage," is a member of the western Vitagraph company, with studios at Santa Monica, Cal. Mr. Duncan was born near Dundee, Scotland, although the greater part of his life has been spent in the United States. During his early youth, he indulged in athletic sports of every sort, his scholastic records being so excellent as to induce him to become a professional. He is the possessor of many trophies as the result of his prowess in competitive sports. Mr. Duncan has distinguished himself as a writer on the staff of the Physical Culture Magazine and was associated with the famous McFadden Physical Culture Health Home as physical director. Later, he opened a studio in Philadelphia, where he taught members of the Quaker City's foremost society.

William Duncan.

During all the years which Mr. Duncan devoted to athletics and the physical culture propaganda, a desire to make a name as an actor kept forcing itself to the fore until finally, enabled to combat this longing, he became a member of the Forepaugh stock company in Philadelphia. Later Mr. Duncan "cut" into the pictures and joined a Chicago film producing company in the capacity of leading man, scenario writer, director, and, later, combined that of manager with his other duties. Mr. Duncan has written, produced and played the leads in over a hundred of his own scenarios. His characterizations ranging from leads in society drama to the roughest of western pictures, in which he was compelled to ride bucking broncos and become proficient in all manner of western sports; characters from very young men to very old ones, from the most intense of dramatic parts to those of low comedy.

Recent Patents in Motography

REVIEWED BY DAVID S. HULFISH

NO. 1,129,327. Shutter. Issued to G. W. Bingham, Brooklyn, N. Y. The shutter comprises two oscillating shutter blades mounted upon one axis. A knurled screw behind the shutter permits the blades to be adjusted while they are in operation.

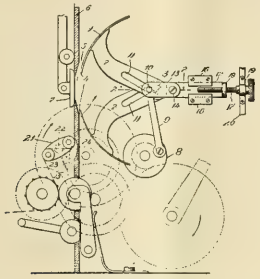

Fig. 1,129,327.

No. 1,129,328. Framing Apparatus. Issued to G. W. Bingham, Brooklyn, N. Y. In a friction feed roller without sprocket teeth, the framing is accomplished by changing the diameter of the feed roller. The feed roller is in segments with interior wedges for spreading them.

No. 1,129,121. Intermittent Mechanism. Issued to Nicholas Power, assignor to Nicholas Power Co., New York, N. Y. (Application filed Oct. 4, 1910.) A patent upon the Power intermittent movement having the intermittent wheel of four pins and the operating wheel of the ring and diamond. The ring locks the pin wheel by passing between the pins, while the diamond at every revolution turns the pin wheel one-quarter revolution. The claims of the patent are broad in their terms.

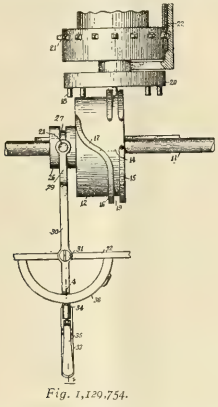

Fig. 1,129,754.

No. 1,130,079. Fire Protection Device. Issued to E. W. Fox, Vancouver, British Columbia. This patent is for a detail applicable to protection systems in which the current supply is cut from the machine automatically in case the film catches fire, and this patent provides a novel means for closing the emergency electrical circuit for operating the safety switch. An electrical emergency circuit is held open by a switch just above the film gate, the switch being held open by a bit of fusible wire which will melt at a low temperature. The burning of the film would melt the fusible wire, releasing the switch to close the emergency circuit which in turn would cut the power mains of the motor and of the projecting lamp.

No. 1,130,126. Reel Clip. Issued to E. M. Wooden, New York, N. Y., assignor of part to A. B. Cavanagh, New York, N. Y. The object of the patent is to render more convenient the act of attaching the end of the film to the hub of the reel upon which it is to be wound. To facilitate this act, a slender spring is attached to the hub at such an angle that its end projects to the outer edge of the sides of the reel; at the outer end of the spring is attached a clip to grip the film, the slender spring then winding upon the hub in advance of the film strip.

No. 1,130,221. Method of Color Projection. Issued to L. C. VanRiper, New York. N. Y. The method of producing motion pictures in colors, which consists in projecting images successively in different colors, the images having the color of lower persistency value being projected more frequently than others; that is, with images colored red, green and blue, there would be more red ones than either green or blue. There are shown also images which are colored in bands across the image, the bands being of different colors.

No. 1,130,460. Projecting Lamp. Issued to Armando Zanotta, Milan, Italy. The lamp has three carbons and the

No. 1,133,869. Dissolving Attachment. Issued to S. McAuley, Atlanta, Ga. In the drawing, the mirror 10 is pivoted at 11 and the mirror 9 is pivoted at 11, there being two pivot points marked 11. A bar 12 connects the two mirrors so that they may swing at the same time and always remain parallel. The arrows show the light entering from the left, being reflected by the two mirrors, and passing through an image at 7. When the mirrors are swung slowly, one mirror cuts off the light from the edge of the image at 7 and at the same time the other mirror permits light to pass directly and unreflected to the edge of the image at 5. Thus the light is taken gradually from one image and admitted gradually to the other image, the transition progressing across the picture screen.

No. 1,132,423. Time Indicating Lantern Slide. Issued to F. A. Apfelbaum, New York, N. Y. The lantern slide picture is that of a clock without hands. The cover glass is drilled and two hands are arranged upon it over the clock face, the hands being outside of the cover glass. The hands may be pushed to place to indicate the proper time, and the slide then projected.

No. 1,132,766. Adjustable Reel. Issued to M. G. Delaney, Assignor to The Northern Sales Co., Toledo, Ohio.

The reel has side plates and an adjustable rim in sections which may be closed down to fit closely upon the contained film.

No. 1,133,385. Composition for Non-Inflammable Cellulose. Issued to W. G. Lindsay, New York, N. Y., assignor to The Celluloid Co. (Application filed May 5, 1909.) A product comprising an organic ester of cellulose and triphenylphosphate obtained by dissolving them in a solvent common to both, and then permitting the solution to dry and harden by evaporation.

No. 1,130,702. Film. Issued to Rasmus Bjerregaard, Copenhagen, Denmark. The film is for projecting pictures in natural colors, and contains pictures of which pairs or triplets are projected simultaneously through color screens of different colors. Each of the pictures is bordered with a heavy black border. The inventor explains that without the black borders the colored picture projected would not have distinct outlines (probably because the colors would not match accurately at the edges) and he explains further that the black frames of the print must be made during the copying or printing of the film by means of a templet and extra illumination, as otherwise the frames would not be sufficiently black.

No. 1,132,369. Reel. Issued to E. Lytton, London, England. In a reel for feeding film from the center of an open coil, the feed reel has adjustable and movable arms to hold the open coil by both its inner and outer surfaces and to feed the film from the inner surface to the projector.

Broken Threads of Plot

DRAMATIZATION of written works not originally intended for the stage is as old as authorship. The novelist prepares a story, with the sole aspiration that it may find a friendly editor and so get into print—with, of course, a just and proper remuneration for the writer. It strikes pleasantly on popular fancy. A dramatist looks it over, realizes its adaptability, and, having made arrangements with the author, sets to work on the stage arrangement of the story.

Now, a staged story is not entirely unlike a written story. The dialogue is still there—altered, of course, but essentially serving the same purpose. And the stage settings and business take the place of the typed descriptions.

When we think of the dependence of staged drama upon dialogue for its comprehensibility, we marvel that the motion picture, the silent drama, has been able actually to outclass it as an entertainer without any means of registering dialogue or conversation. We are all familiar with the audible soliloquy by the sole occupant of a stage scene, which explains so many points otherwise obscure to the audience. The motion picture can present no soliloquy unless it be in the nature of sub-title or leader. The action must do its own explaining.

All this is very trite, and supposed to be one of the first principles of film directing. But the fact that more than one producer has recently shown symptoms of forgetting the difference between written stories and picture stories draws forth this comment. The writer has a hundred ways of mending broken threads of plot. The picture producer has very few; and those few all demand the best resources of his art.

There are occasions when it is quite necessary to skip an interval of time in the action. Many of these occasions are more artistic if left without explanation other than the familiar chapter heading, or sub-title, "Two Years Later." It is up to the reader of the novel and the observer of the film to supply the intervening action in his imagination. The reader has plenty of opportunity to do this. If his imagination operates slowly he can close the book, if need be, and indulge in a reverie. But the picture on the screen does not stop. The sub-title whirrs past with just time enough to grasp it, and the future becomes the present instantly. If imagination works at all, it must operate subconsciously while the conscious mind is absorbing the action before the eye. That is too much of a task to impose uninvited upon the mental equipment of the picture fan.

It should be unnecessary to point out that if the plot threads of a film story are broken by design or by the exigencies of the story, at least the broken ends should be pointed toward each other so that the mind of the spectator may essay to leap the gap.

The particular examples of this wide open construction which prompted this note will go unnamed here, because their producers are not nearly so apt to make the mistake again as are those who have yet to make it once. The simple moral is that in the increasing complexity, refinement and artistry of the trade of producing, it is very easy, but quite demoralizing, to lose sight of the simplest fundamentals.

Remember the Country Exhibitor

HE is a man of some importance, is the typical country exhibitor—the fellow who runs a lone three-hundred seat house in a small town. Among the neighbors he is believed to be "making money." His wife sells tickets, he tends door and his boy turns the crank. Thus he keeps the income of the house from leaving the family—except what he pays for service and juice. And the service is not the biggest item of his expenses, either, for he uses the stuff that every one else is through with; the films that are so old they have ceased to keep track of their number of runs.

The country exhibitor is not a very big part of the film manufacturer's scheme. The manufacturer, indeed, doesn't know or care much about him—and he doesn't know or care much about the manufacturer. He does know brands, of course, and he has his choice. But the choice is only mental; practically he is not allowed to take it, except by accident. What he gets is selected by his exchange, or else not selected by anybody—just tied up in a bundle and shipped. When the manufacturer advertises seven startling spectacular successes to be released next week, he is not thinking of the country exhibitor. In fact, the exchange has bought all seven of them and got its money back in rentals before the country exhibitor enters into the problem at all. He reads the advertisements in the trade papers—for he is a subscriber—and knows that he will get some of the seven some day, probably. But before he does get any of them he will have run anywhere up to a hundred and fifty others of previous date. He is farther ahead of the game (chronologically) than anyone else; for he reads today about the subjects he will be running next fall and winter.

To the trade at large the country exhibitor represents merely a name on a list of fifteen to twenty thousand. Maybe he isn't even a name, but just the line "Motion picture theater, Main street, Smith's Corners." He doesn't really need a name for his house, because he runs the only house in town anyway, and everybody knows where it is. The question of having a definite address for the convenience of foreign parties who wish to send him mail never occurs to him.

So some folks in the city may regard the country exhibitor as a commercial nonentity, useful only in bulking up the lists so the newspapers can say "twenty thousand jitney theaters in U. S.," with an exclamation point after it. But the fact is that the exchange—the film distributing middleman that nobody thinks about when compiling trade statistics—has a very high regard for its country customer. The regard may be unconscious; the exchange may not act as if it had any whatever. The big first run customer in the city is absolutely necessary to its scheme. For him the exchange buys all the releases. But nevertheless, the country exhibitor is the velvet. When his check on the county bank comes in it establishes the exchange as a successful and profitable institution. On first and second and third run customers alone, an exchange would lose money fast enough to scare an inebriated sailor.

So much for his business status. Ethically, the country exhibitor is the salt of the earth's social scheme. He gives the agricultural community the only regular and permanent amusement it ever had. Of an evening after chores the farmers drive their fords over miles of natural paving to treat the family to fifteen cents' worth of his good entertainment. The cross roads saloon has lost half its loafers since he came—and they're not loafers any more, either. He has given the country sport a chance to show the girls his right to the title. And best of all, he has brought a taste of pleasure and of the zest of life into the gray existence of the farmer's wife and the middle-aged woman of the small town. Maybe it is a poor, second-hand, commercial-run sort of zest, to our sophisticated and blasé thinking; but it is the best they ever had, and they are thankful for it.

The country exhibitor, though rainy his films may be and dingy his painted front, has brought to the little neglected cluster of shelters called by courtesy a town, a reflection of the gay white lights. With a little of that imagination whose very birthplace is the country, he is made to represent the joyousness of life in the big city. He contributes a touch of sporting life without any morning-after flavor, and supplies romance without any heart breaks. Altogether he has added tremendously to the world's contentment with its lot. More power to him!

Just A Moment Please

NOTHING TO DO 'TIL TOMORROW

The poor luxury-loving operator, who, up to the present time, has nothing to do besides lugging the films out to the "house," inspecting them, getting his machine oiled up for the daily run, running the advertising slides, projecting the evening's show, locking up the house and delivering the "show" to the exchange, is now going to have less of a "snap." A geek down in Ohio has invented an electric piano player with music of all kinds on tap, and in the future the operator, besides adjusting his carbons, keeping his picture in frame and running the film and the advertising slides is to direct the music by pressing a row of buttons which will turn on the Indian music, the "sob stuff," the march tunes, etc. Oh it's a gay life.

SEVEN SUFFERING SISTERS

The World's Greatest Yarn.

The World's Greatest Writer

Episode Ten—"The Mystery's Solution."

(PART TWO)

S. C. Nario, the villain.

"Hurry up and let's hear what happened to you and the scripts," urged Ed Itor, who found it impossible to restrain his patience long enough for P. I. Inkerton to catch his breath. "You're here of course, but where oh where are those scripts?" "They're coming," gasped Inkerton, "S. C. Nario, the guy as stole 'em, will be here any minute. He was right behind me when I started out, but I hurried along in order to relieve your anxiety as to my whereabouts and I guess I went too fast for him." "Here he comes now," remarked "Di" Rector, as a pudgy figure entered the studio pushing the precious manuscripts in a wheelbarrow before him. "Well you seem to have a lot of nerve at any rate," stated M. A. Gnate, the millionaire president of the Jumbo Film Corporation. With a labored smile the newcomer dropped his hold on the wheelbarrow. "There they are," began the self admitted thief as he turned toward M. A. Gnate. "I had to bring 'em back because they were so punk." "But why did you take them in the first place?" queried Ed Itor. "I thought the watchman told you all about that when he got back, but if not I'll begin at the beginning and reveal the whole sad story to you." "Go ahead," chirped Sue Brette, "we're all dying to hear about it." "Well, then," slowly stated the thief. "To begin at the very start, my name is S. C. Nario and I'm the founder and sole originator of the S. C. Nario Script School, which claims to teach working girls how to become millionaires by writing photoplays. I got along all right for awhile until the pupils got to the point where they insisted upon having a sample script to act as a guide for their own feeble efforts. That had me stumped completely, for by that time I had in the neighborhood of 9,678,542,894,784 pupils, and all but three of them were asking for sample scripts. Just as I saw myself forced to quit business on account of the physical impossibility of furnishing so many samples, the idea struck me that here, within less than a mile of the School I operate, was the Jumbo Film Corporation, which must have thousands of scripts ready for use in its scenario department. Accordingly that very night I broke into your studio, stole the scripts and kidnaped the watchman when he became too obstreperous. I thought my problem was solved and that I had sample scripts enough to last me for six months. After reading over the first hundred, however, I changed my mind, for it became clearly evident that the very poorest of my pupils could write a better script than that with one hand tied behind his back. Right then I decided to return the scripts to you, and here they are." "It's truly amazing," gasped M. A. Gnate, who refused to take offense at the remark on the quality of his scripts. "Well, let's get to work," suggested "Di" Rector, who had been idle so long that he really felt like taking a few scenes. Ed Itor grabbed the first script in sight, a ten reeler, and giving it his official "O. K.," passed it along to "Di" Rector with instructions to start work without delay

Some Current Releases Reviewed

"The Blindness of Virtue"

Reviewed by John C. Garrett

"THE Blindness of Virtue" splendidly photographed is the six-reel Essanay picture, to be released on the V. L. S. E. program, July 19. The story is taken from the recent stage success of the same name by Cosmo Hamilton.

Archie tells Winstanley he must marry the girl.

It is one which is well adaptable for screen use and after seeing the picture you wonder why more of the same kind are not produced often.

There is a lesson to be learned from this picture and it is the idea of the producer that those who see the production will not alone get much enjoyment from it, but will profit by the lesson in it. Mothers are sure to realize the folly of letting their young daughters go out into the world absolutely innocent of the secrets of life.

Edna Mayo portrays the part of Effie Pemberton, the young daughter of an English rector, who has not been taught the meaning of life. Bryant Washburn takes the part of Archibald Graham, a somewhat reckless youth, who is misunderstood by his father, and with Thomas McLarnie as the Rev. Pemberton, these three are ably supported by a cast which has been carefully selected, as shown by the good work they do.

The Hon. Archibald Graham is expelled from college and upon his arrival home is upbraided by his father, who misunderstands him. That same evening Winstanley, a friend of Archie's, who is a dissipated youth, comes to see him and persuades the boy to go out with a couple of chorus girls and make a night of it. Archie finally consents, but early in the evening becoming disgusted at the actions of the party leaves for home. Next morning Archie's father tells him that he has arranged for him to go out into the country and live at an old English vicarage, where the rector, who has previously studied law, will tutor him.

Arrived at the vicarage the boy is warmly welcomed by the old gardener and the rector's wife, Mrs. Pemberton, makes the boy at home, as does Rector Pemberton, who tells him that they are going to be pals. Archie later meets Effie Pemberton, the young daughter, who had not been told of the fundamental principles of life, and soon his existence at the rector's is a very happy one. Winstanley calls upon Archie and meets Mary Ann, a beautiful girl, daughter of a washerwoman in the village, who like Effie is innocent of life. The girl longs for beautiful clothes and is finally persuaded by Winstanley to elope to London with him. Archie learns that the girl has gone with Winstanley and follows them to London, where they are found in a disreputable hotel. Winstanley cannot marry Mary Ann, as he has already been married, so Archie sends her back to her mother.

Mary Ann's mother comes to the rector's and tells him of the disgrace which has befallen her daughter and he realizing that his daughter because of her innocence might fall a victim of temptation, tells her mother that she must explain life and all of its mysteries to the girl at once.

Archie returns from the city early in the morning and Effie rushes into his room clad in her kimona to tell him how glad she is that he has returned. He tries to impress upon her that she must leave the room, but she misunderstands him and tells him that he says he loves her, but acts so strangely and wants to get rid of her. The girl begins to weep and Archie takes her in his arms.

At this moment Effie's father comes into the room and is horrified. He orders the girl to leave the room at once and turning denounces Archie, who swears his innocence of any dishonorable act, and tells the minister that his daughter's eyes should have been opened by some wholesome truths.

Archie heartbroken proposes to leave the house and is intent on committing suicide, but Effie tells of the happenings in his room, clears the boy's name and after she has been told the great truths of life by her mother, the Rev. Pemberton tells Archie that he can marry Effie.

"The Rug Maker's Daughter"

Reviewed by C. S. Walters

MAUD ALLAN, appearing in "The Rug Maker's Daughter," the latest release of the Oliver-Morosco Photoplay Company associated with Bosworth, Inc., is best known as an exponent of classical dances, but she here proves to be a screen star of no little ability. In this picture she is seen as the daughter of a Turkish rug maker, and while she indulges in only a little dancing, it is sufficient to bring out her graceful qualities in that art. Her acting is par excellence, and supported by Forrest Stanley in the leading male role Miss Allan lends a brilliant and distinct charm to a most likeable story.

The artistic staging of the play bespeaks the work of a director, who not only knows how to bring out the strong points of interest in a plot, but is adept at wrapping them up in an environment which carries one into the spirit of the story. Besides Miss Allan as Demetra and Forrest Stanley as Robert Van Buren, Herbert Standing as Halib Bey, Howard Davies as Osman, a rug merchant, Laura Woods Cushing as Barah, duenna to Demetra, Jane Darwell as Robert's mother, and Harrington Gibbs as John Marshall are also prominent in the cast.

The opening scene is in Halib Bey's rug shop. Demetra, the man's daughter, takes a great liking to a certain rug. This is given to her as a dowry, but later Halib Bey, unable to resist Osman's tempting offer, sells it to him. Meanwhile Barah tells Demetra that the rug is missing. She questions her father, only to learn that it has been sold. Demetra visits a fortune teller and is given a card advising her to marry the possessor of the dower rug so as to insure happiness.

On their way home they are held up by thieves, but the timely arrival of two Americans prevents further trouble. Demetra allows Robert Van Buren to accompany her. Halib Bey orders Robert from the house, but this does not intimidate the American in the least. Ignoring Turkish customs, he calls again to see Demetra and receives the same treatment. But love finds a way which enables Robert and Demetra to meet secretly in the rose garden. Meanwhile, Osman asks to marry Demetra, but she objects because of the loss of the dower rug.

Demetra and Robert progress nicely in their love making until Osman learns of their clandestine meetings and informs Halib Bey. Demetra is brought before her father. Halib Bey then, in the presence of Osman, sets the day of the marriage. The following evening Robert climbs the balcony and meets Demetra, and on leaving he is overpowered by Osman's hirelings. The next morning on regaining consciousness he finds himself a prisoner in Osman's house.

Demetra cannot understand what has become of Robert, but on the night of the wedding she and Barah make their escape and embark to America. Her cousin in New York introduces her to Mrs. Van Buren, who takes her to her home. Osman follows and learns her whereabouts. He calls on her and steals the dower rug which Mrs. Van Buren had purchased. On finding the rug Robert escapes and sails for home on being told by Halib Bey that Demetra has become married. Demetra anxious to get the rug receives a note telling where it can be found. She falls into Osman's trap. Van Buren in a passing car recognizes her and starts in pursuit.

Robert and his chauffeur then locate Osman's headquarters, break in the door and rescue Demetra.

"The Fox Woman"

Reviewed by John C. Garrett

THE Mutual Master-Picture, "The Fox Woman," to be released July 15, and featuring Teddy Sampson, Signe Auen and Elmer Clifton, is a very good picture and well presented. The wealth of beautiful scenery which was taken in a famous California Japanese garden, lends much to the atmosphere of the picture, which is splendidly photographed.

Usually the vampires are pictured as brunettes with raving black hair, sensuous red lips and sparkling eyes. The part of "The Fox Woman," the vampire, is taken by Signe Auen, and she portrays the character splendidly. The idea of a blonde leading men on and taking their souls is a new one, but welcome. Little Teddy Sampson, as Jewel, the Japanese wife, is one of the most appealing little actresses on the screen and her characterization of this part is excellent. Elmer Clifton, as Marashida, the deformed artist, has a very difficult role to fill, and to say that he fills it, is saying little for the very good work he does.

Yasakuji, the jinricksha man, gives his only daughter, Jewel, in marriage to Marashida, the crooked Japanese painter. They are very happy together and because the husband has risen above his physical deformity no one ever thinks of him but as gentle and noble of spirit.

At the house of the missionaries, Alice Carroway, called Ali-San lives with her uncle and dabbles in Japanese sculpture. On one of her jinricksha jaunts, she picks up a grotesque image of the Ni-O. She tries to copy it, but is unable to, and asks one of the Japanese converts to find her a model. He suggests Marashida, and she is taken to the artist's home.

From the moment Ali-San crosses Marashida's threshold the soul of the deformed artist changes and he becomes like his body, ill-shapen and ugly. Poor little Jewel notices the difference in her husband and pleads with him to love her.

Yasakuji comes to his daughter's home and here sees Marashida posing for the American girl. The old man recognizes in her, instantly, the traits of "The Fox Woman," whose story is known to the Japanese, of how she wrought evil upon men, turning brave warriors into insane beasts and always laughing at her victims. He tells the artist of this, who scoffs at him and continues to pose for Ali-San and more and more becomes like the image of the Ni-O.

One day Ali-San sees Jewel and demands her as a playmate. The little Japanese woman is given to the American girl, who soon tires of her and makes her the servant of everyone in the house.

Yasakuji returns from a trip and goes to see his daughter. Upon his arrival at her home he finds Marashida, who has become a hideous being posing for Ali-San, but Jewel is nowhere to be found. He afterwards learns of her whereabouts and goes to the mission house to see her, but Ali-San only laughs at him and he is put out of the house. Later Yasakuji clambers up the balcony leading into Ali-San's boudoir and here the girl sees his face staring at her over her shoulder in the mirror. Frightened, she rushes out onto the balcony and falls to the ground where she is killed. In his cottage Marashida comes to himself.

Little Jewel puts on her bridal dress and determines to become the bride of death. She goes to the shrine of her ancestors and is tremblingly holding aloft a dagger, when Marashida rushes up, plucks the blade from her fingers, and she realizes she has come back into his heart.

Lubin's "Road O' Strife"

Reviewed by Florence Enk

"THE Coming of the Kingdom" is the fifteenth and last chapter of Lubin's the "Road O' Strife." This chapter is exceedingly interesting all the way through and one of the tense moments is when Alene is deciding whether she will be a queen or whether she will marry Robert Dane.

Alene and Mrs. Madison.

Gershom, in trying to make Alene decide to marry the ambassador, because he thinks it will make her happy, draws a very pretty picture and we see Alene crowned Queen of Urania, but it is merely a picture and does not appeal to Alene since it does not contemplate Robert Dane in any of its many scenes.

Robert Dane, now sufficiently strong enough to leave the hospital, is tried for the stealing of the silver cup from the court records and confesses. He is fined one thousand dollars or sentenced to six months in the penitentiary. Having no money he needs must serve his term in the penitentiary.

Alene, reading of the decision in the papers and realizing what Dane has done to save her from the gallows, is happy in the thought that soon she will be rich and able to pay the fine. When she informs Madison, the lawyer, of her plans, he sadly informs her that her fortune has been invested in worthless stocks. The only thing of value which she possesses is a large gem and she instructs Madison to dispose of this and with the money obtained through the sale he is to pay the fine and free Dane. Madison, loathe to follow her bidding, sells the gem and Robert Dane, freed, visits the Madison mansion.

Alene makes her decision as to her future.

At about the same time Dane reaches the Madison mansion, Gershom in company with the Hervo-Alesian ambassador arrives. The ambassador seeks an interview with Alene. The ambassador requests that Alene's friends leave the room, but Alene replies that if he cannot speak before her friends he need not speak at all.

His message is from the emperor and is to the effect that if Alene will marry a Hervo-Alesian prince, he, the emperor will make her queen of Urania. And it is here that Gershom visualizes his wonderful story and at the same time breaks the heart of Robert Dane as he realizes the wide gulf forming between him and Alene.

Thinking it is for Alene's happiness, when she asks him, "Robert Dane, do you love me," his reply is "No, I do not love you," and at the same time his heart is breaking. Gershom is very happy at Dane's reply because he is sure that now that Robert does not love Alene, the girl will consent to become the wife of some Hervo-Alesian prince.

Imagine then, his disappointment when Alene, after looking long at Dane, turns to the waiting ambassador and replies, "Your emperor's aid is not needed, for I have already come into my kingdom." Slowly, all those present, except Dane, leave the room and when they are alone Alene slowly and shyly turns to Dane, love for whom has made her sacrifice a throne.

At first Dane is dazed as he cannot believe he hears aright, but when Alene whispers that now she is only a girl a great light comes into his face and he presses her close to his heart and thus ends the "Road O' Strife."

desired and his unconsciously funny ways just make you laugh. When they take him up in an elevator in a Washington hotel he immediately suspects the men of trying to trap him and at the point of a revolver he is let out and it is pretty hard for the hotel clerk to keep a straight face when the "Texas steer" accuses the men of trying to trap him. Grace Darmond as Bossy Brander, daughter of the "Texas steer," or Maverick Brander, as he is known adds a charming daintiness to this high class comedy. Capt. Bright, played by John Charles, is Bossy's sweetheart. Much credit is due Mr. Charles for making this comedy the success it is. Mrs. Tyrone Power as Mrs. Campbell, Bright's sister, Francis Bayless as Mrs. Brander, as well as the rest of the cast deserve mention for their excellent work.

We find Bossy Brander taking leave of her sweetheart, Capt. Bright, who has been ordered to Washington. It is hard for Bossy to part with the man she loves and she tries to persuade her parents to move to Washington, but it is to no avail.

Just about this time the election for a congressman from Texas county comes up. Bright hearing of it suggests Maverick Brander as the right man, being honest and wealthy, hoping that by his election the Branders will move to Washington and he can continue to meet Bossy.

When the plan is broached to Brander he refuses and goes to his mines in Mexico. After his departure his daughter carries on the campaign. The day of election Brander returns, forgetting it is election day. Before he reaches him he has a breakdown and meeting a man asks him to go to the ranch and secure a horse for him. Instead the entire town turns out and they carry him home on their backs. He has been elected congressman.

They move to Washington and on their first evening both Mrs. Brander and Bossy "dress up," expecting Capt. Bright to take them to dinner, but Capt. Bright, on seeing them, pleads business, and they have to go to dinner alone. And it is no wonder Bright feels ashamed. Bossy comes to the conclusion that her lover is ashamed of them, and after that refuses to see him.

Back in Texas the people hear that Brander favors the railroads, and an investigating committee starts out to see if the rumor is true. Arrived in Washington they cause much confusion and mirth, and Brander, who is having a dinner party, tries to get rid of them. His secretary is given money to get them drunk and this he does. However, when the money is spent they all return to the banquet room and with much yelling and shooting cheer Texas.

Now, it so happens that upstairs sits a man busy with his speech, and unfortunately one of the bullets hits him. Next morning he reports his mishap to the "Texas steer," but not receiving any satisfaction notifies the police, who immediately start out after the Texans. Luckily the Texans have been tipped off to what will become of them and they hastily make their departure via the fire escape. Due to their debauch of the night before they find it necessary to carry large pitchers of water with them, not to mention the iced cloths on their heads.

When Bossy sees the actions of the Texans she appreciates Bright's feelings when they first came to Washington, and asks his forgiveness. Bright is very willing to forgive her and once again Bossy is happy.

"The Honor of the District Attorney"

Reviewed by John C. Garrett

THE two-reel American production to be released July 19 and featuring Vivian Rich, Harry Von Meter and Walter Spencer is full of intensely dramatic happenings. The picture begins with a saloon brawl in which a hanger-on is killed by Ben Morgan, a political boss, and the action keeps up throughout the picture.

The production is splendidly photographed, full of artistic interior settings and has a wealth of outdoor scenes, which cannot be surpassed. The cast is well balanced and all of the players put forth the efforts which are required of them to make this picture a success, as it will be.

On the day John Mortimer takes the office of district attorney, his daughter says to him, "Daddy, I know you will always do right, whatever the cost." A few days later Ben Morgan, a political boss, who has killed a man in a saloon brawl, calls upon Mortimer and tells him that he must get him out of the scrape. The district attorney turns to the telephone, calls police headquarters and upon the arrival of an officer, who is warmly greeted by Morgan, tells him to arrest the man for murder.

The murder in the saloon.

One evening some time later, after seeing his wife and daughter on the train bound for "Granny's" in the mountains, Mortimer sees a young man with a knife in his hand, bending over a prostrate form. He grapples with the supposed murderer, but is knocked down and the fellow escapes.

Up in the mountains there are some engineers, who after setting a blast, run for safety. Phillip Storey, one of the young engineers, sees a horse running away and its rider, a girl, wildly clinging to the reins. He rushes to the scene in time to save the girl and just as they are leaving the place, which is to be dynamited, the explosion occurs and they are miraculously saved.

After this incident the young fellow becomes a great friend of the girl's and their friendship ripens into love. Storey receives word that he must leave soon and asks Mrs. Mortimer if he and Dora can be married right away. She consents, after wiring Mr. Mortimer, who approves of the marriage, and plans to arrive at the home in the mountains on the day of the wedding.

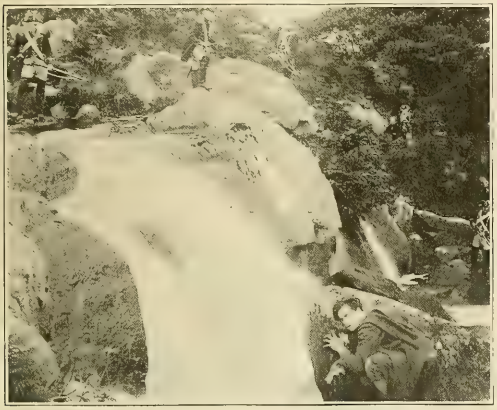
The wedding day comes and Mr. Mortimer has not arrived and after waiting some time the couple are married and are receiving congratulations from their friends when the bride's father arrives. After congratulating his daughter, he is introduced to his son-in-law and is astounded when he recognizes in him the young man whom he had seen leaning over the prostrate form the day of the murder.

Morgan and his wife leave for home and after wrestling with love for his daughter and his duty, duty finally triumphs and he sends for his son-in-law to come at once.

Upon their arrival Dora's husband is arrested and charged with the murder of one Jean Baptiste. He is dumfounded, but tells his story of how years before Baptiste has stolen a claim that he had staked. Phillip had followed the thief, but to no avail. He had not seen him since until the fatal night when he had come across him in the throes of death. As memory of the theft flashed through his mind he leaned down to search the pockets of the dead man for his papers and then was when Mortimer came upon him.

The district attorney shakes his head in doubt, for no jury would believe the story. Just as the young man is being led away a telegram arrives telling of the execution of the man, who had confessed to the murder of Baptiste. Phillip's innocence is proven and he and Dora fly into each other's arms.

"All for Old Ireland"



Reviewed by Hugh Hoffman

THIS is a rather belated appearance of a production that was made a year ago. At that time Sidney Olcott, the well-known globe-trotting director, was in the western part of Ireland directing his own company of players. He had not finished this picture, which was his first Irish production, for the 1914 season, before the war broke out. The company got home the best way it could, which was in the steerage of a homeward bound vessel. The few remaining scenes were completed in America.

In the production the scenic beauties and fine photographic quality far outweigh the acting and the story. The latter is somewhat along the lines of the conventional Irish drama. It is a story of patriotism having to do with the revolt of Irish patriots against the oppressor. Aside from the principal parts the characters are all portrayed by real Irish peasants who had never appeared in pictures or on the stage before. Their work is natural and pleasing.

There is one scene in a public house where a genuine Irish reel is introduced. It is danced by a professional dancer who knows how to dance in the real Irish way. This will give the Irish people who see the picture a few moments of pleasing surprise. Miss Valentine Grant, who plays the lead, joins in the reel and does a very neat bit of dancing. Miss Grant is featured in the production and is very charming and pretty as the heroine.

Photographically this production is exquisite. At first it looked as though it were hardly necessary to send a company to Ireland, because some of the scenes could just as well have been done in America. But as the picture went on the scenes became more charming, so that by the time the second reel was reached there was a good deal of murmuring among the spectators in approbation of the natural beauty in the picture. Even though the story were not exceptionally striking these beautiful Irish scenes would pull it up over the hill. The story is not poor; it is strong but, as stated before, conventional. For the sake of the scenes alone, however, the picture is well worth seeing.

In the acting department Robert Rivers as Fagin, the traitor, is unusually fine. His work is strong enough to stand out above all others in the cast, excepting perhaps Miss Grant, who in her style of work could not be properly compared to Mr. Rivers.

The informer leads the soldiery to Alene's home.

By way of summary it can be said that Mr. Olcott has made Irish pictures with more dramatic force than this one, but surely none with any greater beauty.

Metro's "The Right of Way"

THE quality and general excellence of "The Right of Way," which was the feature at the Strand theater last week, starring William Faversham, is of a character which makes for an overpowering and lasting appeal. The picture is a five-part adaptation of the book by Sir Gilbert Parker, and was produced for the Metro Program by the B. A. Rolfe Company under the direction of John N. Noble. Although William Faversham is undeniably a great asset to the success of the picture, the story in itself is unusually attractive and accountable for a good deal of the praise due the finished production.

Mr. Faversham's part as the brilliant criminal lawyer who loses his memory and drifts into a small Canadian village where he is shunned as a heretic, affords him a wide scope for the interpretative ability which has made him famous on the legitimate stage. A strong story of general interest and a capable cast form a combination above adverse criticism. "The Right of Way," can without hesitation be lauded as one of the best features of recent releases.

The night scenes, which were actually photographed at night, give a pleasing impression of realism and are far superior in effect to those obtained by the usual method of tinting the film. The atmosphere of a pioneer settlement in the Canadian woods is well suggested and is borne out by the types of the townspeople and the interior furnishings of their homes. ward Brennan's performance as Joe Portugaise leaves nothing to be desired. Henry Bergman as Trudel, and Harold DeBecker as Billie Wantage are both splendid in rather difficult parts.

Charles Steele's ability as a criminal lawyer commands the respect of his acquaintances, who dislike him because of his foppish, disdainful manner. After securing an acquittal for Joe Portugaise, whom he believes guilty of the murder, Steele orders the woodsman to leave the city. In his characteristic offhand manner, Steele asks Kathleen Wantage to marry him. She accepts.

Five years pass. The lawyer's heavy drinking causes an estrangement between him and his wife. In a brawl in a nearby saloon, Steele is knocked unconscious and thrown into the river, where he is found by Portugaise, who carries the unconscious man to his hut. Steele's mind is a blank as to the past, and he does not regain his memory until a year later. Then he decides to live in the little village under an assumed name, and accepts employment in a tailor's shop. The newcomer to the town is not trusted by the people because he does not attend church.

Steele's friendship for Rosalie, the girl who nursed him when he was ill, changes to love. Rosalie and the priest strive to convert Steele, but their efforts meet with no apparent success. The hatred of the townspeople for the unbeliever becomes serious. The church catches fire. Steele enters the burning building and saves the sacred vessels. This act endears the unbeliever to the people, and they heartily agree to his proposal that each man give a certain portion of his possessions for the purpose of erecting a new church.

The people give willingly and generously, and to show their faith in Steele they entrust the funds to him for safekeeping. A gang of whisky-sellers who have been working in the town learn that Steele has charge of the church funds and attempt to rob him. In a fight with the thieves Steele is mortally wounded. The dying man accepts the teachings of the church, and is baptized by the curé.

THE thirteenth episode of the North American serial, "The Diamond from the Sky," "The Man in the Mask," makes the mystery of the diamond even deeper. We now find it at the bottom of the sea in the possession of a huge octopus. Credit must be given the director for the excellent photography and one scene in particular, taken at night, showing the police in search of Luke Lovell, is well worth mentioning.

The episode opens with Luke Lovell on the beach just regaining consciousness. He manages to escape the police, however, and we later find him busy at a forge, endeavoring to forget the awful incident on the water and its fatal result.

Esther and Quabba, together with a street piano, cart, pony and monkey, start out on their search for Arthur Stanley, now known as John Powell, the "Golden Man." At a signal from the young mistress Quabba sends Clarence, the monkey, up the wistaria to the window of Esther. When the monkey again lights on the ground he has a note from Esther enclosing half of the money and giving Quabba instructions to go to Los Angeles to find Arthur.

On his way to his lodgings, Quabba is hurt by a trolley car and Blair having followed him and believing that through him he might set a trap to search Esther and find out if she is in possession of the documents, listens very carefully when Quabba gives the taxi driver the address of his lodgings and Blair then scribbles a note, purporting to be written at the request of Quabba, asking that Esther come to Quabba's lodgings as he had been hurt.

Blair, seeking a messenger, sees the bootblack and gives him the message, asking him to deliver it to Esther. The bootblack very obediently takes it to Blake first. Blake, suspicious, disguises himself as a bootblack, delivers the message to Esther himself and then follows her.

Meanwhile Blair has gone to Quabba's lodgings and by bribing the landlady gains entrance to the room where Quabba lies weak from his accident. Blair, masked, gags and binds Quabba and then starts a search for the papers. In the midst of his search he hears Esther's footsteps and admits her.

Blair then tries to search Esther, but before he can overpower his victim a big bootblack who is none other than Tom Blake, enters, and then he and Blair have a hard hand to hand battle and with the assistance of Quabba,

Pathe's "The Conspirators"

ACTION of an exciting kind, thrills that will really make an audience sit up and take notice and unusual situations that are far from the beaten track of film thrillers all tend to make the fifth episode in Pathe's exciting serial "The Romance of Elaine" one of the most interesting of the entire series.

In addition to the thrill and mystery element, episode five also contains a return of the society atmosphere, since one of the striking events in the first reel of this episode is a lawn fete given by Elaine Dodge at her country home and which gives lavish opportunities for scenes of social grandeur.

As the story opens Lieutenant Woodward, stationed at Fort Dale along the Atlantic Coast, meets with Professor Arnold, a former acquaintance, and soon afterwards receives an invitation from Elaine Dodge to visit her country home where a lawn fete is to be staged the same afternoon. He hastily writes a note accepting the invitation and promising to bring with him his friend, Professor Arnold.

Del Mar, the foreign agent, is another of the invited guests and his actions are so suspicious during the social affair that Professor Arnold resolves to watch him closely. While at the lawn party, Del Mar receives from one of the servants a folded note, which after reading it is tossed aside and later is picked up by Elaine's Aunt Josephine, who finds it bears a drawing showing the sea with the sun rising on the horizon. Much mystified, Aunt Josephine gives the paper to Elaine, who after studying it carefully decides that something important is to happen along the sea-coast at sunrise the next morning.

During the night, Professor Arnold, who is much concerned over Del Mar's queer actions, invades the apartment of the latter and is there surprised by Del Mar, who suddenly emerges from a secret panel in the wall and fires his revolver at the intruder. Arnold, however, escapes uninjured.

The next morning Elaine arises at an early hour to see what may transpire, and upon visiting the seashore climbs aboard a vessel alongside the dock, and later is taken captive by the men aboard the boat, who are in Del Mar's employ, and imprisoned in one of the cabins.

Jameson, who had gone fishing that morning, hears Elaine's cries for help, and at once communicates with an aviator friend of his stationed at the United States fort in that vicinity and begs his assistance in rescuing Elaine from the ship. After the vessel has proceeded to sea, Del Mar and his associates attempt to grapple the Atlantic cable and to cut it, but their operations are discovered by Professor Arnold and Lieutenant Woodward who are riding along the lofty promontory that forms the coast at this point, and at Woodward's command the two field guns are wheeled into action and a shot is fired at the vessel which demolishes the cabin in which Elaine is imprisoned.

Thoroughly frightened, Del Mar drops the cable overboard without cutting it, and hastens to shelter himself. Elaine escapes from the battered doorway of the stateroom, leaps overboard and is later picked up by Jameson and his friend, who have lighted on the surface of the sea in their hydroaeroplane, and as the film closes she is about to be returned to shore as a passenger in the airship.

Miss Dana's pleasing impersonation of Eleanor Thurston, the simple though self-willed little country girl, goes far toward making the picture thoroughly entertaining and pleasing.

The theme is that of the carefully reared country girl whose conscientious desire to earn her own living takes her to the city, where in her inocence she is brought dangerously close to one of its many pitfalls. Her country sweetheart makes his appearance in time to rescue her.

Through the influence of her uncle the girl enters a hospital to become a trained nurse. Dr. Sinclair, a handsome young interne at the hospital, and the hero of many conquests, wins Eleanor's confidence and makes love to her. The girl believes Sinclair's intentions to be good, and does not attempt to discourage his well-mannered advances.

Roger, realizing the many pitfalls of the city, persuades his father to transfer him to the New York office so that he may be near his sweetheart. He spends his first night in the city in celebration, and the next morning Sinclair finds him on a doorstep in a rather hilarious condition. To save him from arrest the doctor takes him to the hospital, where he wakes up to find Eleanor peering down at him. Later Roger returns and repeats his proposal to the girl, but she again refuses him.

Returning from the hospital to his hotel he meets a woman of the streets and accompanies her to a cafe. While there he sees Eleanor enter with Sinclair, who requests a private dining room. Roger sends the waiter in with a note requesting the doctor to see him for a moment. The note's clever wording fools Sinclair and he leaves Eleanor to speak with its sender. The honesty of Roger's appeal brings the doctor's consent to leave the hotel, and he leaves without speaking to the girl.

Eleanor, reluctant to believe Roger's assertion that Sinclair's attentions to her were not sincere, is convinced when she sees him leaving the cafe with the "woman." She then willingly consents to marry Roger and return to Sterrettstown.

AS "The Goddess," Vitagraph's continued photoplay in chapters, advances, the humorous element of the story, which, until now, has been strongly emphasized, gradually yields its position of prominence to stirring drama. The plot at first resembled a narrative based only upon Celestia's experiences, but it has now developed to the point of embracing three or four different issues all of which are of vital interest.

In bringing about this result Gouverneur Morris and his collaborator, Charles W. Goddard, have cleverly avoided spreading the story to the detriment of its unity. One's interest, while not absorbed in any one thread of the story, is influenced by the consistent action and thrilling realism of the scenes to feel the seriousness of the object towards which the several factors of the plot are gradually working. Direction, patient, comprehensive, and masterful, is evident in every scene. And for this Ralph W. Ince is to be credited.

The principals of the cast, Anita Stewart as Celestia, Earle Williams as Tommy Barclay, and Paul Scardon as Stilleter, remain the same. Frank Currier as Gordon Barclay and Thomas Brooke as Senator Amos Blackstone have played important, though sometimes absent, parts since the beginning of the serial, and Mary Anderson and William Dangman stepped into early prominence as Nellie and Freddy the Ferret. The last few chapters have afforded Ned Finley as Gunsdorf and Eulalie Jensen as his wife some excellent opportunities for distinctive work, and they have not overlooked them. Chapters eight and nine were marked by Edward Elkas' splendid impersonation of the miserly coal baron, Silas Kehr, but chapter ten transpires without his villainous presence.

Chapter nine opens with Celestia's and Freddy's entrance into the ballroom of the Blackstone mansion. Mary invited the goddess to the gathering in a spirit of jealous revenge, but this is further aroused rather than gratified by the cordial manner in which Celestia is received by the men. She soothes her anger by telling herself that the men's admiration is due to the other girl's style of dress, but reversing the circumstances fails to bring about any change. Evening dress seems as becoming on Celestia as do her angelic garments.

Meanwhile, the striking miners at Bitumen, agitated by Gunsdorf and others, decide to charge their non-union successors. Silas Kehr, the coal baron, notified of the decision by one of his spies, is highly elated, as a lawless attack is exactly the opportunity for firing upon the men that he wishes. But the slaughter, for it would amount to that, is prevented by Tommy Barclay, who points out the danger of such a procedure, and begs the men to wait and let events shape themselves for a time.

The beginning of the tenth chapter reveals Mrs. Gunsdorf's infatuation for Tommy. The latter receives a telegram from his father, requesting him to return home. The miner's wife's advances decide Tommy's course for him, and he prepares to leave. Mrs. Gunsdorf locks the door and, in his struggle with her to recover the key, Tommy is surprised by the woman's husband accompanied by two of his fellow-strikers. Mrs. Gunsdorf openly accuses Tommy of attacking her, and points to the telegram as conclusive evidence that he is a spy. The young man is taken out in the street, where a mob gathers quickly.

Professor Stilleter confides to Blackstone and Barclay that he wishes to marry Celestia, but they warn him to give up the idea, and instruct him to take the goddess to Bitumen to quiet the unrest among the miners. They arrive just in time to interfere in Tommy's behalf. Celestia confronts Mrs. Gunsdorf and asks her to repeat her accusation. But instead the woman breaks down and confesses. Tommy begins to thank Celestia when Stilleter, who still has the girl under his hypnotic influence, interrupts and leads her away.

World's "The Cub"

Reviewed by Thomas C. Kennedy

WILLIAM A. BRADY'S former stage success, "The Cub," a comedy-drama written by Thompson Buchanan, has been picturized by the World Film Company in five parts, and features Martha Hedman. Quick, purposeful action marks the story which combines many unusual and thoroughly enjoyable comedy situations with strong dramatic moments. The plot is laid in the Kentucky mountains, and concerns a cub reporter who is sent by his newspaper to report the feud between the Renlows and the Whites.

Martha Hedman is seen as Alice Renlow, the pretty mountain girl with whom the Cub falls in love, and she invests the part with the personality which characterized her appearances on the legitimate stage. John Hines is ever active and always interesting as Steve Oldham, the title role which was created by Douglas Fairbanks in the stage production. The efficient supporting cast consists of Robert Cummings as Captain White; Dorothy Farnum as Peggy White; Jessie Lewis as Becky King; and Bert Starkey as Stark White.

The production is excellently handled, the out-door locations are beautiful, and the atmosphere of the mountains in which law is an unknown factor is suggested by the types and action as well as the rugged scenery. The scene showing the complete demolition of the house in the efforts of the Whites to capture the reporter instils in one a deep respect for the mountaineers' determination.

A trifling incident starts a feud between the Whites and the Renlows. News of this trouble reaches the city, and the editor of the Gazette sends Steve Oldham to the mountains to cover the feud for the paper. The first question put to Oldham when he arrives at the hotel is, "Are you a White or a Renlow?" to which the cub replies that he is neutral. Oldham and Alice Renlow are attracted to each other and soon become friends.

The feudists agree to bury the hatchet for the evening on which a dance is held. At the dance Oldham enters the good graces of the Renlows when he subscribes twenty dollars to the benefit fund. As a reward for this burst of generosity, he is shown the refreshments, which consist of two pails of punch, one for the boys and one for the girls. After partaking of a few draughts of the punch, Oldham, in a moment of gaiety, kisses Peggy White, who thereupon believes herself betrothed to the reporter.

When the cub learns that the Whites expect him to marry Peggy he takes to his heels. But the Whites are in dead earnest, and pursue and capture the fugitive. He is held a prisoner in an old house, and sentenced to be shot at sunrise. Alice Renlow pleads with Tilden, who is in love with her, to allow Oldham to escape, and he consents to grant her request on one condition—that the reporter leave the country immediately, and alone.

Alice explains to her friend the conditions under which he may escape, but Oldham refuses to leave without her, and, when she confesses that she loves him, he determines to fight to the finish. Aided by Alice's father, Oldham succeeds in holding his ground until the house is torn down. The arrival of a troop of cavalry saves the cub and the Renlows. Oldham and Alice, now free, prepare for their marriage.

"The Garden of Lies"

Reviewed by John C. Garrett

"THE Garden of Lies," the second Broadway Universal feature production, in five reels, featuring Jane Cowl and William Russell, supported by an all-star cast, is to be released on July 17.

This story scenarioized from the novel by Justus Miles Forman of the same name is one with which many of us are familiar. The photography is very good and many beautiful scenes are shown throughout the production. Jane Cowl, who is a well known star of the legitimate stage, takes the part of Princess Eleanor, a beautiful young woman, who on the day of her marriage is injured in an accident and loses her memory. The part calls for some very thorough acting and Miss Cowl portrays the character splendidly. William Russell as one Dennis Mallory, who is in love with the princess and in order to restore her mind poses as her husband, plays his part exceptionally well.

As the story opens we see Princess Eleanor Novodna wandering about the beautiful gardens of her cousin, Jessica Mannering. The princess had but recently been married and on her wedding day she and her husband had met with an automobile accident, which left the American girl out of her mind. Her husband is gone and she does not even remember what he looks like, but continually calls for him.

Baron Von Alderz and Dr. MacKenzie are trying to find some way to cure the girl. Dr. MacKenzie decides that there is but one way to restore her reason and that is to have a man play the part of her husband. He and Von Alderz search for someone to enact this role and they meet Dennis Mallory, a lover of adventure. They tell him how just after the accident Baron Von Steinbeck, prime minister of Novodna, had come upon the scene and ordered the prince to return to his country at once. The prince had left his wife and had not been heard from since. Mallory consents to play the part of the prince and upon being presented to Princess Eleanor he falls in love with her immediately and she returns his love, telling him that he is so American like and that she is happy to have him for a husband.

The real prince returns unexpectedly and finds his wife in the arms of Mallory. He fights a duel with the American in which Mallory bests the prince. The prince then goes to his wife, who has regained her reason, and tells her that he is her true husband and that Mallory is but an impostor. At the same time he shows her an order from Baron Von Steinbeck which orders him to either leave his morganatic wife or give up being ruler of Novodna.

Eleanor is heartbroken over Mallory's deceiving her and even when Dr. MacKenzie explains to the princess that the American had consented to play the role only to bring back her memory she refuses to be reconciled to him and sends him away when he calls.

Baron Von Steinbeck abducts the princess and Mallory seeing the abduction follows them to an old castle where after breaking in he is confronted by an armed guard and sees Eleanor locked behind iron bars. There is a pistol battle during which Von Steinbeck kills the prince, who came upon the scene just after Mallory had entered and also injures the American.

The princess is freed and sometime later she goes to see Mallory, who is hovering between life and death, and as the princess kneels beside the American's bedside and calls his name he smiles in response and the picture fades out with the couple in each other's arms.

MARION FAIRFAX WILL WRITE LASKY FEATURES SCENARIOS

In keeping with the policy of building up its photodramatic scenario department to the highest possible grade of efficiency, the Lasky Feature Play Company has entered into a contract with Miss Marion Fairfax, the famous New York dramatist who will leave for the studios in Hollywood this week.

The scenario department of the Lasky Feature Play Company is completely in charge of William C. De Mille, known to fame as the author of such successful plays as "The Warrens of Virginia" and "The Woman," who is now making even a greater reputation as an expert in the preparation of photodramatic themes for production. Mr. De Mille already has the assistance of Miss Margaret Turnbull, who is widely known both as a dramatist of success and Hector Turnbull, until recently dramatic editor of the New York Tribune.

Marion Fairfax, who now joins the Lasky scenario staff, began her career as an actress and attained considerable note on the stage. Within recent years she has written a couple of successful plays and also narratives of importance. Her first play "The Builders," was produced at the Astor theater in New York in 1907. This was followed by "The Chaperone," in which Maxine Elliott starred at the theater which bears her name. In 1912 Miss Fairfax's play, "The Talker," had a highly successful run in New York at the Harris theater.

PATHE RELEASES SARDOU'S "PRO PATRIA" IN SIX PARTS

Pathe will release in the week of July 26 a superb six-part colored feature, "Pro Patria," written by Victorian Sardou, and based upon the famous "Patrie" of that great French dramatist. This great picture features Henri Kraus, who played Jean Valjean in "Les Miserables," the most eminent actor of France, and is especially timely, dealing as it does with that time in the sixteenth century when Flanders, the modern Belgium, was overrun with Spanish armies of conquest, and when superhuman efforts were made by the despairing Flemish to rid themselves of their oppressors.

"Pro Patria" is magnificently put on and was staged in Louvain, since to meet with such a tragic fate. The old world buildings, now marred and ruined beyond redemption by German shells, are used as backgrounds. The acting is truly great, and the whole picture grips from start to finish.

FLORENCE CRAWFORD

Suppose you had been playing leading parts in western plays where you were called upon to do trick riding, clever swimming stunts and all those different essentials in the career of the motion picture heroine of the Far West. Suddenly, with almost no notice, you were whisked into another atmosphere and called upon to play society parts with up-to-the-minute gowns instead of divided skirt riding habits? What would you do? This is what happened recently to Florence Crawford, who was leading lady with the Majestic-Reliance Company on the coast. Playing opposite Arthur Mackley, she was sometimes his brave daughter, or his young wife, or the girl in whom he was most interested. Horseback riding seemed the most natural thing in the world. One day, in an idle moment (and there are not many in picture work!) she wished for society parts! An opportunity to come East with the Imp-Universal presented itself at almost the same time and the two have worked out into society parts with a vengeance. What did she do? Hunted up the best shops as soon as she arrived and "blew in" a lot of money for the latest things in clothes. In "Copper," her first Universal picture (released July 9) she played her first "real lady" in more than two years. Yes; they have real ladies in western dramas but not "up-to-the-minute" dresses—they are not essential. Miss Crawford is petite and dark with deep expressive eyes.

LUBIN'S ENORMOUS NEW STUDIO READY TO PRODUCE FEATURES

The enormous new Lubin studio at 17th street and Glenwood avenue, Philadelphia, is practically ready for occupancy, and forms the third in a link of studio buildings unequalled in the motion picture world. The new studio is within a short distance of the main Lubin headquarters at 20th street and Indiana avenue, and is a model of its kind. The building, which is 75 feet wide and 300 feet long, has four floors, with an area of 50 thousand square feet. There are four complete studios, any one of which is capable of staging the largest indoor production; the top floor has a huge glass dome, needing no artificial light.

The Lubin producing equipment now consists of two immense plants in Philadelphia and an even larger one at Betzwood, Pa., with additional studios at Los Angeles, Cal., Phoenix, Ariz., Jacksonville, Fla., Brooklyn, N. Y., Atlantic City, N. J., and Newport, R. I. The new studio will be used exclusively for the feature photoplays, of which the Lubin Company will make a specialty.

LENORE ULRICH IN "KILMENY," THE NEXT MOROSCO RELEASE

In its next release, the Oliver Morosco Photoplay Company presents for the first time in motion pictures, Lenore Ulrich, the popular Morosco star, whose success in the title role of "The Bird of Paradise" for the past two years has made her a big favorite among patrons of the theatrical stage.

Miss Ulrich, although one of the youngest stars in the profession, has had a remarkable success since the inception of her career, and, as in the case of Peggy O'Neill, is one of Oliver Morosco's "finds." Her rise to leading lady was rapid, and in two years she appeared in eighty-six roles, playing important parts in such productions as "Twelfth Night," "The Virginians," "The Deep Purple," "Get Rich Quick Wallingford," "The Chorus Lady" and many other big successes.

The initial motion picture subject selected for Miss Ulrich is "Kilmeny," a charming comedy drama founded on one of the great kidnapping mysteries of fashionable England. The title role of this production is particularly adapted to the particular style of this clever actress and shows her off to best advantage in a character that allows her versatility wide play. The many admirers of Miss Ulrich will immediately recognize with what foresight the producers have selected her first motion picture vehicle, and, according to reports from the Coast, the splendid screen qualities of this pretty star, as evidenced in "Kilmeny," will soon place her among the foremost motion picture favorites in this country.

LUBIN BANISHES "SCENARIO"

In recognition of the development of the motion picture manuscript from a brief and sketchy suggestion into an elaborate and carefully constructed dramatic composition which, as far as the work of the Lubin staff writers is concerned, is far more comprehensive and specific than the usual speaking-stage manuscript, the Lubin Company has formally banished the derogatory term "scenario," the proper definition of which is merely "a brief dramatic outline," and established in its stead the expressive and now generally accepted word "photoplay."

Henceforth Mr. Lawrence S. McCloskey is "Editor of Photoplays" and the members of his department are "photoplaywrights" by designation and in fact.

LOCATIONS A GREAT ASSET

George DeCarlton who assisted Edgar Lewis in practically all his wonderfully successful productions of "Captain Swift," "The Thief," "Samson," "The Gilded Fool" and "The Plunderer," is said by Mr. Lewis to be one of the best men in the country on finding the proper locations for picture purposes and a great deal of credit must be given him for the remarkable scenes he has discovered and especially in regard to "The Plunderer," where the locations were such as to cause considerable favorable comment from the newspaper critics.

THE "MOVIE INN"

The "Movie Inn" restaurant and cafe at 17 North Wabash avenue, Chicago, had its formal opening on Wednesday, July 14. Its patrons say that this is a real place for a "reel" good time. Abe J. Balaban, well known in Chicago, is director of the new cafe.

CINEMATOGRAPHIC QUERIES

I come to you because it seems Confusion does obtain
On certain points, that will, perhaps,
Come under your domain.

Now if—for instance—all the film
Is finished up as planned,
Why is it though the picture's good
The film is always canned?

I spoke to a photographer
And made a straight appeal,
He couldn't tell—said he, "My brain
Is always in a reel."

And then I asked a printer
Thinking he might hit the mark,
Said he "Don't worry, for these things
Develop in the dark."

Another point—Directors say "I think I'll shoot from here."
(For many such disastrous things Occur when you're not near.)

And as result the light it killed
Exactly as you feared,
Now if it comes to court, will you
Just see the stage is cleared?

Or would you if the film were blamed
(For troubles never cease)
Just hand the other over and Secure the film's release?

These things have puzzled me—Why do
Photographers in haste
Get so upset at me and say
They'll cut me at the waist?

And when you're asked if you will raise
A salary or so,
Does your answer in the negative
Mean positively "no"?

METRO PROGRAM FOR CHICAGO'S BEAUTIFUL STUDEBAKER THEATER

After an exhaustive search and a thorough investigation of the possibilities of various producing companies and programs, Messrs. Jones, Linick and Schaeffer of Chicago, Ill., controlling a large chain of theaters throughout the West contracted this week with the Metro Pictures Corporation through the Chicago exchange for the entire Metro output for all their houses in the loop district.

The magnificent Studebaker Theater, the foremost house in the windy city playing motion pictures, will begin Metro Program with the production of "The Right of Way," July 19, and will play each release an entire week at admission prices ranging from fifteen to fifty cents.

"GET-RICH-QUICK WALLINGFORD" IN COMING PATHE SERIES

L. D. & T. W. Wharton, the Pathe producers, make an announcement of unusual interest. They will put into pictures for Pathe the "Get-Rich-Quick-Wallingford" stories of George Randolph Chester, which are now running in the Cosmopolitan Magazine, and have been a big feature in the success of that enterprising magazine. The creation of "Get-Rich-Quick-Wallingford" made the fame of Mr. Chester. The big promoter of shady financial schemes is so peculiarly American, his character is so well drawn and his adventures so startlingly original and humorous, that the serial should make wonderfully attractive pictures. The rights to produce them were obtained from William Randolph Hearst, himself.

The Whartons have engaged for their cast several of the best known players of the stage today. Max Figman will do "Black Daw," Frederi de Belleville will play "Wallingford," and Lolita Robertson will have the feminine lead.

MARIE TEMPEST WELL SUPPORTED IN "MRS. PLUM'S PUDDING"

Marie Tempest, supported by Lee Moran, Eddie Lyons, W. Graham Brown and Billie Rhodes, featured in the production of a four-reel comedy, "Mrs. Plum's Pudding," written and directed by Al. E. Christie, of Nestor comedy fame. Let some one with a wild, untamed imagination name a cast of characters which he thinks might excel, or even equal, the above. That the picture will be a success goes without saying, for Marie Tempest has made a success of everything in the way of comedy she has ever taken hold of. First it was the opera comique. Then it was spoken comedy. Now it is the comedy of the pantomime variety put over without words before the eye of the camera. Success has always dogged her footsteps and it is from past performances that we have to make prophecies.

DONALD BRAIN WITH LASKY

Noted as one of the leading romantic players on the American stage, Donald Brian has left New York to join the coterie of noted stars at Hollywood, California, and to appear before the cameras in the Jesse L. Lasky Feature Play Company's studio. Mr. Brian is one of the musical comedy stars of the Frohman office. He was the original Prince Donilo in "The Merry Widow." On the completion of the picturization of Harold MacGrath's novel, "The Voice in the Fog," he will return to New York to resume in the Knickerbocker theater his second season as the star with Miss Julia Sanderson and Joseph Cawthorne in "The Girl from Utah."

RELEASE CHANGED BY V. L. S. E.

The Selig Company announce through the V-L-S-E that they have withdrawn their forthcoming five-part feature "Whom the Gods Would Destroy," and have substituted Charles Hoyt's "A Black Sheep," featuring Otis Harlan, Grace Darmond and Rita Gould, for release October 18th. This action was taken to avoid any possible confusion that might result through the fact that the Lubin Company have released a three-part feature entitled "Whom the Gods Would Destroy."

KO-KO FILM COMPANY'S FIRST

The Ko-Ko Film Company of New York City has released its first production. The scenario was written by Paul Arlington and features Pincus Rainbow, a very promising young comedian. The name of the picture is "The Bogus Earl," and others in the cast besides Pincus Rainbow are George P. Murphy, James T. Duffy and Mercedes Lorenz. Joe Emerson and Marie Richmond, former leading woman with Sam Bernard.

Brevities of the Business

Sam Spedon, arrayed in all the splendor of Broadway's newest conception of what one should wear who travels beyond the Hudson river, blew into MOTOGRAPHY'S sanctum last week and was made the victim of inquisition. From him we learned that those of us who are familiar with the progress of the motion picture industry will readily see that the growth of the advertising end of the business has not advanced or kept pace with it. There are many reasons why it has not. Primarily, producers were so interested in getting into shape the many essentials which go to make up pictures and reach the highest art that they overlooked a great many factors. The varying tastes of the public and the critical demands of the motion picture admirers kept them so busy that they had little time to give full attention to all its branches. They did not give the attention to what is now one of the most important parts of the industry. Advertising was not taken seriously. The producers were not advertising men; did not have time to understand it. It was thought that if a youngster could write a little he would make good and he was called a publicity man. But all this is now a thing of the past.

Publicity men, so-called, were looked upon as necessary evils, and what little they could do was done in a perfunctory or desultory manner. During their spare time they were often obliged or called upon to do a great many things to hold their positions and make themselves useful. Naturally they lost their identity and at the same time their cunning. Almost any kind of a picture was acceptable in the beginning and it was not necessary to advertise. At that time advertising was not associated with motion pictures. Mr. Spedon called it popularizing and that word struck home. But necessarily when one does not exercise a function and becomes interested in a multiplicity of duties he lost his skill and became dormant. Today it is different. New manufacturers have come into the field with a well formulated advertising campaign. This was evident two years ago.

Advertising is comparatively new to the motion picture industry, but not to the commercial world. Men with money and brains are lying awake nights trying to put something over on their competitors. In the midst of all the progress and activities we must not forget that the publicity man has done his best to keep things going and with very little encouragement.

To get more directly at what we want to say, let us call attention to the Vitagraph Company of America. Six years ago and for four and one-half years every bit of publicity was done by one man and a stenographer, and it was not so "worse." if the privilege be allowed to throw a bouquet at the publicity man. When you enter this particular publicity department you will find a thoroughly organized and well equipped department where you can place your hands upon anything necessary to carry out your ideas and put them into effect. To repeat, up to a few years ago the publicity man was a regular pooh-bah and did not recognize his distinctive position or his own identity. He was confined within a cocoon of restriction and reincarnated, he now has a chance to burst forth a free agent to spread his wings and show his colors. The publicity man built up and systematized a department that others enjoy the fruits thereof.

Publicity is now looked upon as a part of the business. The press agent and even the newspaper man is considered a part of it; the ad-writer is a specialist and he too is taken into account. A real publicity man like S. M. Spedon is a power; he is an organizer and manager and can jump into any position in the department and fill up the gap and keep things going. He has confidence in himself and others. He has a broad and comprehensive grasp of the business as a whole and knows what he is doing. In the survival of the fittest he alone remains of all the pioneer advertising men in the business. He is still one of the boys, and never grows old. He always comes back with his ready retort, "You will never live to be as young a man as I."

COAST NEWS

BY "CAPTAIN" JACK POLAND

With the big exhibitors' convention making ready in San Francisco, which will be attended by many notables in the film life of the west, including manufacturers, directors, stars and newspaper men affiliated with the industry; the Grand Lodge convention of Elks, and several minor meetings of note, the people of the motion picture industry are very busy indeed.

At the Universal West Coast studios President Carl Laemmle and his official aides are preparing a number of special features of entertainment for the next two weeks. One day has been set aside as Elks' day. On this occasion delegates and their ladies will be pictured in Universal films with several representative companies. The following week the Universal will give a big barbecue lunch to the visiting exhibitors, Mr. Laemmle going personally to San Francisco to extend an invitation to the visitors to come to the new $1,000,000 film city.

W. N. Selig will have a big Elk day at the Selig Zoo, during which he will present a baby elk to the organization on condition that it be kept at the zoo free of cost until it reaches maturity. A special celebration is planned for the event. In the evening there will be dancing and the zoo will be resplendent in Elk colors and raiments.

Los Angeles will be turned over to the exhibitors, they will be wined and dined, feted and automobile ridden, and shown how the moving pictures are made to their hearts' content. They will meet personally many of the screen players they know so well on the leading programs and will get a better idea as the most profitable class of pictures for their own local use.

The exhibitors will have a novel stunt pulled off for them at Inceville. Thomas H. Ince has secured the keys to the nearby beach cities, Santa Monica and Ocean Park, two of the most notable and picturesque resorts of the coast, and he plans to give the theater men a night and day at Inceville and the beaches, and will head a special delegation who leave for San Francisco to attend the convention, and in the names of the mayors of the two cities invite the exhibitors to take over the cities for the occasion.

Mutual Film Corporation—The market was decidedly stronger during the past week and it would appear as if the pendulum had swung to its limit in one direction. Stock advanced sharply from 55 bid to 58, and offerings are very scarce even at 63.

Thanhouser Film Corporation—As the old bid price—on a capitalization of $400,000—was about $80.00 per share, or $320,000 for the entire capital stock, and no additional property value was added when the capitalization was increased to $1,000,000 and the par value of the shares reduced to $5.00—using the same value of the entire capital ($320,000) and as there are 200,000 shares, an equivalent of the old bid price would be exactly $1.60. In other words—if the actual value of the old capitalization represented at $80.00 per share equalled $320,000, since no new asset values have been added and the amount of issued capital stock has been multiplied by 2½, the present stockholders by selling at $1.60 per share would get as much as was bid for shares several months ago.

For the motion picture exhibitors Mr. Selig plans even more elaborate entertainment features, the program for which will be entirely new and original and of such a nature as to attract and interest the most exacting exhibitor.

David W. Griffith of the Griffith-Reliance-Majestic studios, Fred J. Balshofer of the Quality-Metro studios, Jesse L. Lasky of the Lasky organization, Los Angeles, and S. S. Hutchinson of the American Films, Santa Barbara, will participate in the big exhibitors' convention events at San Francisco and will be active factors in the Los Angeles entertainment features. Mr. Hutchinson plans to have a Santa Barbara day and invite the visitors to see the millionaire's city and the American studios.

The citizens and commercial bodies of Los Angeles are planning to entertain the exhibitors in royal style, special committees have been formed, all headed by motion picture men and representatives of the trade journals covering this field, representatives of chambers of commerce, railroads and others, and nothing will be overlooked that might add to the pleasure, enjoyment and information of the many exhibitors expected.

Such conventions and personal meetings between exhibitors, actors, producers and manufacturers are most valuable. They learn to know each other, feelings of confidence are established and better relations result. The men who make, produce and show the pictures really get together on more intimate footings.

Extensive preparations are being made at the Universal studios for the filmization of the big play "Business Is Business," by that notable director Otis Turner, who is to feature Nat C. Goodwin, the first time this famous comedian has ever appeared in motion pictures. But Nat C. is like many other former stars of the legitimate stage. With them money talks, and is only a question of time when the few remaining members of the so-called legitimate stage will be just as prominent as motion picture stars. Strange to relate the appearance of the big leaders, both men and women, on the screens in the smaller and larger theaters of the world, does not seem to depreciate their money producing value as actors and players. But seems to be having the effect of making them ever more notable and popular than before.

The new Hamilton Theater, located at 40th and Hamilton streets, opens July 11, with the Universal program. This theater is built with the operating-booth and heating plant in separate buildings. The booth is equipped with twin Simplex moving picture machines. The seating capacity is 600 seats. E. B. Winn is the builder and owner and will manage the theater with the greatest of care.

"Our Garden" is the new addition to Omaha's airdomes. It has a capacity of 200, although they have only placed 100 seats. It is located at 85th street and Farnam and extends through to Harney street. It is to be operated as a soft drink cafe, opening at 7:30 p. m. with a concert. Pictures start at 9:00 p. m., with Universal program. Senator Stoecker is manager and owner. The senator was the first man to show a motion picture for compensation in the state of Nebraska.

Another fight on the Kansas state censorship law by the film companies is expected to break before fall. The law was tied up in the courts for two years after its passage, until finally the United States supreme court held it constitutional as a police power of the state.

The next fight, it is understood, will be against the amount of the fee charged. The companies, as a rule, rather like to be able to have the "Approved by the state board" tacked onto their films. It generally is admitted that the two censors appointed by Superintendent W. D. Ross have been very reasonable.

The picture men are pointing out that the state is collecting about fifty dollars a day from the film companies, and spending considerably less than ten dollars a day for inspection.

The two inspectors draw three dollars a day each, inspecting from twenty to twenty-four films a day, at two dollars a reel—from $40 to $48 a day. Since the censorship was begun the state has collected $3,800 in fees from the inspection, and spent less than $800, a clear profit of $3,000. When the lid is clamped down tight, about August 1, the revenues will increase, while expenses will not grow noticeably. From the present outlook the state is going to clean up about $1,200 a month from the work of the inspectors.

CHICAGO GOSSIP

Now that Felix Feist has gone to New York, Mr. J. L. Friedman is holding down the desk. Mr. Friedman is a very capable exchange man, and he states that business is holding up during the hot weather in extremely fine shape.

I. Von Runkel, the genial manager of the V. L. S. E. Chicago office, was quite pleased last week over the number of country orders that were coming in—the week's mail having broken all office records. The exhibitors seem to be pretty equally divided regarding the merit of the "Juggernaut" and the "Slim Princess," these two films being the best bookers in the Chicago office. Mr. Von Runkel has a telegram from Price, the San Francisco V. L. S. E. office manager, asking him to notify exhibitors that the San Francisco office should be considered their headquarters while in the exposition city.

At the Peerless Film Exchange, Paul Bush was busily engaged in booking "Uncle Sam at Work" with both hands. Bush says that nothing in his long experience has ever equalled this film as a money getter. The film has had so much advertising and such a long run at the Auditorium in Chicago that the people are very well acquainted with it and do not hesitate in certifying to this at the box office with actual cash.

F. O. Nielson, who has made such a splendid success with "The Spoilers" and "Guarding Old Glory," has just purchased two more winners in New York city, one being the Bosworth production by Charles H. Van Loan entitled "Little Sunset," the other being the Frohman production by George Ade, entitled "Just Out of College." The Nielson forces are quite elated over the securing of these two splendid films, and Chicago exhibitors are looking forward to an advance showing in the very near future.

Aaron Gollos in a letter compliments Motography on the splendid results he received through his advertising of the Speedway races, Mr. Gollos stating that twenty-three copies of the film were sold on a state rights basis and over 100 bookings have already been shown or contracted for. The film is a splendid one and has an added interest now owing to the fact that one of the drivers in this picture, "Bill Carlson," was killed at the races at Omaha a few days later. Carlson is shown on both a close up and a racing view in this speedway picture.

Harry Weiss, of the Metro office in the Mallers Building, is capitalizing his tremendous popularity among the exhibitors and says that the Chicago office will soon be one of the leaders as regards gross bookings.

V. H. Hodupp, of the Pathe Exchange in the Mallers Building, is proving to be one of the most popular exchange men that has come to Chicago in recent years. Even angry exhibitors, who think they got the worst of a booking arrangement, go away pleased after a conversation with Mr. Hodupp, which speaks well for the remarkable magnetism of this young man. The shortage of Bray comedies is one of Mr. Hodupp's chief complaints, as these films book very well throughout the central states.

Harry Steck, who is personally looking after the bookings for his new theater, the Parkway, writes in to say that business is holding up very well. The Parkway is a very good hot-weather house anyhow, as its ventilation and cooling systems are of the best in the city.

It is rumored on the street that the backers of Chicago's Strand Theater are negotiating for a very much larger house to be run in conjunction with the Strand.

H. C. Hoagland, of the Selig forces, was so busy seeing that everybody got aboard the Selig train with all their wraps, bundles and baggage that he forgot his own. We suggest that Frank R. E. Woodward, the United publicity man, sends him one of those Chinese laundry checks which he issues as posters, as with a laundry check of this size Hoagland should be able to get enough shirts to supply the whole train.

J. A. Berst, vice-president of the Selig Company, left Friday for a trip to New York.

George K. Spoor left on Friday for the Pacific Coast to be gone a short while.

Victor Eubanks, Essanay publicity man, is looking them over on the Pacific Coast and will probably be back in a couple of weeks.

Ruth Stonehouse has traded in her roller skate and is purchasing an Imperial. (Automobile sales agents please note.) Joe Roach was so impressed with Resta's Peugeot machine that he has made arrangements to buy a Peugeot engine and will install it on an American chassis.

Ed Gaylor, the lithographing shark, is contemplating a trip to his farm in Montana the end of this month, and says that Indians have no terror for him after selling lithographs in the film business. Ring Lardner certainly called the turn when he said, "You lucky left handed stiff."

Aaron Gollos is closing the Jefferson at Fifty-fifth and Lake Park avenue and will rebuild this house to a seating capacity of 1,250, expending in the building over $40,000.

Harvey Bryant, of the Des Moines office of the Peerless Film Company, who signs himself E. H. on his correspondence, writes that he is going to Omaha next week? Why does anybody go to Omaha?

Charley Worthington, of the Fox Exchange, is conventioning in New York for a few days.

Joe Howard, the popular playwright, is concluding arrangements to film one of his popular successes, "The District Leader." George L. Cox will direct the picture. Mr. Howard also has a number of films especially adapted for children's shows.

NOTES FROM ALL OVER

Maud Allan, who is to be presented for the first time in moving pictures by Bosworth, Incorporated, in "The Rug Maker's Daughter," reigns jointly with her friend, Pavlowa, over all other dancers in the world. Her debut in Vienna in 1903 made her famous in a night, and was sponsored by such hierarchs as Johannes Brahms, Joseph Joachim, Eugene Ysaye and Marcel Remy. In "The Rug Maker's Daughter" Maud Allan presents three of her most beautiful dances.

Last Thursday the city of Las Vegas, N. M., held a grand reunion in honor of the arrival of Tom Mix, the Selig cowboy star, and his company of players. The Selig company came to Las Vegas from Los Angeles and will locate in the New Mexico metropolis.

Complete Record of Current Films

Believing the classification of film pictures by the nature of their subjects to be of greater importance to the exhibitor than classification by maker, MOTOGRAPHY has adopted this style in listing current films. Exhibitors are urged to make use of this convenient tabulation in making up their programs. Films will be listed as long in advance of their release dates as possible. Film manufacturers are requested to send us their bulletins as early as possible. Reasonable care is used, and the publishers cannot be responsible for errors.

Brief Stories of the Week's Film Releases

General Program

A Woman—(TWO REELS)—ESSANAY—Charlie Chaplin featured in this comedy wherein he takes a stroll in the park and meets the wife and daughter of a man, who has upon seeing a pretty girl passing followed her. Chaplin sees the man who has been blindfolded by the girl and instead of leading him back to his wife pushes him into the sea. He then introduces himself to the wife and daughter and is taken home with them. The husband arrives and is introduced to Chaplin, who in a fight loses part of his wearing apparel. He escapes upstairs and presently appears sans moustache, dressed in the daughter's clothing. The flirtatious husband tries to make up with Chaplin and finally upon discovering that Chaplin is not a woman, he consents to Chaplin's marriage with his daughter.

Hearst-Selig News Pictorial No. 55—SELIG—July 12.—Largest flag in the world unfurled on Broadway on July 4th; children of Evanston, Ill., celebrate sane 4th of July; "White Sox," famous California mare, wins pacing stake at Panama Pacific Exposition; old time fiddlers hold convention in Washington; Frank Holt who attempted life of J. P. Morgan taken before court for preliminary hearing; latest fashions by Lucile, Lady Duff Gordon; Zeppelins drop bombs on sections of London, England; showing effects of heavy guns of the Germans in Belgian village captured by force; Lieut. Warneford, who wrecked German Zeppelin in sky duel, and who was later killed, is honored by thousands in London when his body is brought home; Liberty Bell starts from Philadelphia on its long journey to San Francisco.

The Coming of the Kingdom—(Chapter Fifteen of the "Road O'Strife")—LUBIN—JULY 12.—Robert Dane confesses stealing the silver cup from the court records and is sentenced to penitentiary for six months because he has no funds with which to pay the fine. Alene, by selling a valuable gem, all that is left of her fortune, buys Dane's freedom. Because Alene loves Robert Dane she refuses the throne of Urania. For further review see page 159, this issue. F. E.

Midnight at Maxim's—(FOUR REELS)—KALEM—JULY 12.—Shye is not so wrapped up in his studies to fail to notice Tottie as she stoops to tie her shoe lace. He returns home and suggests to his friends that they make a trip to Maxim's that evening. The first part of the performance over, Shye endeavors to enter Tottie's dressing room, but he has to grease the palm of the man, who guards the door, before he can gain admittance, and Tottie promises to have supper with him. Shye's friends are also smitten with the little blonde lady, and all get Tottie's promise to have supper with them. The men hasten to the stage door and the sight of the others waiting for the same girl fills them with ire. A fight is about to take place, when out comes Tottie clinging to the arm of the individual whom all had to bribe before they could see her, and she introduces him to the love-stricken youths as her husband.

Hearst-Selig News Pictorial No. 56—SELIG—JULY 15.—Great cyclone sweeps through middle west doing heavy damage in several towns in Missouri; storm razes building bringing heavy toll of death in Cincinnati; six thousand foreigners march to Belle Isle Park where they are naturalized and salute the stars and stripes; latest fashions by Lucile, Lady Duff Gordon; New York newsboys arrive at summer camp, Woodland Beach, S. I.; girls entertain wounded heroes, East Moseley, England; thousands crowd before Quirinal where queen and heir apparent appear on balcony, Rome, Italy; wounded soldiers seek refuge in Nish, Serbia.

The Chadford Diamonds—BIOGRAPH—JULY 19.—Walter Kenyon has purchased abroad the famous Chadford diamond necklace, and with his daughter, is staying at the Hotel Palms. Dick Willard, a society crook, and Helen, his wife, read the announcement of the purchase and determine to secure the necklace. Helen becomes acquainted with Kenyon and he invites her to spend a week at their home. She communicates with Dick and admits him to the home late at night and the two make their escape after burglarizing the safe where the diamonds are kept. Kenyon discovers the loss of the jewels but just at this time his daughter, and her sweetheart, his secretary, enter and astonish him by producing the jewels from a hiding place. They had suspected Helen and had removed the diamonds from the case.

A Bag of Gold—ESSANAY—July 19.—Featuring Beverly Bayne and Sydney Ainsworth. John Elliot steals 200 lbs. sterling from a bank and perfects his invention. He becomes very rich, but the crime preys on him. The cashier, who has served a lengthy term, goes to work in Elliott's engineering department and believing the cashier to be a labor agitator Elliot determines to crush him and pays his note for 200 lbs. sterling. Elliot's son loves the cashier's daughter. Elliot learns the cashier is the man his theft sent to jail and he offers assistance to the cashier.

The Crooked Path—(THREE REELS)—KALEM—JULY 19.—Lynn hides his love for Mary, because he deems it his duty to support his mother and she, piqued marries Alan. Both boys work in the village bank and Alan steals a large sum of money and falsifies Lynn's book so as to make it appear that the latter committed the crime. He is arrested and sent to prison for two years. Dade, an ex-convict, comes into town and Alan sees an opportunity to abscond with a large sum of money. Dade sees him place the money in a traveling bag and determines to secure it. As Alan is leaving his home Dade blocks his path and while the two are struggling Mary summons Lynn, who has been released, and upon their arrival upon the scene they discover Dade and Alan dead.

The Discontented Man—LUBIN—July 19.—Rodney Blake, a young author, believing that his sweetheart, Miriam, is faithless, leaves for the openness of God's country. Arrived here he discovers that he cannot write stories and lacks the "elusive something." The next day he secures work in a mine and while going to the assistance of one of the miners steps on some matches and there is an explosion. Rodney and Jim, a miner, are brought up and it is discovered that Jim, whose strength, his greatest asset, gone, will be a cripple, while Pete escapes uninjured. A girl of the mountains spurns Jim and now turns to Pete. Rodney sees this and uses it for an inspiration. He writes one of his greatest works and then he is made supremely happy by the coming of Miriam, who read of the accident and experienced remorse for her actions.

The Shadow and the Shade — (TWO REELS)—SELIG—July 19.—Robert Foster goes to see Hillman, whose wife he had once been in love with, and tries to compromise with him on a business deal. Hillman refuses to compromise and soon Foster decides he will plead with the man's wife. He causes a note to be written by Mrs. Hillman signing her husband's physician's name asking her to consult with her privately. Hillman's man servant conspiring with Foster manages to raise the curtain in Hillman's room, and the man gazes upon what he thinks is his wife in the arms of Foster and falls to the floor unconscious. Later it is discovered that Foster had a profile of Anne Hillman fastened to the window shade and a light placed behind it, which made it appear as if Anne were in Foster's room.

The Highwayman — VITAGRAPH—JULY 19.—Farmer Hawkins prefers John, a big husky farmhand, to Billy, who is little, for a son-in-law. Lucy, the farmer's daughter, and Billy plan to elope, but they are overheard by Lucy's father, who locks her in her room, but Billy helps her escape and they make their getaway on two draught horses. They are held up by a tramp, but Billy succeeds in overpowering him and binds him to a tree. Billy disguised, holds up Pa and John and forces John to tie Pa to a tree and then Billy ties John alongside him. Lucy and Billy then proceed to town and are married. On their way home they discover Pa and John, who are nearly exhausted, and Billy remarks "John's a big husky fellow, why didn't he break the ruffian's neck?" and starts out to get the scoundrel himself.

A Daughter of Earth—(Two Reels)—Biograph—July 20.—Grown to womanhood, she has never known any other life than that of the farm. She is loved by the country doctor and consents to become his wife. A city broker comes to the town and hearing her sing tells her that she will gain fame if she will go before the public. She leaves her home and the broker finds apartments for her and arranges her debut. Her father dies of grief and upon her arrival home she is received coldly by her brother and lover. She returns to the city and learns the real purpose of the broker, who pretends to be her friend. She returns to the farm and implores her brother and lover to forgive her, but they find it hard to believe that she is really penitent. Her lover is the first to be won over, and he pleads with her brother and induces him to forgive her.

Jabez's Conquest—Essanay—July 20. —Featuring Nell Craig and Sheldon Lewis. Jabez Slocum, an American farmer, with his half million fortune, starts for Europe. Braga, an international crook, and his assistant, Dominica, hearing of this, scheme to get the half-million and nearly succeed until a third accomplice foils their plot by privately trying to take a hand in the affair. Slocum has delivered a draft for $30,000 to Dominica and while returning to town he is attacked by the accomplice. Slocum becomes suspicious and goes to the girl's apartment, where she returns the draft.

The Spook Raisers—Kalem—July 20. —Chased by Patrolman Doolittle Ham and Bud take refuge in the home of Madame de Shivers, a spiritualist, where Mrs. Doolittle, a seance fan, is present. They discover the nature of the fake and how easily Madame De Shivers gathers in the cash and resolve to get into the game. Patrolman Doolittle finds a note left by his wife to the effect that she is going to attend Professor Ham's ghost emporium. He departs to bring his wife home and unable to gain entrance via the front door tries the kitchen door. He gets into the room where Ham and Bud keep their spiritualistic paraphernalia and realizing the manner in which his wife is duped breaks up the seance.

A Barnyard Mix-Up—Lubin—July 20. —A cartoon comedy. Rastus is discovered stealing chickens, and is chased by the farmer. He has several encounters, but his peculiarly elastic legs and a strangely bullet-proof body save him. The farmer's shots roll off his back, but finally an axe lays him low. He is buried, but resurrected by an explosion of dynamite. On the same reel:

A New Way to Win—Lubin—July 20. —John Black decides that mother-in-law is running things and so she is sent to visit friends. After having badly cooked food and no dishes washed on account of mother being absent, John finally goes for her and she returns and John, his wife and mother-in-law decide to start life anew.

The Foreman of the Bar Z Ranch—Selig—July 20.—Tom Wallace lives with his uncle John Higgins. Tom is in love with Fern Watkins, the daughter of Higgins' life-long enemy. Higgins threatens to disinherit Tom and one day Miguel Garcia wanting some money robs Higgins and shoots and kills him and escapes. Some cowboys find the dead man's body and Tom is accused of the murder, but the party come upon the dead body of Miguel, who had fallen off a cliff and find the money he had stolen from Higgins. Fern pleads her love for Tom and her father relents.

The Lorelei Madonna—(Three Reels) — Vitagraph — July 20.— Malcolm, brought in a convent, has one great ambition and that is to paint a Madonna worthy to be placed in the Mission Chapel. Morrison, his uncle, introduces him into the life of the world and in Tahiti they visit Vesey's Palace, a notorious dive, where Alma, or better known as "The Lorelei," a beautiful girl, is the premiere danseuse. Malcolm becomes fascinated with the dancer, and when she poses as the Madonna to add variety to the entertainment, this impersonation sets his artistic soul ablaze. She learns to love Malcolm and he, knowing nothing of her mode of life, learns to love her also, but when he finds her dancing for La Farge's edification he turns against her. But she has been the necessary inspiration of his painting and he is led to believe that the woman's reformation is complete and that she really loves him. He is about to take her in his arms when La Farge shoots at Malcolm, but instead he kills Alma. Later Malcolm returns to the little Mission Town and finds happiness with Alice, the companion of convent days, as his wife.

She determines to keep this a secret from her husband and while abroad she meets one Jacques Lanoi, who tells her to adopt a child and that he will arrange all formalities and the husband will never know the truth. The scheme works and two years later Lanoi, who is in need of financial assistance goes to Hazel and tells her that the price of silence will be that she make him an entry into her social set. She then determines to confess all to her husband. Foster appreciating his wife's mental strain forgives her.

All on Account of Towser—Vitagraph—July 22.—Towser was trained to collect coal for his owner by running out and barking at the passing trains as they went by the house, whereat a shower of coal from the train crew followed. But one day Towser went too near the big engine and was killed. Scranton, his owner, nearly takes the life of the trainmen, but Phelps, the young engineer, handles him roughly and Bessie and Gladys, the old man's nieces, accuse him of being a ruffian. Phelps falls in love with Bessie and attends a dance in the next town in the hopes of meeting her. She cuts him cold, however, and later when Gladys and her beau elope with Bessie as chaperone and they are found by Phelps, he succeeds in persuading Bessie to follow her sister's example and there is a double wedding. Uncle is furious on hearing the news, but is at once reconciled when they present him with a dog as near like Towser as possible.

Man's Genesis—Biograph re-issue—July 23.—A short prologue shows two children settling a quarrel by resort to force. Their grandfather stops them and tells how when the world was young brute force gave place to brains after the first weapons were invented. Weakhands was not a popular suitor, because the stronger men could rob him of his bride. Lilywhite was forced after her mother's death to go out from the ancestral cave to where danger lurked on every side. She met Weakhands and won by his gentleness threw in her lot with him, but Bruteforce, the terror of the tribe, drove Weakhands away and took Lilywhite to his lair. By accident Weakhands inserted the end of a stick in the hollow of a stone, and hit himself on the head. An idea was born. Sallying forth, he gave Bruteforce battle, vanquished him, drove off other strong men of the tribe and resumed possession of Lilywhite.

On Dangerous Paths—(Four Reels)—Edison—July 23.—Eleanor Thurston persuades her father, a minister, to allow her to go to the city and earn her own living. sweetheart, persuades her to go to the lawyers. Mother Grey's nephew, and his wife, arrive and plan to do her out of her fortune. They try to have her adjudged insane, but Madge and Dan prevent them. Mother Gray gains control of her inheritage and continues to treat children kindly.

The Man Who Went Out — (Two Reels) — Domino — July 22. — Captain Graham, a heavy drinker, disobeys orders to leave the fort due to a threatened Indian attack and sneaks away to the settlement saloon. His brother, the Colonel, finds him and gives him the choice of court martial or leaving. The captain disappears and when his son, who has been given an appointment by the Colonel, arrives at the fort, is told that his father died in a battle with the Indians. On the night of Lieutenant James' wedding, his father who has returned, is secreted in a closet where he can watch the ceremony. The Indians attack and besiege the fort and promise to depart if one of the officers is surrendered to them. Lots are drawn, and young James is the victim, but his father pleads and is allowed to take his place. The siege is then given up.

P. Henry Jenkins and Mars—Falstaff—July 23.—P. Henry Jenkins up to the time he wears the Helmet of Mars is submissive. He is a middle-aged clerk and is scolded by his wife, reviled by his employer, and jeered at by his fellow clerks. He has frightful dreams and never has any comfort at all. One day while in a restaurant, his hat is substituted for the Helmet of Mars. The headgear is that of a present-day hat, but it changes Jenkins' disposition. He wears it for one day only and then turns the tables. He asserts his rights, commands respect, smokes when he likes and is not afraid of his wife.

A Message Through Flames—Thanhouser—July 25. — Featuring Mignon Anderson. A little blind girl wanders from the asylum, gathers flowers and becomes lost. A kind old countrywoman finds her, brings her back and touched by her plight, adopts her. Her son, a station-agent and telegrapher, teaches her the telegraph code. Later, he stands on a chair to place the oil lamp in its socket. The chair breaks, his head strikes a table and the lamp sets fire to the station. The blind girl arrives with his supper, drags the unconscious form to safety, hears the telegraph key clicking and learns that two trains are in danger of colliding. She unlocks the switch, the freight train glides into the siding and the fast express rushes past. The railroad officials hear of her brave deed and give her a position in their city office.

Her Fairy Prince—Reliance—July 26.—An escaped convict is discovered by Violet in her attic playroom. He tells her that he has been changed to a striped zebra by some wicked dwarfs, and Violet believing the fairy tale, gives him some of her father's clothes. That night Attorney Vane discusses a case with the judge, and the loud talking arouses Violet. Just as she enters the library, Vane places a revolver at her head, and threatens to shoot unless the judge agrees with his verdict. Violet is snatched away from him, he is grabbed by the collar and ejected from the house. Jim, the convict, who had been unjustly accused by Vane, then talks matters over with the judge and Violet.

Outcasts of Society—(Two Reels)—Thanhouser—July 27.—Featuring Mignon Anderson. A girl is arrested for shoplifting and sentenced to the county penitentiary. Her cell-mate, a woman of middle age, tells with pride about her daughter being reared in luxury and not knowing how her mother earned her livelihood. Later, a new convict arrives and turns out to be her daughter. The girl having finished her sentence leaves, and the daughter confesses to her mother that she and not the other girl was the thief. The innocent girl, unable to get a position, degenerates and is later seen by the girl and her mother, emerging from a saloon. At first, she is not inclined to forgive, but the pleadings of the mother win her over, and the three determine to fight their way back to society.

Getting the Gardener's Goat—Falstaff—July 30.—The old gardener likens love to a flower garden, and watches with interest his young mistress' suitors. He classifies the youthful financier as a weed, because of his meanness to children and the trampling upon flowers, while the lawyer is regarded as a choice blossom. He decides to dispose of "the weed," and give the "choice blossom" a chance. "The weed," while in the company of the young lady, meets with mishap after mishap, and shows himself in the worst possible light. He is given up by the young lady, and she becomes the wife of the "blossom." The gardener had helped the "blossom" and disposed of the "weed."

Sachio drops the coin in his excitement and Blake freeing himself from Roleau, quickly seizes it. He escapes, followed by Kitty, who has whispered to Roleau, and returns to his underground den. Kitty goes to the outlaws' cave, and is made a prisoner due to the leader's absence. The leader arrives, and consents to escort Kitty across the desert. She locates Blake's hiding place and with the outlaw leader, enter and wait for the Apaches to go out. A secret passageway enables them to get in and overpower Blake and the remaining Apache. Roleau escapes from Sachio, takes his automobile, and rides away not seeing Frederick on back. He arrives at the den and enters one side of the cave, while Frederick sneaks in the back way. Kitty secures the coin and is making her escape, but encounters Frederick, who prevents her from calling the outlaw leader. He carries her through the passage. The Apaches return and find Roleau. They fight, while Frederick is about to lift Kitty up through the sewer entrance. Frederick seeing Apaches on this end, starts the other way with Kitty, but is met by the Apaches who had attacked Roleau. With no way of escape, he looks at Kitty and smiles as the picture fades.

There's Many a Slip—NESTOR—July 19. —Featuring Billie Rhodes. Three boys call on a girl for the purpose of popping the question. Being unable to decide, she asks them to return the next day for the answer. They leave and stop on the way at a cigar store, but one of them sneaks back. The other two catch up to him at the door and drag him away. Ben arrives at the scene of activities earlier than the rest, and on seeing a man tacking a large quarantine sign nearby, an inspiration comes to him. Later, the other two boys arrive and when they see the sign on the girl's house, depart in haste, while Ben is inside pleading his cause. No end of trouble is caused between the health board guards and the doctor. Ben and the girl are caught by the guards, and Ben, for his little joke, is jailed, while the girl decides that she didn't want to marry after all.

Homage—(TWO REELS)—GOLD SEAL—July 20.—O'Day's wife dies on the day he is taken to prison to serve a term of twenty years. He appoints Peck as guardian to his son and tells him to bring him up using the money that he has set aside. On the day of his release, Peck hands him an envelope containing money and he walks off with Quinn, who has also finished his term. Hearing of Quinn's wife and child being in poor circumstances, and knowing that the crook will have a hard time to keep straight, he shares his money with him. O'Day locates the home of his son Erwin, and through his wife secures a position as gardener. She confides in the old man and tells of Erwin's cruelty. Quinn, ejected by his landlord for not paying his rent, follows Erwin to his home and is about to kill him, when the gardener interferes. O'Day tells Erwin who he is and sends him to his wife. This is the turning point in Erwin's life and he lives as his father intended him to.

A young man is constantly finding fault although his wife tries her best to please him. One day she sees a woman taming her husband by throwing frying pans at his head and decides to follow suit. Hubby arrives home, calls for his slippers and his wife refuses to get them. She follows this up by throwing things at him. He finds a letter from his wife's friend suggesting a remedy, and changes his tactics. He weeps and his wife forgives him, but when he shows her the letter, she upbraids him in earnest. The scene that follows, brings him to his senses and he changes for the better.

The Curse of a Name—L-Ko—July 21. —Mr. Rawsberry, a nervy janitor, steals from his boss, and stops at the finest hotel in town. In order to make a hit with a pretty girl, he has himsef paged about the lobby and corridors. His boss stops at the same hotel to rest up and, when he hears Rawsberry being called for, loses no time in looking him up. Rawsberry notices the impending danger, and attempts to stop the paging, but the boy calls louder than ever. He tries to drown out the noise with a fire hose, but the boy secures another and aided by an irritable gentleman with a pistol, starts a general mix-up.

The Weird Nemesis—(Two Reels)—Victor—July 21.—Dolores Alvarado, after being led astray and deserted by Page Ulrich, a gentleman of leisure, hides her shame in the sea. Her sister Inez is studying hypnotism and determines to use Page as a subject. The only means of identification, is a small kodak picture, but she later meets and recognizes Page. She lures him on and finally leads him to the altar. As he attempts to embrace her, she gains hypnotic control and appears as her dead sister. This is repeated, he becomes frantic and tries to strangle her, but she changes to Dolores and he flees from the house. Later, he recovers from his fear and finds a new victim. Inez hears of it and saves the innocent girl by causing the death of Page. She then keeps her promise and returns to Bob to whom she was engaged.

The Burden Bearer—Big U—July 22.—Elinor Chalmers, head saleslady in a department store and Harry Edmonds, an architect, marry, but keep it secret. Later, Allison, a wealthy business man, visits Edmonds and orders him to prepare plans for a large house. Edmonds is brought into contact with Alice Allison and forgets Elinor. Elinor calls at his office and tells him that their baby will soon arrive. Elinor passes out as Alice enters and hears Harry tell her that she is the one he loves and that Elinor is only a friend. After the birth of the child, Elinor though shunned by the girls in the store, continues to work and the floor walker shows marked attention. Harry is injured and taken to the hospital. He sends for Elinor and begs forgiveness, which she grants and is then told that she no longer cares for him. Later, the floor walker, whom she loves, shares her troubles.

Thou Shalt Not Lie—(Two Reels)—Imp—July 22.—Featuring William Garwood and Violet Merserau. In order to pay a gambling debt, Fred Harnett steals from the bank and alters his books to cover the shortage. He wins heavily at roulette and plans to make restitution for what he has stolen. When he arrives at the bank the next morning, he sees a bank examiner at his desk and leaves the town in a hurry. Ten years have passed, and he, under the name of Harrington, becomes a prosperous farmer and with his wife have taught their son to always tell the truth. He reimburses the bank for the theft. Later, his wife rescues a man from drowning and takes him to their home. He is a detective and the little boy tells of his father's hiding place. The detective leaves them in peace.

At the Signal of the Three Socks—Powers—Episode No. 5—July 22.—Featuring Max Asher as Detective Duck and Gale Henry as Lady Baffles. The postman delivers a package to Mr. and Mrs. Higgins and is seen by Lady Baffles. Later, Mr. Higgins accidentally tears the letter that accompanied said package. This part is found by the butler and turned over to Lady Baffles. She plans to get the jewels and money and captures the maid. The maid with a sheet over her head frightens and chases Mr. and Mrs. Higgins out of the house. Detective Duck meets them and questions the maid. They return to the house and the detective disguising himself as the butler, reveals the contents of the mysterious package. It turns out to be a pie recipe book. Lady Baffles makes her escape.

Behind the Scenes—(Two Reels)—Nestor—July 23.—Featuring Eddie Lyons, Victoria Forde and Lee Moran. This release shows the making of a Nestor comedy from beginning to end. The company arrives in Universal City, the director gets a story from the Scenario Department, and then consults the General Manager regarding the story. The members of his company are rounded up, and "Getting a Square Meal" is enacted. There is plenty of comedy in which Eddie and Victoria succeed in appeasing their hunger. The finished picture is then turned over to the various departments before its final release.

Jeanne o' the Woods—Victor—July 23. —Featuring Mary Fuller. Hugh Travers is on his way to spend several months in the woods at Fournir's cabin. The Canadian police are trailing diamond smugglers, and Fournir is their guide. Jeanne, his daughter, meets Hugh and they canoe down the lake. While strolling through the woods, Hugh is captured by the smugglers, while Jeanne makes her escape. The smugglers have already captured Jeanne's dog and hidden the diamonds in his collar. That night Jeanne releases Hugh, they make their escape, and the dog follows. Jeanne finding the diamonds, transfers them to her pocket. Hugh sprains his ankle, and the couple take refuge in a deserted cabin. The dog is sent out with a note calling for help. Meanwhile the smugglers trace and find the whereabouts of Hugh. Fournir and the mounted police arrive in time to save Jeanne and Hugh. The smugglers are captured and the diamonds recovered.

The Mad Maid of the Forest—(Two Reels) — Bison — July 24. — Featuring Gene Gauntier. She is known as "The Mad Maid of the Forest," lives the life of a hermit, and flees at the approach of strangers. Lacey, a noted physician, and his friend Graves make an attempt to see her, but are unsuccessful. Later, the girl is mistaken for game and shot by Lacey. He finds her wounded and after nursing her out of danger, removes her from her cabin to the village, where she is taken care of by a widow. Lacey determines to take her to the city and to operate on her for the purpose of restoring her reason. The girl slips away and returns to her cabin. Lacey and his friend sneak in, overpower her, and take her to the city. The operation is successful and the girl tells Lacey of her past. She marries him, and later his brother Frank, wife and child visit them. Frank is the man she had wounded and his wife is her sister Dorothy.

A Duel at Dawn—Joker—July 24.—Featuring Max Asher. Shultz does not follow the doctor's prescription. Instead of taking the tonic in teaspoonful doses, he swallows the contents of the bottle and becomes lively. The French consul challenges him to a duel for flirting with his wife, and later the Russian consul also challenges him at dawn. Shultz considers it a joke, but dreams that he gets the worst of the duelling. When he awakes and sees the cards before him, he calls on the doctor for advice. The next morning, the doctor hides himself under the dirt and leaves and, when Shultz's adversaries thrust at him, presses the button and the electrical current connected to the device on which the foreigners stand, does the rest.

The Honor of Kenneth McGrath—POWERS—July 24.—Howard McGrath, an unscrupulous Wall street broker and guardian of Doris Van Ness, tries to corner the stock market, but loses. He suggests that Kenneth, his nephew and chief clerk, marry Doris so that her money will help him out of his difficulties. Kenneth refuses and his uncle writes a letter to Mrs. Van Ness urging her to induce Doris to speculate. Kenneth's name is forged to this letter, but Doris, ignorant of this, signs a check for a large amount. Doris loses all and accuses Kenneth of treachery. His uncle also accuses him and he is forced to leave his employ. Kenneth becomes a newspaper reporter and finally compels his uncle to give up his crooked dealings. Zeller, a baron who is favored by Doris' mother, hears from McGrath that she is no longer an heiress and returns to his country. Doris marries Kenneth.

Bound on the Wheel—(THREE REELS)—REX—July 25.—The Gertz's and their daughter live happily together in the tenement room below that of the Coulahan's and their son Tom. The Coulahan's are continually fighting and quarrelling, but Tom loves Cora and asks her to marry him and live with his parents. Cora's parents have told of Tom's father being a drunkard and stopping work at forty. Although Cora declined to marry Tom and live with his parents, she changes her mind. After the marriage, her parents return to Germany and Tom's father, shortly after, dies of drink. Tom follows in his father's footsteps and stops working. Later, his mother dies and Cora has to work hard to keep the wolf from the door. A friend from Germany locates her, and Tom, who has seen his money, compels Cora to go after it. During her absence, Tom being thirsty, drinks a glass of water. Cora returns and finds that he has swallowed the medicine she had intended to take. Later she marries the friend from Germany.

Vitagraph Special

The Goddess—(Two Reels)—Vitagraph—Chapter Nine.—Celestia, accompanied by Freddy, arrives at Mary Blackstone's home. Mary, believing that all the men are attracted to the Goddess by her novel costume, arranges for a fancy-dress ball to take place the following evening. At the reception Mary exchanges costumes with Celestia, but in the modern evening gown Celestia is still the center of attraction. Tommy and Gunsdorf visit the meeting held by the strikers. In his speech to the miners, Tommy induces them not to attack the works. Mrs. Gunsdorf is in love with the millionaire's son. Simon Kehr's plans are frustrated when the miners fail to attack the works, and he wires Gordon Barclay to call his son home. For further review see page 163, this issue.

The Goddess—(Two Reels)—Vitagraph—Chapter Ten.—Upon receiving Kehr's telegram, Gordon Barclay immediately wires his son to come home. Stilleter informs the millionaire of his intention to marry Celestia. Barclay warns the psychologist that this is impossible. Celestia under the hypnotic influence of Stilleter, accompanies him to the mines. Freddy learns their destination and boards a freight-train bound for the coal regions. Mrs. Gunsdorf expresses her love for Tommy. After this he decides to leave the Gunsdorf home, and he struggles with her to secure the key to the door she has locked. Gunsdorf arrives and his wife accuses Tommy of attacking her. Believing Mrs. Gunsdorf, the strikers are infuriated and threaten to hang the millionaire's son. Celestia and Stilleter are attracted by the crowd. Mrs. Gunsdorf breaks down under the steady gaze of Celestia and confesses that she lied about Tommy. He is freed by the miners. Freddy leaves the freight-train at Bitumen. For further review, see page 163, this issue.

The League's Fifth Annual Convention

AND OTHER IMPORTANT NEWS OF THE WEEK

AT exactly 10:40 a. m. on Tuesday, July 13, M. E. Cory, chairman of the convention committee, called the fifth annual convention of the Motion Picture Exhibitors' League of America to order at the Civic Auditorium in San Francisco, the city's new million dollar convention hall. There were several hundred delegates, manufacturers' representatives, publicity men and supply dealers in attendance, many of whom had crossed the continent in order to be present at the opening session. On the platform sat National President Marion S. Pearce of Baltimore, Md.; M. E. Cory of San Francisco, second vice-president and chairman of the convention committee; Peter J. Jeup of Detroit, Mich., treasurer; Fred Herrington of Pittsburgh; Judge A. P. Tugwell of Los Angeles; H. L. Beach of Berkeley, Calif., president of the California State League, and Mayor James Rolph, Jr., of San Francisco.

After a few introductory remarks Mr. Cory introduced Mayor Rolph, who he said had consented to welcome the visitors to San Francisco. Mayor Rolph, who had neglected an appointment at the Exposition to attend the opening session of the convention, declared that he had not "consented" to be present but considered it a pleasure to face the picture men of the country, since of late he had himself spent half of his waking hours before the picture camera. He spoke briefly of San Francisco's rise to its present condition following the earthquake, described the building in which the convention was being held which is the beginning of San Francisco's new civic center, and then declared he had no key of the city to present to the assembly, as the key had been thrown away upon the opening of the Exposition.

Following the mayor's address Mr. Cory declared that Mayor Rolph had neglected to state that nine-tenths of San Francisco's rise following the earthquake and fire was due to the mayor himself. After thanking him on behalf of the M. P. E. L. of A., Mr. Cory introduced "the Moses of the industry," National President Marion S. Pearce, who spoke as follows:

Upon my election about a year ago, at Dayton, Ohio, the information was vouchsafed the convention that my business interests would not permit constant traveling, and upon taking up the work a letter of encouragement was immediately sent to all state officers and information requested. The number of replies was very encouraging and showed the need of strong state and national organizations.

In order to strengthen the state and national organizations, the question of amalgamation was taken up with the states of Wisconsin, Illinois, California, New York, Pennsylvania, and Ohio, and it is more than a pleasure to be able to state that the first state in which amalgamation was effected was California. The remarkable co-operation of both sides not only made it possible, but materially aided in amalgamation in all these states, with the exception of Wisconsin and Illinois. This was emphasized by the splendid work done by the League in securing a graduated scale as a substitute for the flat rate war tax. This concession was the more remarkable because it was obtained by the League after the Finance Committee of the Senate had decided to grant no hearings on any portion of the bill.

Too much praise cannot be given to the various trade papers for the loyal support given our organization. The success of the program, "Exhibitors must organize," was secured largely through the many columns of space so unselfishly given by them.

If not at first it must now be apparent to all that the work of this administration is largely to lay the foundation upon which the future organization is to be built. Amalgamation with harmony was most necessary, and I trust the large success obtained along this line will enable this convention to so plan a boom for our organization which we have so much desired and that it will be a permanent one. The success of any organization, more especially this one of ours, depends largely on its personnel, and it is indeed gratifying in visiting the various state officers to find them not only men of ability and integrity, but leaders in their respective communities.

In closing, let me make a suggestion which is based on my experience as your president, and while it may not seem as necessary to some as it does to me, I am sure it would be suggested by any one of you if you had the opportunity to make the observation that I have had. As soon as our convention will permit I would recommend the election of a secretary who shall be paid sufficient salary to enable him to devote his entire time to the work of the League, not only as secretary, but also as an organizer; also that his headquarters be in New York City. To make it impossible for him to use this position as a means of personal gain, I also recommend such an amendment to our by-laws as will provide for his election by the Executive Board, and his work to be under the supervision of the League president. I do not feel that I could ask the favorable consideration of this suggestion without stating to the Convention that I am under no circumstances a candidate for re-election, and I take this opportunity to thank you all for your loyal support and hearty co-operation.

Mr. Cory, to whom much of the success of the fifth annual convention is undoubtedly due, next wittily introduced the national treasurer, Peter J. Jeup of Detroit. Mr. Jeup in responding declared he had no canned speech to deliver, and paid a high tribute to San Francisco as a convention city, placing it only second to Detroit.

Fred Herrington of Pittsburgh was next introduced by Mr. Cory, and after explaining that exhibitors like the stars of the screen should be seen and not heard, gave the platform to Judge Tugwell of Los Angeles, of the executive committee.

Judge Tugwell began by referring to Los Angeles, his home town. He declared he had listened to the praises of Detroit, heard nothing about Pittsburgh, very little about Baltimore, something of San Francisco, but that the convention visitors must see Los Angeles before deciding that any of the above cities were superior to any of the others.

H. L. Beach of Berkeley, Calif., president of the California E. L. of A., was next introduced by Chairman Cory and stated that the picture industry was not a local proposition but one of national interest, and consequently reached from New York to San Francisco, from the Dominion to the Gulf of Mexico. In his opinion the greatest handicap with which the League had to deal was the constant changing of the ownership of the theaters. He hoped that this convention might hit upon a means of better handling this obstacle to a firm and compact organization.

J. W. Binder, of the National Board of Censorship, who was in the hall, was next called upon for an address and explained that the National Board did not act so much as a censor as it did as a body for benevolent criticism of the films. He spoke of the great improvement in the nature of present day subjects and predicted that the time would soon come when criticism of any kind would no longer be necessary. He emphatically declared that legalized censorship was totally unjustified.

Mr. Cory then rose to explain the events of the coming week, going through the entire program, item by item, and explaining each event in detail. He also read a number of telegrams from notables who were unable to attend, and then upon motion made and carried the convention was adjourned for the morning, the assemblage going to the exhibition hall upon the third floor of the Civic Auditorium where the various displays were inspected. A short time later all the press and publicity men present were invited to attend a luncheon at the Portola, and some thirty or more accepted the invitation.

EXPOSITION DISPLAYS.

On the third floor of the Civic Auditorium was the large section devoted to the displays of various film companies and other displays. At the west end of the building as one entered were two theaters for exhibition of advance releases.

Going to the left one encountered first the display of Walter G. Preddy, dealer in motion picture supplies, 158 Eddy street, San Francisco, Cal., where the Feaster Film Feed machine was being demonstrated attached to a Powers and also a Simplex projecting machine.

Next in order came the Precision Machine Company with Simplex machines. It also had two machines in theaters. L. W. Atwater, F. A. Clark and F. B. Cannock in charge. Booth decorated in yellow.

Next came the Nicholas Power Company display, with R. W. Horn in charge. Decorated in purple and gold. Prize banners on display. Power's 6A projecting machines were shown. The first motion head ever shown by this company was on display, attracting considerable attention.

National Carbon Company, Cleveland, Ohio, showed carbons of all sizes; W. C. Kunzmann and H. J. Rothman, San Francisco representative, in charge. A spot light showing the brilliance of N. C. carbons, was displayed on screen. Nicely decorated booth.

Enterprise Optical Company, with Ed H. Kemp in charge of black velvet booth in which was displayed 1916 model Motiograph with new features.

Heywood Brothers & Wakefield Company, 737-43 Howard street, made a display of opera chairs and seats. Eight styles exhibited. C. E. Corby in charge.

The Los Angeles M. P. Company, manufacturer of "Angelus" cameras. New professional tripod demonstrated. Three models of camera. H. Paulis in charge.

George H. Breck, photoplay equipment, 70 Turk street, San Francisco. Lobby displays of all sorts. New Edison projector. F. L. Hammer in charge.

Charles R. Kiewert Company had display of Rio carbons. Gold and blue booth. R. E. Martinez in charge.

Also a Metcalf booth with Simplex Photo Products Company displaying "Alamo" camera, lobby frames, ticket choppers, etc.

G. A. Metcalf, motion picture machines, W. L. Stern, sales manager in charge, had a splendid display of Newman poster frames. Baird projectors (film capacity 3,000 feet) and Minusa Gold Fibre screens.

Beginning in the center at the west end were Paramount pictures in a double length booth, beautifully decorated with life size portraits of Lasky-Paramount stars and two books of Farrar's photos on exhibition valued at $1,000 each. Herman Webber, vice-president of Progressive M. P. Company, was in charge, Blackwell and Sweet there later in the week.

Across the way from Paramount booth was Metro with Mr. Reichenbach in charge. Eleven big portraits of Metro stars were shown. The booth was splendidly decorated and rest chairs for visitors were provided. Francis Bushman and Marguerite Snow were present and Thursday was Metro day at the Fair, with the following program: 2 p. m., reception of Bushman by Exposition officials; 2:30 p. m., presentation of plaque to Metro by Exposition; 3:00 p. m., enactment of scene in Court of Universe; 3:30 p. m., enactment of scene in "Silent Voice," with Bushman and Snow in Tower of Jewels; 4:00 p. m., informal tea at Old Faithful Inn on Zone; 4:30 p. m., reception of ladies by Bushman and choosing of California girl to act with him; 8:30 p. m., illuminated aeroplane flight by Art Smith spelling "Metro" in sky; 9:00 p. m., presentation of medal to Smith by Metro at St. Francis Hotel; 9:30 p. m., fireworks of Bushman and Snow; 10:00 p. m., informal dance in honor of Bushman and Snow at St. Francis Hotel.

Across the way from Metro booth was Pathe, with posters and lobby displays of Balboa, Wharton and Pathe productions. Small pennants were given away here. H. W. Oviet manager in charge assisted by H. L. Knappen, A. W. Korper, R. Rodrigues, and John K. Burger of New York. Red, white and blue decorations.

New York Motion Picture Company had next booth all framed in purple with a 22-color portrait of Tom Ince, 2x3 feet in size, illuminated. Below was a 14x17-inch illuminated facsimile Western Union telegram signed Kessel and Baumann and reading, "Exhibitors:—Keep Your Eye on Ince." Kenneth O'Hara in charge. Wednesday night was Bessie Barriscale night at the convention.

Next was the Keystone booth with huge portraits of Sennett, Mace, Normand and Sterling. Lanterns shaped like the Keystone trademark illuminated this booth. O'Hara also in charge of this display.

Universal adjoin with a booth containing portraits of stars and a large picture of Carl Laemmle. Buttons and souvenirs of "Scandal" and Universal stars presented. Purple and gold decorations. W. A. Cory, June Barnett and Mrs. W. A. Cory in charge. Warren Kerrigan, Bob Leonard and Miss Hall appeared later.

In the next row of booths were the following: S. I. G. films, in dark green with three big illuminated portraits of Sennett, Ince and Griffith.

Griffith booth decorated in white with sepia pictures of 45 Reliance, Majestic stars and big pictures of Griffith. Bennie Ziesman in charge.

World Film had the next booth with Joseph J. Deitch in charge. Big portraits of Warwick, Vivian Marten and Clara Kimball Young; also illuminated display frame of scenes from "The Dollar Mark" and a picture of Lewis J. Selznick.

Adjoining this booth was the Horsley-MinA display with posters, etc. Mr. Horn in charge.

The next row of booths commenced here and included that of the M. P. World with Blaisdell and Von Harleman in charge; the M. P. News with W. A. Johnston; the N. Y. Telegraph with a man in charge. Next was MOTOGRAPHY with copies, N. G. Caward in charge. Then the Western Union Telegraph office.

The Art Slide Company, 964 Market street, San Francisco, with Al Williams, president, in charge, assisted by P. Young and Mabel Young, occupied a booth at the east end of the building with a display of slides, motion and still. Also a display of Balopticon machines.

Next this was a double booth of American Photoplayers Sales Company, 130 Kearny street, San Francisco, with A. L. Abrams in charge. One big Fotoplayer in operation all day.

Tuesday afternoon a brief session of the convention was held at which the principal address was delivered by Walter Bloeser of the Chicago Tribune's advertising department. Mr. Bloeser spoke as follows:

Time does not permit me to say all the good things I would like to have you know—consequently I will try to confine my talk to a few words of cheer.

In this day of disturbed commercialism the question "Is business good?" is heard everywhere. As one exhibitor to another then, it reminds me of a short colloquy I had the pleasure of hearing over the shoulders of two exhibitors the other day. Jones queried of Smith, "Is business good?" And Smith replied curtly, "Even." Jones, somewhat befuddled with his answer inquired, "Just what d'ye mean, even?" And Smith retorted with a deal of surprise mixed with fury, "Why, old man, just this. Night before last I took in $400, and last night I lost $400."

So from this little anecdote, gentlemen, we can extract a nucleus for the exhibition business—a basis for its being, as it were. May we say that an exhibitor is a business man, strictly speaking? Or shall we say blatantly and intrepidly that the rules and standards of practice in every day business do not apply to the exhibition business? From what I have seen I would prefer the latter statement as the best and safest axiom for an exhibitor to follow.

The show business proper is a gamble, try hard as an exhibitor will to gird his game with business principles. He buys and sells like the ordinary merchant, I will admit, inasmuch as he pays out money for an article and then tries to vend it; but he cannot do so with the same keen judgment, good discrimination or professional experience that the merchant can, because as Artemas Ward would say, there ain't no sech animiles in the film zoo.

Poor exhibitor, his case is really pathetic. Like Sisyphus he tries to roll his stone to the top of the hill of fame and when the goal is within sight something slips, the props go from under him and down goes all that represents money, labor and energy. Truthfully putting it, the exhibitor is the agent for the manufacturer, the servant of an uncompromising and selfish public—and unto himself he is the victim of the circumstances in which he moves and lives and has his being. Try to analyze his case and you have nothing left except startling incongruities. His chances for existence are as hopeful as they are hopeless. He makes and breaks alternately. He is a failure and he is a success. He is necessary and unnecessary in the business. In short, and oh how painful to say, he is and he is not.

My heart goes out to the exhibitor though, as does yours. Some day when the wrack and ruin of evolution ceases and the process of reconstruction begins anew, I can see Mr. Exhibitor the idol of the motion picture industry—a businessman with a place in this world—a place exalted, dignified and respected. Allow me to make this comparison if it illustrates my point more clearly. The exhibitor is like the vanishing element in a chemical compound. In order to make a film concoction that is full of zest and flavor, you need him above all other ingredients. But after the mixture is complete you can't find him there no matter how good a chemsit you are, because as I have said before he is the vanishing element.

So much, exhibitors, for what you are and now let me say the word of cheer I started out to do and what I think you will be.

First, a few suggestions. Let's not preach brotherhood—the kind that is usually embodied in the form of a certificate of a league, prevention of trouble, or mutual protection society. I believe the present condition of the business will not allow you to practice it. You would all like to, I know, but somehow it is proven that it can't be done. However, I am going to proclaim patience on your part and fraternalism not on the sleeve or lapel but in your very heart and soul. Rules and regulations never eliminated the crooks in any business. Laws are organized mimicry on which a body of lawmakers batten and fatten. The only hope lies in what you yourself think, act and do. Don't worry about the "guy" who is crooked, the outsider who ventures into the business and makes it hard for you. He'll soon fall on his own sword because men by habit and nature who are untrue to a trust are a menace to themselves, a trial to their neighbors and a burden to their friends just in the proportion that they are crooked. About the business man with some money who ventures into the game and makes things hard for you—he should have no terrors for you. His end begins when he makes the first step into the game. And why worry? Because a man can pack the cards is no indication or proof that he can play. Isn't that true?

Consider, gentlemen, that you are in a business that is newer than any in the world and it is quite natural to assume that there is yet a lot of fixing, rearranging and constructing to be done. For instance, the steel business was not built and made in a day. The world was created in seven days, but you know—and don't you dare deny it—that it is still in a deplorable condition. So be hopeful and happy, gentlemen—get your smiles limbered up—let's have a little more real optimism and a clearer perception of the rosy side of things, for we know where there is one.

Now, gentlemen, I don't feel that I have told you anything new. Probably, though, I did tell you things you already know, but didn't know you knew. I did show you, I hope, how I appreciate what your work is and the hard part you have to play; and knowing this as I do, I can frankly say in a few words: Work on day by day—wear rose-colored spectacles when things look blue—await patiently the day of reconstruction in the film business which we are actually passing through right now and withal look to Truth as your standard and practice it whenever and wherever you can at all times and success is bound to be yours.

David W. Griffith's address on "The Rise and Fall of Free Speech and Personal Liberty in America," was given before one of the most enthusiastic assemblages for which a speaker might hope. Applause upon his arrival in the Civic Center Auditorium convention hall on the morning of July 15 was continued and hearty and when his talk was finished three cheers and a rising vote of thanks were accorded him.

The talk was the feature of the day's business session and was well delivered. President Marion S. Pearce, presiding at the meeting, introduced Mr. Griffith and afterward expressed the League's thanks to him for his presence and talk.

Mr. Griffith had the following to say:

Freedom of speech and publication is guaranteed in the Constitution of the United States and in the constitutions of practically all the states. Unjustifiable speech or publication may be punished, but cannot be forbidden in advance. The Supreme Court of California held that a regular theatrical production could be protected from injunction on the ground that it was a publication. Mayor Gaynor—that great jurist who stood out from the ordinary, gallery-playing, hypocritical type of politician, who plays for that hydra-headed monster called "public clamor" in America, as a white rose stands out from a field of sewer-fed weeds, said in vetoing a censorship ordinance in the city of New York:

"Ours is a government of free speech and a free press. That is the corner-stone of free government. The phrase 'the press' includes all methods of expression by writing or pictures * * * if this (moving picture) ordinance be legal, then a similar ordinance in respect of the newspapers and the theaters generally would be legal."

We do not fear censorship, for we have no wish to offend with indecencies or obscenities, but we do demand as a right the liberty to show the dark side of wrong, that we may illuminate the bright side of virtue—the same liberty that is conceded to the art of the written word—that art to which we owe the Bible and the works of Shakespeare.

The rise and fall of free speech in America—add to this the rise and fall of Liberty in America—and when you go home tonight and have your glass of beer, which the long-haired angels of reform, walking through their misguided and God-forsaken alleys of gloom, will doubtless take away from you before many moons—think this matter over.

The Revolution itself was a fight in this direction—the God-given, beautiful thing of free speech. Afterwards the first assault on the right of free speech guaranteed by the Constitution occurred in 1798, when Congress passed the Sedition Law, which made it a crime for any newspaper or other printed publication to criticise the government.

The integrity of free speech and publication was not again attacked in this country until the arrival of the motion picture, when this new art was seized upon as an excuse for meddlesome interference.

It has taken but a very few short years to take away this wonderful blessing, and I tell you that not only has its accomplishment been attempted—it has been completed. You may think this is an exaggeration, but I tell you that when a majority of citizens in any community allow the censorship of one single motion picture—particularly showing to an audience of adults—the right of free speech in that community has once and for all and forevermore ceased to be.

They tell you you must not show crime in a motion picture. Do not listen to such nonsense. These people would not have you show the glories and beauties of the most wonderful moral lesson the world has ever known—the life of Christ—because in that story you must show the vice of the traitor Judas Iscariot. Let these people follow out their belief to its logical conclusion, there would have been written no Iliads of Homer; there would not have been written, for the glory of the human race, that grand cadence of uplift called the Bible; there would have been no Goethe. There would be no thrilling, beautiful dramas given as the grandest heritage of the English-speaking race—the plays of Shakespeare. None of these things would these worthy persons have left in your possession, had they had their way.

On the matter of censorship we think there has been very little common sense displayed by the public in general.

We will agree with you in the argument that for the sake of the children censorship for a class of pictures may be allowed. But for the motion picture presented to adults at the same place, in the same theater, and under exactly the same conditions as the regular drama of the stage, we demand the same fair treatment accorded the drama, and we are unable to see why this is not the case; but, as you know, it is very far from being the case.

When the first little board of censorship was established six years ago we took it seriously, then expected exactly what has come to pass—when a man of the caliber of the captain of police of Chicago can tell two million American people what they shall and shall not go to see in the way of a moving picture.

The policy of the censorship is to approve of pictures which offend no one. That is one way of saying, "We will have nothing in the pictures but milk and water," ridiculous, insipid mediocrity that could not possibly interest anyone.

A motion picture of this class would be as interesting and efficient as a newspaper that never steps on anyone's toes, and you can imagine how people would be interested in that kind of a newspaper.

We believe that we have as much right to present the facts of history as we see them, on the motion picture screen, as Woodrow Wilson has to write these facts in his history. We believe it as a right under the Constitution of the United States, and we are supported in this belief by wise judicial decisions in cases where the matter has been presented to the courts in the right way.

Judge Cooper, in his decision allowing "The Birth of the Nation," to be shown in Chicago, said in part:

"Every night in every fair-sized community in this broad land, where the stage instructs or entertains, each and every play has its good characters and its bad characters portrayed, both of which are essential to a play in the rounding out of the moral of the play, and without which moral a play is of no educational value * * * If * * * all the plays in which a villain had played were stopped * * * the theater as an educator and entertainer of the people would become a memory of the past, and there would be nothing to fill its place for the education and enjoyment of our people."

I have already quoted one passage from the veto message of the late Mayor Gaynor of New York, but Mr. Gaynor went even further than this in his expression of legal opinion. He declared in so many words that the censoring of moving pictures is a direct violation of the United States Constitution, because it is an abridgement of the freedom of publication.

The press of the country can awaken the people to the truth of these conditions. What have you done to help awaken them? The gentlemen of the press are human beings, subject and liable to be persuaded one way or another, the same as you or I. Talk to them, put up your side of the case you will find that you can open their eyes to things they have never dreamed of. Already some of the greatest journalists of the country have been brought to see the light. I quote here from Mr. Lewis Sherwin, the eminent dramatic critic of the New York Globe, who, upon hearing of the efforts to suppress the "Birth of the Nation," wrote:

"This is absolutely against public policy, against the spirit of the Constitution, against the very life and essence of what should be true American and democratic ideas. The mere fact of the races constituting the population of the United States in an unpleasant light is no argument whatever. If this factor is to be seriously considered, there is hardly any limit to which censorship may not go."

The press, the theaters, and the great majority of the people—these are only too ready to line themselves on your side of the battle, if you only have the nerve and the brains to let them know what your side is. In heaven's name—get to it! You have forgotten that you are American citizens. You seem to forget that this is America—the boasted land of the free, and by God's splendor, I think we have all forgotten the land of the brave. You are not fighting for anything to be ashamed of. You are fighting the most beautiful battle—and the only battle—that should be allowed to be fought in the world—a battle for freedom. The thing you have—the motion picture—is a form of speech as beautiful and clean as that ever discovered by the mind of man—in many ways, and in most ways, as far above any other form of expression as that shining sun is above the earth, where frightened-to-death Americans are allowing themselves to be made into images resembling the denizens of Russia.

The result of the election which took place on the last day of the convention, Friday, July 16, was as follows:

Marion S. Pearce declined the presidential nomination, and Fred J. Herrington of Pittsburgh was elected president; M. E. Cory, vice-president; L. W. Brophy, Muskogee, Okla., second vice-president; Peter J. Jeup, Detroit, treasurer. The executive committee will elect the secretary.

On this day there were short talks given by Hobart Bosworth, Mack Sennett, Raymond Hitchcock, Kenneth O'Hara and Frank Keenan. Tom Ince, who was scheduled for a speech, was absent.

There was a luncheon and auto parade in the afternoon and a grand ball in the evening. The grand march was led by Blanche Sweet and Carlyle Blackwell. There were three thousand people present; among them were thirty-one well known motion picture stars. Geraldine Farrar, Jesse L. Lasky, Mr. and Mrs. Hodkinson and Mr. and Mrs. Morris Gest were spectators from a box.

THOUSANDS SEE BULL FIGHT STAGED FOR LASKY'S "CARMEN"

In the presence of 20,000 persons the "bull fight" for the Lasky production of "Carmen" with Geraldine Farrar as the star, was held in Los Angeles, and voted one of the most elaborate specially planned scenes for a photoplay production in the history of the industry in Southern California.

Special permission and permits had to be obtained from the city government of Los Angeles for the occasion. An entire bull fighting arena was built, with tier on tier of wooden seats. This was constructed by the Lasky Company, under the supervision of the municipal building and amusement bureaus. In every particular, the structure was a duplicate of some of the famous bull-fighting rings of Spain.

Cecil B. DeMille, director general of the Lasky Company, had the general supervision of the scene, which is to be one of the features of the forthcoming production of "Carmen," first of the series of photoplays in which Miss Farrar will star.

The scenes depicted included every feature of a gala day, including the gatherings at the exterior of the bull-ring, the march of the matadors, toreadors and picadores, the arrival of Miss Farrar as Carmen, and of Pedro de Cordoba as Escamillo.

Practically all the members of the Lasky Company participated in some way in the great scene, and the studios for the day were given over entirely to photographing this spectacle. During the height of the excitement in the bull-ring Mr. deCordoba swung into the center of the action, mid cheers from the crowds. He had been carefully and expertly trained in his new occupation, and he flashed his red scarf before the bull with the confidence of a veteran.

That nothing of the spirit of "Carmen" shall be lost, Cecil B. De Mille last week struck upon a novel plan suggested by the opportunities of the moment.

Among the visitors at the Lasky studios was Melville Ellis, noted pianist, costume designer and for several years one of the heads of the musical comedy producing staff of the Messrs. Shubert.

Cecil De Mille, director, teaching Geraldine Farrar how to act in motion pictures.

When Miss Farrar last winter revived "Carmen" in the Metropolitan Opera House her costumes were widely commented upon. They had been designed and made by Mr. Ellis, who had made a special trip to Europe in order thoroughly to study the costumes of the Gypsies of the period of the opera. Mr. Ellis and his piano were put to use. When "Carmen" is exhibited on the screen those who can read what the lips say will discover that in certain scenes Miss Farrar is really singing the French text of the play. Mr. Ellis has acted as Miss Farrar's accompanist many times before and will spend the next three weeks of his vacation at the piano in the Lasky studios rendering operatic music for the filming of the silent drama.

POPULAR STAGE FAVORITES RECENTLY SECURED BY PATHE

It was only a short time ago, as time is reckoned, since the stars of the stage spurned the advances of the motion picture manufacturers. Considering the "movies," as they contemptuously termed the film drama, as a cheap and entirely ephemeral form of amusement, they thought acting in them beneath their dignity and preferred thirty-week contracts at $200 to fifty-two weeks playing in pictures at larger figures. Today what a difference! One by one, at first apologetically but now boldly to the sound of figurative trumpets, the great names of the stage have gone over to the "silent drama."

Several things have contributed to this change in feeling upon the part of the pampered favorites of the stage. The first is that the photoplay art has become so elevated that it stands on equal footing with that of the stage. Indeed an infinite variety of effects may be obtained before the camera which are impossible to the theatrical producer. The "vision," double exposure, actual outdoor scenery instead of painted canvas, the quick shifting from scene to scene, are some of them. With great authors writing the scenarios and great directors producing the pictures, they have become a medium of amusement appealing to every one, high and low, so that the old time contempt of the stage star has of necessity died a natural death. Secondly, the last two theatrical seasons in drama, musical comedy and vaudeville have been the reverse of brilliant. Failing to secure profitable engagements on the stage, Broadway favorites have not merely welcomed the picture producers with open arms, but of their own accord have sought for engagements in pictures. A picture engagement is now coveted above all things—it means high salaries for the big names, no road work except short trips to new "locations," and a vaster audience than could ever be hoped for on the stage.

STANDARD PROGRAM SCENARIOS TO MEET PATRONS' DEMANDS

By learning the demands of theater patrons from the theater owners and transmitting them to a special scenario department conducted by the Standard Photoplay Distributors, Inc., the exchanges handling the Standard Program hope to be able, in a short time, to give the exhibitors a variety of stories in photodrama form that will supply directly the kind of productions most popular with their audiences. President Albert Warner of the Standard believes that although magazines and novels are constantly changing the style of stories offered to the reading public in accordance with the popular demand, motion pictures are not up-to-date in this respect because of the conditions of the business forcing the exchanges to take whatever style of story the manufacturers see fit to hand them without due regard to the demands of the exhibitors on behalf of their patrons. While a publisher will not accept a story, the style of which he learns from the bookseller is not in demand, an exchange is forced to accept a released motion picture in spite of the fact that the exhibitors have warned him of the unpopularity of the subject. The correction of this state of affairs was in the minds of the active spirits of the Standard Program during its organization and steps have been taken whereby the studios producing Standard Pictures will receive their stories from carefully selected scenarios prepared by a special script department which is kept informed by the exchanges of the style of stories most popular in their several territories.

This department will consist of a staff of high salaried magazine writers who will work in conjunction with experienced scenario writers and while each studio will be allowed to furnish its own scripts when desired they will not be o. k.'d by the central scenario department unless the subject is known to be in popular demand.

HELEN BADGLEY

Imagine a little imp of seven, full of childish graces, regardless of whether she is at work or play, with roguish black eyes, silky hair, in all the cleverest and brightest kiddie one would wish to meet—and you have an excellent mental photograph of Helen Badgley, among the youngest and cleverest of child players seen in motion pictures.

Helen Badgley.

Helen, better known as the Thanhouser "Kidlet," made her first screen appearance when only eighteen months old, playing a prominent part in "Brother Bob's Baby," which was filmed at the Thanhouser studios in New Rochelle, N. Y. Since then, this talented youngster has appeared in countless numbers of Thanhouser photoplays, included among them several of the important multiple reel features produced by Thanhouser.

When not engaged in the studio, where she enters into her work with all the seriousness of one of her prominence, Helen is a quaint mixture of childish simplicity and oldish ways and thoughts. Like most little girls, Helen loves her dolls and one of the rooms of her home in New Rochelle, not far from the studios, is devoted entirely to the "nursery." Each doll has a name and several changes of clothing, considerable of which was made by their little "mother." For Helen, despite her years, is an adept with the needle.

ANITA STEWART, "THE GODDESS," SAYS HOME LIFE MAKES SUCCESS

"Success," said the Vitagraph star, Anita Stewart, who is achieving success through her wonderful impersonation of Celestia in the Vitagraph serial, "The Goddess," "means to me the accomplishment of an ambition, a continual forging ahead to a goal that I may achieve, through study and effort, a place in the Hall of Fame that is worth while. I do not mean the success that comes over night, but the slow, sure success that is attained through careful thought, by obstacles overcome, by work and study and more work. I have heard numbers of persons, in all walks of life, decry success; but to such persons, it usually means too much work; too much time lost from their pleasures, and consequently, they fall by the wayside, and let it go forth that success is not what it is cracked up to be. Those persons have not achieved success, they simply knocked at the door and because success did not open it immediately, gave up the struggle. Another class achieve a little success and become so imbued with their own importance it is impossible for them to realize the necessity of continued effort in order to retain the prestige already gained.

"When I began to make a bid for success, I not only approached the door with determination, but made up my mind that no matter what came, I would plod patiently onward until it was opened, and even now, although a long way from the goal of my ambition I am going to keep on struggling.

"When I first began to forge ahead I knew that it was in me to succeed and had I not gained fame through my first efforts, I would have striven again and again. The feeling of satisfaction at the thought of something accomplished, something worth while being done would have urged me to continue even through several failures.

"Notwithstanding the fact that numbers of successful persons say that the home and success do not go together, my home life has been a decided factor in my success and to be deprived of home influence and home comforts would do more to make me fearful of the future than anything else I could imagine. By home I mean a real home, not a suite of apartments in some fashionable hotel or a house miles from the place where your work is being done, in either case surrounded by strangers who do not want to know you and care less about you and what you are, but a home, not too far out, over which a mother presides, who will watch over you and help you to bear all the trials and tribulations that beset the ones who wish to trod the road to real success.

"I attribute my present success, first, to the influence of my home life, the study and effort being induced by my home surroundings and life; second, to my unconquerable desire to attain advancement through my own achievement, due to my home training."

PAVLOWA ENTHUSIASTIC WORKER IN UNIVERSAL FEATURE STUDIO

A representative of Motography got out to the Chicago studios of the Universal Film Company at a most opportune time. Lois Weber, better known as Mrs. Phillips Smalley, hoppened to have a few leisure moments in which she told of the work they were doing at the studios and of some of the experiences they have had.

Mme. Anna Pavlowa, the world famous Russian dancer, is posing for the filming of "The Dumb Girl of Portici," and Mrs. Smalley is directing her. Temperament, the cloud behind which many of our great and near great artists hide, was one of the obstacles Mrs. Smalley feared was going to interfere with their working with Mme. Pavlowa. However, she was happily surprised in finding that the famous dancer is one of the most unassuming personages possible, a wonder to work with, absolutely devoid of temperament, and in fact the little lady will be missed by all of her co-workers after the picture is finished.

Mrs. Smalley acted as guide around the studio and called special attention to one setting being erected, which is going to be one of the most wonderful and artistic scenes ever shown on the screen, showing the Bay of Naples from the balcony of the king's palace. She then introduced Ruppert Julian, Douglas Girrard, Laura Sawyer and other prominent Universal actors.

The camera began to click and they were in the midst of taking the picture. Surely no one ever put more life or entered more into the spirit of the play than did Mme. Pavlowa. In this particular scene which they were taking Pavlowa is trying to escape through the door of her hut which is being guarded by the prince, who is clad in heavy armor. One could hear the crash as the dancer's frail arms beat against the heavy armor time and time again. She spared herself no pain to make the action realistic.

Laura Sawyer, the well known Universal actress, is a charming person to meet and she talked interestingly of many things; among others of how much all of the people at Universal City thought of Mr. and Mrs. Smalley and of how everyone goes to Mrs. Smalley with their troubles and petty differences. Miss Sawyer said the one thing which helped them out to a great extent was the fact that Mrs. Smalley, though she is the director, is always willing to listen to any suggestions which the actors themselves have to make.

While at the studio members of the Universal Company were reading recent copies of MOTOGRAPHY and Bert Adler, the Universal press agent, remarked that "Featherstone's" articles on projection which are published in MOTOGRAPHY were the best he had read on this subject.

They are surely a happy family at the studio and Chicago will miss them all when they leave for California, which will be in about two weeks.

LULU GLASER TO APPEAR IN UNIVERSAL PROGRAM

Lulu Glaser, for years a stage favorite, has answered to the call of the movies. Her signature to a contract between the Universal Film Manufacturing Company and herself verifies the report circulated recently in theatrical circles that the well-known prima donna will enter the land of the silent drama and that she will appear on the regular Universal program is an assured fact. The title of her play has as yet not been decided but it is promised that it will be forthcoming in the near future.

Lulu Glaser will be remembered for her remarkable comedy roles in "The Lion Tamer," the play in which she commenced as a chorus girl, "Sweet Ann Page," "The Prima Donna," "Dolly Varden," "The Madcap Princess," "Miss Dolly Dollars," "Miss Dudlesack," "One of the Boys," "The Aero Club," "The Girl and the Kaiser," and "Lola from Berlin." In every instance Miss Glaser was a star of the first magnitude and scored instantaneous success. Her work for the films should stand out as prominently as her stage career and picture fans will have a treat in store for them when they see Lulu Glaser on the Universal program.

Exhibitor's Film Corporation Proposed

AS exclusively announced in last week's issue of MOTOGRAPHY, there was a meeting at the Sherman Hotel in Chicago of men who control large interests in motion picture theaters throughout the United States. This meeting was for the purpose of forming an organization among themselves whose object will be to effect economies for exhibitors, according to the following scheme:

1. By forming a corporation made up of the principal theater owners of the United States—
2. To maintain an office in New York City for the purpose of selecting pictures for use on this circuit with proper restrictions as to their further exploitation.
3. To buy pictures when it is deemed advisable, making selections from every avenue giving our theaters the very best productions available.
4. To arrange for the manufacture of high-class photoplays.

Membership shall be limited to individuals, firms and corporations owning or leasing and operating theaters and using exclusively high-grade programs.

The following are constituted a committee on membership and organization:

J. E. Bryant, Waterloo, Ia., representing northern and western Iowa.

William Sievers, St. Louis, Mo., Missouri, Kansas and Nebraska.

E. H. Hulsey,* Dallas Tex., Texas.

Tom H. Boland, Oklahoma City, Okla., Oklahoma.

N. H. Gordon, Scolly Square Theater, Boston, Mass., New England States.

Thomas Furniss, Duluth, Minn., Minnesota.

Thomas Saxe, Milwaukee, Wis., Wisconsin.

J. H. Kunsky, Detroit, Mich., Michigan.

E. Mandelbaum, Cleveland, O., Ohio and western Pennsylvania.

A. H. Blank, Des Moines, Ia., central and eastern Iowa.

Aaron Jones, Chicago, Ill., Illinois.

F. J. Rembusch, Shelbyville, Ind., Indiana.

J. Ditmars, Louisville, Ky., Kentucky and Tennessee.

Tom Moore,* Washington, D. C., Washington City and Virginia.

J. Eugene Pearce, New Orleans, La., Mississippi, Georgia, Alabama, Florida, Arkansas and Louisiana.

Max Spiegel,* Strand Theater, New York City, New York City.

M. H. Mark,* Strand Theater, New York City, New York State.

Turner & Dahnken,* San Francisco, Pacific coast.

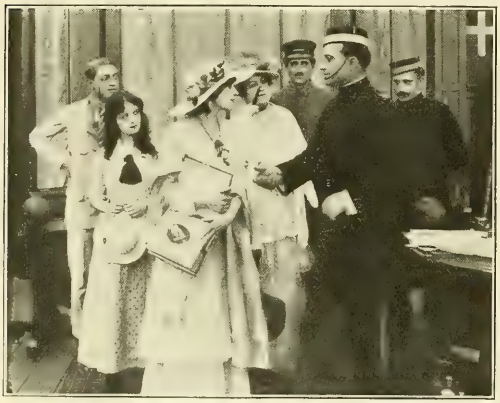
H. A. Sims,* Salt Lake City, Utah, Idaho and Wyoming.

The members of the organization committee each contribute $50 for preliminary expenses, payable to William Sievers, New Grand Central Theater, St. Louis, Mo.

Each member of the organization committee shall pass on the membership in his own territory, but shall have no power to take in members not within the membership qualifications.

Membership for the present is entirely tentative.

*Represented by proxy.



A meeting for permanent organization will be held in the Hotel Sherman, Chicago, Ill., on the morning of August 25, 1915, to perfect plans to carry out the objects agreed on.

BUSHMAN AND MARGUERITE SNOW IN METRO-QUALITY RELEASE SOON

The concluding scenes of "The Second in Command," which will be Metro-Quality's production introducing Francis X. Bushman and Marguerite Snow on the Metro Program for the first time, are now under way at Quality Pictures' Los Angeles studio. This important feature will be ready for release on the regular Metro Program on Monday, July 26.

Mr. Bushman will appear in the role made notable by John Drew on the regular stage, that of Colonel Miles Anstruther. Mr. Bushman and Miss Snow are now permanent stars on the Metro Program and they will appear for the next five years exclusively in productions from the studio of the Quality Pictures Corporation, one of Metro's important allies.

Important regimental scenes were taken on the grounds of the Soldiers' Home in California, where a stage was erected for the taking of the scenes by permission of the superintendent of the Home. The British consul at San Francisco was consulted about the costuming and was interested sufficiently to attend the staging at the Soldiers' Home, where he made several suggestions for verisimilitude. It may be said "The Second in Command" will be absolutely correct in all details representing British military manoeuvres and military equipment.

GOOD FILMS HELP THE ACTORS, DECLARES SAMUEL GOLDFISH

In the controversy which has been carried on through the columns of some of the New York daily newspapers regarding the relative worth of stars of the legitimate stage before and after they appear in motion picture productions, Samuel Goldfish, executive head of the Jesse L. Lasky Feature Play Company, summed up the situation with characteristic clearness. It is the contention of some of the legitimate managers that the popularity of their stars and leading players suffers through their appearance in photoplays.

"Why should managers object to having their players appear in photodramas when they themselves are making every effort to enter a great and growing field?" asks Mr. Goldfish. "One of the chief objectors is known to me to be making arrangements to leave the legitimate stage entirely and devote his future to the photodrama. In the industry, as a matter of fact, we welcome their activities, as they bring a fund of experience and their energies are directed toward a higher standard of pictures.

"The association of David Belasco with the Lasky Feature Play Company is a high tribute to Mr. Belasco's judgment that the photodrama as an art is as great as the theater of the spoken word. Nearly all the legitimate managers and producers have lent their names to photoplay firms.

"That artists are paid too much money for their film acting no doubt is true in many instances. The wise artist, however, is one who associates himself with a photo-producer, who, he knows, will present him in a beautiful picture, which is, after all, the medium by which he must stand or fall. Good actors in bad pictures never succeed, and their legitimate reputations suffer and their worth to legitimate managers diminishes. But good actors in good pictures lend to their fame. There has been a like situation in regard to the better class of talking machines. Miss Geraldine Farrar considers the talking machine as having aided her popularity and fame. She feels that motion pictures of the right kind will do likewise, and that is why such infinite pains are being taken with 'Carmen' and other plays in which she will appear under our management.

"Through photoplays an artist can reach millions of persons. It is important, then, that the production in which the artist appears shall be the very highest and best. Then only good to the artist and fame can result."

J. CECIL GRAHAM ASSISTANT TO FREULER, MUTUAL PRESIDENT

John Cecil Graham, one of the best equipped men in the motion picture industry, has been appointed general assistant to John R. Freuler, recently elected president of the Mutual. In selecting Mr. Graham for this all important office, President Freuler has brought to the Mutual a man who is familiar with every branch of the industry and who enjoys a nation-wide reputation among producers, exhibitors, and the public alike.

Mr. Graham entered the motion picture industry with H. E. Aitken, former president of the Mutual, when the latter organized the Western General Film Company. Later, in association with Mr. Aitken, he successfully operated the Western Film Exchange and when Mr. Aitken purchased the Reliance, he came East to be placed in charge of the output.

Following the organization of the Mutual, Mr. Graham continued in charge of the eastern exchange, which included New York City. Later he became general manager of the Universal and then of the United, recently dissolved.

The Pathe producers, the Whartons, announce that through the courtesy of Edward Rush and Abraham Levy of "The Garden of Allah," Inc., Frederic de Belleville has been released from his contract with "The Garden of Allah" that he may play "Wallingford" in "Get-Rich-Quick-Wallingford," Pathe's next series.

TWELVE FEATURES FOR LUBIN BY DANIEL CARSON GOODMAN

The Lubin Manufacturing Company announces the engagement of Dr. Daniel Carson Goodman to write twelve feature photoplays a year at the largest salary ever paid for such services—$60,000. These twelve feature photoplays will be of the domestic drama order patterned after the famous Griffith film, "The Battle of Sexes," of which Dr. Goodman was the author. Lubin will engage a special cast of stars for these features and will spare no expense to make them a sensation of the film world during the next twelve months.

Daniel Carson Goodman.

Although only 33 years old, Dr. Goodman has won an enviable name for himself in the world of literature, his novel, "Hagar Revelly," having been the best seller of the year it was published. He was born in Chicago, and after the usual preliminary schooling, studied medicine at Washington University, from which he was graduated. Then he went to the Universities of Heidelberg and Vienna, where he continued his studies for another four years.

But medicine held no attraction for Dr. Goodman and he turned his endeavors to literature, his first novel being "Unclothed," the second "Travail," and the third "Hagar Revelly." Now Dr. Goodman has decided to give his best efforts to the production of what he hopes will prove to be masterpieces.

PROMINENT PICTURE PEOPLE BEHIND STANDARD PROGRAM

Among the men who have appeared most prominently in the affairs of the "Standard" at present writing are Albert and H. M. Warner; Al. Lichtman, late of the Famous Player; L. G. B. Erb and H. M. Goetz, of the United Motion Picture Producers, Inc.; L. S. Stern, G. B. Hamilton; Aubrey and Harry Mittenthal, of Mittenthal Bros.; E. Offerman; Joseph A. Golden; Otis B. Thayer; O. E. Goebel and Arthur Smallwood. New and interesting names are constantly coming to the surface as the activities of the "Standard" increase and in all cases they are found to be men well up in motion picture affairs and long familiar with the rapidly changing conditions of the business.

While the output of the studios comprising producers who contribute regular releases to the Standard Photoplay Distributors presenting the Standard program, consists of a fixed number of one, two and three reel realeses every week, a system of selection of subjects for each week's program has been perfected whereby the studios can regulate the number of reels according to the nature of the story.

To make such ideal motion-picture producing conditions possible a carefully drawn up agreement had to be entered into by the ten different studios of the group whereby they co-operate with each other.

They found that a system could be devised whereby the studios could call upon each other through the main office for the co-operation in the lengths of the subjects produced and whereby the members of the group finding that they had miscalculated the number of reels a story would run could, where necessary, arrange their releases accordingly. In order to have the plan work out successfully it was found necessary to allow the producers to get many weeks ahead in their releases. From six to seven weeks of completed negatives was found to be ample for the perfection of the scheme and as the Standard Producers have now more than six weeks of releases upon their shelves they figure that there should be no trouble in manipulating the subjects so that a well balanced program can be maintained.

WORLD FILM CORPORATION ADDS WERBA & LUESCHER FEATURES

The latest acquisition to the list of Broadway producers to present a series of high class motion pictures is Werba & Luescher, who introduced D'Annunzio's masterwork, "Cabiria," to American audiences and who have concluded arrangements to produce and release one de luxe feature picture each month beginning in August. This firm's intention is to present all-star casts with plays and productions of unusual value in a distinctive manner. All their productions will be released exclusively through the World Film Corporation, which company intends to make them a feature of its special program.

They have contracted with various important stars, including many who were formerly under their personal direction, and many of their former dramatic successes, which other motion picture producers have endeavored to secure, will now be available for screen production. Later announcement will be made of the first four releases.

The director-general of the studios will be Lawrence Marston, who is considered one of the most expert picture directors in America, and who, previous to directing motion picture productions, was known to the regular theater for such pretentious dramatic sensations as "Ben Hur," "The Prince of India," "Wild Fire," "Sins of Society," "The Round Up," "Baby Mine," "Thais," etc., all of which he originally produced on Broadway for Klaw & Erlanger, and other leading managers.

FIVE STRONG V-L-S-E FEATURES TO HOLD DOG DAY AUDIENCES

For the month of August the V-L-S-E program has ready for release, five features that are exceptionally well balanced in point of dramatic range and variety of subjects. There are three dramas and two comedies, and a glance at these releases brings out a remarkable fact.

August is considered to be one of the poorest months in the year for feature film exhibitions, yet the V-L-S-E for this hot month is offering what is probably the greatest bill in point of strength and magnitude that the "Big Four" has yet released. This strong bill should result in offsetting the usual decrease in business looked for during the hot spell.

The Lubin Company will release two features during the month of August. Its first offering on August 2 will be "The Climbers," adapted from the play by Clyde Fitch. This will introduce on the V-L-S-E program Gladys Hanson, playing opposite George Soule Spencer. "Tillie's Tomato Surprise," with Marie Dressler, is scheduled for release on August 30. An attempt to describe this production would be in vain. On August 9, the Vitagraph Company releases another Rev. Cyrus Townsend Brady production, "The Chalice of Courage," in six parts, which was produced at the western studios, with Myrtle Gonzalez and William Duncan in the leading roles.

On August 16, the Essanay releases a Charles Hoyt comedy, "A Bunch of Keys," in five parts, with June Keith and Johnny Slavin in the roles made famous on the speaking stage. "A Bunch of Keys" is a light comedy teeming with those humorous situations that appeal to all classes of mentality. "The House of a Thousand Candles," in six reels, will be released by Selig on August 23. This production will mark the third appearance on the V-L-S-E program of charming Grace Darmond, and will be the second time Harry Mestayer has been seen in Big Four offerings. "The House of a Thousand Candles," is adapted from Meredith Nicholson's celebrated novel of the same name.

DOUGLAS FAIRBANKS NOW PLAYING WITH GRIFFITH

Douglas Fairbanks, the popular legitimate stage star who recently closed in the New York production of "He Comes Up Smiling," has been engaged by D. W. Griffith to appear in two or more feature photoplays, and has already arrived at the Griffith studio in Southern California. This marks the debut into filmdom of one of the most popular of light comedy stars, who leaped into fame over night, approximately six years ago, when a member of "The Man of the Hour" cast then playing in New York.

Douglas Fairbanks.

His next success to follow "The Man of the Hour" was in "A Gentleman from Mississippi," in which he co-starred with Tom Wise. He was featured in "A Gentleman of Leisure" preceding his appearance in "Hawthorne of the U. S. A.," in which he was a great success.

Douglas Fairbanks is to appear in an original specially conceived photoplay which will be of a high-class comedy-drama nature. A competent cast has been selected to surround him.

Consul Isaac A. Manning says that the reason there are so few American films shown in Colombia is that the moving picture manufacturers of the United States send their lowest grade of films, while the French and Italian companies send none but their best.

ALICE LLOYD IN WINDSOR FILM MAKES SONG INTO FILM SUBJECT

A distinct novelty in the way of one reel features is soon to be released by the Windsor Film Corporation in the way of a picture with words and music in which Alice Lloyd, the English comedienne, will make her first and only appearance on the screen. The subject which has been chosen for this new departure is "Bobbin' Up and Down," the title of a song with which Miss Lloyd had much success on her vaudeville tours of this country.

A corps of women singers have been engaged by the Windsor company to accompany the films when they are booked. The booking for New York and New Jersey will be taken care of by the new exchange of the company, but it is understood that prints for the remainder of the United States and Canada will be offered on a state rights basis. It is reported that a large number of bookings for the picture have been contracted for in New York city.

N. Y. M. P. SECURES MARY BOLAND

Miss Mary Boland, for many years leading lady with John Drew in the Frohman attractions, has signed a contract to appear before the camera for the New York Motion Picture Corporation, for an unlimited engagement. She will work under the personal direction of Thomas H. Ince, the director-general. She left for the California studios at Santa Monica last week.

Miss Boland is considered one of the most beautiful women on the American stage and was selected by Joe Brooks and starred by him in last season's success, "My Lady's Dress."

Miss Boland is a woman of exceptional talents being a very good horse woman and possibly one of the best woman golf players in the United States.

NEW CHAPLIN BANNERS

The National Badge and Pennant Company, 105 West Madison street, is putting out a splendid Chaplin pennant which exhibitors will find are very good business boosters. The company has two sizes, one retailing for 12 cents, the other retailing for about 6 or 7 cents.

This company is very well equipped to turn out pennants in fast time, having recently furnished the Chicago Evening Post over 200 Chaplin pennants, and we understand that it is working on a second order for this customer. Exhibitors who run Chaplin pictures should invest a dime in a sample and it is quite probable that they will realize the boosting value of these catchy little novelties.

ARTHUR ROW OF "VANITY FAIR" ENGAGED FOR EDISON PICTURE

Arthur Row, who has been especially engaged by Edison to play Pitt Crawley in "Vanity Fair," the part which he played with Mrs. Fiske, who is to be starred, in her stage presentation a few years ago, has succeeded equally well in such seemingly diverse fields as actor, writer, and producer. For Mr. Row, who has made considerable of a name as a student of Greek theaters and plays, recently produced at the New York University Maeterlinck's "Aglavaine and Selysette," and has appeared often as a reader before distinguished bodies.

Kleine and Edison Combine for Features

ARRANGEMENTS have been completed whereby Thomas A. Edison, Inc., and George Kleine will release feature films under the name of the Kleine-Edison Feature Service. The first release will be scheduled about September 1.

George Kleine.

"The announcement that we are to make releases on a definite schedule will probably surprise those who know my very strong antipathy to the so-called program method of release," said Mr. Kleine in discussing the new plan. "The present scheme is for the Edison Company to make one reel a month and I will contribute two, and you can plainly see with the facilities of the two big plants at our disposal we will be practically free from the bugbear of rushing any particular film to meet the release date."

Mr. Kleine's special hobby is the work which can be done on a film after it has been declared finished by the average director. That is, he thinks that the average production has been so rushed that the final touches will make all the difference between the mediocre and the exceptional film, enough to make it a real work of art.

The affiliation with Mr. Edison is not Mr. Kleine's only new activity. He is going to begin releasing two-reel subjects weekly through the General program beginning September 2. Ethel Grandin has been selected to play the leading roles in these films. The Grandin releases are promised not only to avoid some current mistakes, but Mr. Kleine hopes to set a new standard of two-reel excellence.

BILLIE BURKE SIGNS A CONTRACT WITH NEW YORK MOTION PICTURE

Miss Billie Burke has concluded negotiations which were entered into ten weeks ago, between the New York Motion Picture Corporation and Miss Burke for her appearance in a motion picture to be taken at the company's studio in Santa Monica, Cal.

Adam Kessel, after Miss Burke had signed the contract, handed her a check for $50,000, which stands as an option on her exclusive services for the next three years at a salary of $150,000 a year, she being required to give the picture company her services for 26 weeks of each year. And as the contract entered into between Miss Burke and the New York Motion Picture Corporation calls for consecutive weeks, Messrs. Kessel and Baumann have applied, through William T. Sandall of 59 John street, New York City, for an insurance policy through Lloyds of London for $50,000 insuring them against rain during Miss Burke's stay in Los Angeles. This will possibly be the second time that Lloyd's has issued a policy against rain in this country, the other occasion being on July 4, 1910, a policy being issued to the promoters of the Jeffries-Johnson fight.

Adam Kessel signed the contract for the New York Motion Picture Corporation and among others present were Miss Burke's mother, Flo Ziegfeld, and John McKeon of the New York Motion Picture Corporation. Miss Burke leaves for the coast about August 15, 1915.

PARAMOUNT BUSINESS MANAGER, CARL ANDERSON, GOES TO LONDON

Carl Anderson, formerly business manager of the Lasky Feature Play Company, Inc., has been engaged by the Paramount Pictures Corporation as business manager for that concern. Before leaving the Lasky Company to become associated with the Paramount Pictures Corporation, through which all Lasky productions are distributed, Mr. Anderson is making a special trip to England on behalf of the Lasky Company and the Famous Players Company.

Mr. Anderson left Saturday on board the St. Louis, and while in London will visit the offices through which the Lasky and Famous Players films are distributed in England and on the European continent, as well as for Australia and other distant points. Mr. Anderson makes this foreign trip as a special envoy of the Lasky and Famous Players Companies, by courtesy of the Paramount Pictures Corporation, which has postponed the date for the beginning of his work with it sufficiently long for him to complete this special undertaking for his old associates.

EDWIN STEVENS, "THE DEVIL," WILL STAR FOR UNIVERSAL

Edwin Stevens, the latest acquisition of the Universal for their regular program, is perhaps one of the best-known character actors in America. He has appeared with success in every branch of the theatrical profession including drama, musical comedy and vaudeville and now makes his debut for the screen as a Universal star. He will be remembered as "The Devil" in the popular Molnar play of that name, produced at the Garden Theater, by Henry W. Savage, where the production had a long, successful run. The play in which Mr. Stevens will star for the Universal has as yet not been decided but several strong plays are under consideration and an announcement will be made shortly.

WILLIAM FAVERSHAM TO APPEAR IN ANOTHER METRO RELEASE

Metro makes the announcement that the services of William Faversham, the distinguished star, who was seen for the first time on the screen in Sir Gilbert Parker's, "The Right of Way," at the Strand theater, New York, week before last, has been secured for another picture to be made by the B. A. Rolfe Company.

Mutual Contracts for Bostock Animals

A GREAT stride toward the expansion and improvement of the Mutual program is seen in the announcement by John R. Freuler, president of the Mutual Film Corporation, of a contract made with David Horsley, owner of the Centaur Film Company, of Bayonne, New Jersey, and the Bostock Jungle and Film Company, of Los Angeles, by which the entire output of these producing companies will be released through the Mutual Film Corporation.

David Horsley is one of the best known film manufacturers in America. He was the first independent producer and for years has manufactured a great portion of the film productions which have been released throughout the world.

David Horsley.

The new connection brings into the Mutual program a style of pictures in great demand. Each week Mr. Horsley will release through the Mutual Film Corporation, a two-reel picture featuring the collection of animals for which the Bostock name has been famous abroad and in this country for 110 years. The announcement is made that Mr. Horsley has bought this great aggregation of animals and has installed them in a jungle covering five acres of space in the heart of Los Angeles. For several months Mr. Horsley has been preparing for the manufacture of animal films at this Los Angeles location. A huge studio has been erected which has a capacity to care for six working companies at one time. The jungles have been so arranged that it will be possible to take animal pictures with absolute safety.

The Frank C. Bostock collection of trained animals is claimed to be the biggest in the world, and the only complete collection of trained animals. It represents an investment of more than one-half a million dollars. The Bostock animals are not only trained but carefully selected—each one for some particular purpose. There are now about 130 in the collection, including groups of every specie—boxing kangaroos, trained ostriches, elephants, lions, tigers, leopards, pumas, dancing, skating and plunging bears, monkeys, startlingly intelligent chimpanzees, parrots and many birds of gaudy plumage, etc.

What is even more important than the animals themselves, are the trainers who have made the Bostock collection so wonderful. These trainers have been with the Bostock organization for 15 years. They include Harry E. Tudor, who has supervised the Bostock interests for years; Captain Jack Bonavita, acknowledged to be the greatest lion tamer alive, who became famous through working 28 lions in the same arena at the same time. While at Coney Island with the Bostock show, Captain Bonavita was attacked by the lions and his right arm was torn off. Since that time he has continued to do daring feats and now has his animals trained so that leopards may leap upon his chest in a most ferocious way. Another of the trainers is J. MacField who has had considerable experience in training animals for motion picture work. David Horsley induced him to join the Bostock organization because of his vast motion picture experience. M. Gay, C. Beatty and four others complete the staff of male trainers in the Bostock Jungle and Film Company. Gay is a young fellow of dashing personality and an exceptionally good lion trainer. Beatty's specialty is the training of leopards and tigers.

The female trainers include Madam D'Orcy—one of the best known lion tamers in the world—who for years toured Europe under the direction of Mr. Cochran of the London Hippodrome. She is assisted by her daughter, Mlle. Ottowa, who is especially clever in her handling of pumas and leopards. Madam Gavette, another of the trainers in the Bostock organization, has a collection of nine wonderful polar bears which she has trained to do most astonishing feats.

It would seem from the brief review of the Bostock animal organization that Mr. Horsley is sure to release a number of valuable and interesting features on the Mutual program. Besides the animal features, comedies will also be released—these being made at the Bayonne studios of Mr. Horsley. Mr. Horsley will also produce a number of master pictures for the Mutual Film Corporation which should undoubtedly prove extremely popular among exhibitors.

The facilities with which Mr. Horsley is equipped to make motion picture productions are probably the most complete in America. Mr. Horsley is the inventor of the double exposure camera. The original Horsley double exposure camera is now working at the Los Angeles studios. More of these cameras will soon be in use both at the New Jersey and California studios. In addition to the double exposure camera, Mr. Horsley has invented many other patented devices for photographic apparatus, all of which are installed and in operation at his studios. The genius of Mr. Horsley is seen in the completeness of his organization. At the Bayonne studios, for example, a complete foundry is maintained to make it possible to make castings for any purpose.

The capacity of the Bayonne studios is 1,000,000 feet a week, its owners claim.

The alliance with Mr. Horsley is indicative of President Freuler's endeavor to strengthen and expand the Mutual program and make it the most dominant film factor in America. The releases of the Horsley productions through the Mutual Film Corporation will begin the latter part of August.

IN A CLAIRE IN "THE PUPPET CROWN"

Ina Claire makes her second appearance under the management of the Lasky Feature Play Company in a very elaborate production of Harold MacGrath's famous romance, "The Puppet Crown," with Carlyle Blackwell as the hero of the tale. It will be released through Paramount Pictures Corporation on July 29. Ina Claire's first picture, "The Wild Goose Chase," will be remembered as a particularly charming American love story. "The Puppet Crown" gives her a still more remarkable opportunity, and also serves to introduce as a Lasky artist Carlyle Blackwell, one of the most famous of photodramatic stars.

Who's Who in the Film Game

Facts and Fancies About a Man You Know or Ought to Know

EDWIN Thanhouser got his start when he was only about so old, or at least he got the idea for his start, from a politician of the old-fashioned, come-on type who was pulling the tail feathers out of the great American eagle in an old-fashioned grove in old-fashioned Georgia, when ideas didn't blossom so rapidly as they do now. The particular spell-binder who made the first appreciable dent in Edwin Thanhouser's sense of logic weighed about three hundred pounds avoirdupois and he had a voice to match. He measured up to his physique in everything except gray matter. We said he was an old-time campaigner.

Edwin Thanhouser was having a Saturday afternoon's vacation. He sat on the very first row of improvised seats which were 2x12 planks laid upon logs for support. It was in the early fall, when shoes and stockings were still considered cumbersome, needless things among the youth of the land. He was tanned and freckled; his legs were bare and brown. He was bent forward; his arms akimbo and his chin in his palms; his face upturned to the speaker. His feet were tucked under a plank. He heard the great noise on the platform without heeding the flags and the bunting, and after the first pitcher of water disappeared he concluded thus:

WHEREAS, I am small in stature and uncomely and,

WHEREAS, the speaker is all that I am not; therefore be it

RESOLVED, That it takes brains instead of beef to make a man.

That was a brief, sensible analysis for a mere youth, but it immediately became the essential part of the creed that has made Ed Thanhouser great. He went right to work on the hypothesis that what he lacked in "beef" he would make up in brains. He never had his fingers crossed and he never spared the midnight oil. He kept at it incessantly, relentlessly, and he's at it yet. By beginning early he had distinct advantage, because it was his ambition to get on and get up. By getting up he got on. Very simple mathematical problem.

Among the things that Ed acquired along about the same time was geniality. As a youngster when he clerked in his father's store, he could lay no great claim to good looks, but he could be genial. Mere case of substitution. And he was as genial every morning as a spring morning is on the best of spring mornings. With the geniality goes the palaver and the handshake. Edwin Thanhouser didn't overlook any bets. He used to talk to the horses and shake hands with the pump when there wasn't anything else available. Everything was grist for his mill—eternally at it—fighting the specter of beef, which he lacked, for the brain which he didn't lack.

So we have in Ed Thanhouser today, stripped of every other material thing, a big, active brain, a happy smile, a beaming eye, a warm, clinging handclasp and a tendency always to get along.

As a baby, Ed Thanhouser got the habit of getting on from his parents. He was born in Maryland; carried to Kansas; thence to Mexico and back to Georgia. It was at Atlanta that he first exercised his full right to the simple little resolution he had adopted a few years previously. The great Salvini was the cause. It was Thanhouser's theory that if Salvini could put it over he could. That incident and the thought which then surged through his mind, gave him his real start. He formed a small stock company of his own in Atlanta and met with modest success. Then he made his way to Milwaukee and organized the Thanhouser stock company and enjoyed a prolonged and larger success. It was here, too, that he met and married Miss Gertrude Homan—the silent, though active, partner in his expanding enterprises.

Edwin Thanhouser.

While films always held interest for Mr. Thanhouser, it was approximately six years when he journeyed to New York and had a look around among the film makers. At the conclusion of his investigations, he organized the Thanhouser Film Corporation and built a studio at New Rochelle, New York.

Subsequent events are known to the trade. The test of Ed Thanhouser and his organization was reflected upon the screen. It was laid wide open to criticism—magnified thousands of diameters. The result was favorable, spontaneous and far-reaching. Thanhouser films were heartily received. An institution was established. New Rochelle was on the film map of the world. The advent of the late Charles J. Hite in New Rochelle brought to Edwin Thanhouser the money reward of years of hard work. Hard work can be rewarded just two ways—money and rest. Ed Thanhouser with money in his hands decided upon enjoying some of the fruits of his labor. He packed up, took his wife and babies and sailed for foreign lands. He rested for three years. Then he returned to America and accepted the presidency of his old concern. He has added Falstaff to his brands of film and goes into the big stuff that releases through the Mutual Master-Picture combination. The film industry holds Thanhouser and his work in fine esteem. Exhibitors know what to expect when they see the label.

Edwin Thanhouser was born November 11, 1869, at Baltimore, Maryland. He received an academic education in Ft. Wayne, Indiana. His first appearance before the footlights was at the age of eight. His obsession is his two children, Lloyd and Marie and Mrs. Edwin Thanhouser. His hobby is oriental rugs. He is a member of the Players' Club, New York.

"SEALED VALLEY" METRO DELUXE STARRING DOROTHY DONNELLY

The Metro Pictures Corporation, which is also a producing company for its own program, and has given certain individuality in name to its productions by calling them Metro DeLuxe pictures, will release its first picture on August 2. Dorothy Donnelly, who is about as well known throughout the country as any other woman star, will be presented in "Sealed Valley," a much elaborated story of the book of the same name, by Hulbert Footner, which has had much vogue among readers of popular fiction.

Dorothy Donnelly and I. W. Johnson in Metro's "Sealed Valley."

Most of the scenes in this production will show exteriors, and beautiful ones they will be, as the heroine is an Indian girl who lives in the open country, and it is well to say that Indian life, cowboys at gunplay and other melodramatic screams will have no part in this production.

The production has been directed by Lawrence B. McGill with W. C. Thompson at the camera. The stills of this photoplay are really beautiful, as wooded country and running streams with much action of dramatic purpose taking place in the open and in the water, abound to a degree that make for artistic and genuinely picturesque atmosphere.

Pathe has acquired the picture rights to another William J. Locke novel—"Simon the Jester"—which will be produced by Edward Jose and feature Edwin Arden. "Simon the Jester" is written in Mr. Locke's best vein and proved to be one of the biggest sellers of its publication year.

"THE BLINDNESS OF VIRTUE" NOT A SERMON, SAYS SPOOR

George K. Spoor, president of Essanay, in commenting on sermonizing films stated:

"While Essanay has produced a photoplay that carries a great moral value, 'The Blindness of Virtue,' Essanay never has and never will try to foist a sermon on the public whether they want it or not.

"I take it that the first mission of a photoplay is to entertain. It must fail in its mission if it does not entertain. The public never will stand for a play that tries to teach a moral lesson if it is not presented in an interesting manner.

"Of course the photoplay must be clean, wholesome and uplifting in sentiment. It need not present a moral at all to be an excellent production. But if you have all these primary facts in a play and besides this a moral that points out a great fundamental truth in life you have a combination that grips the spectator as no other play can do.

"There is a basic love of truth and justice in everyone, even in the person who himself is not above reproach, that responds to a great teaching, if presented in a fascinating manner. This is clearly seen if you go to a theater where the mellowest kind of a melodrama is being shown. The crowd instinctively is carried away with the hero and will hate the villain.

"In 'The Blindness of Virtue' it was the aim of Essanay to make a fascinating photoplay, not to preach a sermon. In this play of Cosmo Hamilton, however, there is a great moral. It is not pushed forward; it is not emphasized. It is allowed to take care of itself and unfold naturally as the story develops. There are no dogmatic theories offered; there are no conclusions drawn. The public is thoroughly competent to draw its own conclusions. It sees and analyzes and comes to its own conclusions. The people as a whole know what is right and wrong and in a play of this character inevitably draw the correct inference, without the producer trying dogmatically to foist it on them.

"Moral plays of this character will always have a place in photoplay production and a large place, but the purely sermonizing play, that sermonizes for the sake of dogma, and forgets the entertaining part will never find a very large following."

HENRY MCRAE, FAMOUS DIRECTOR IN CHARGE AT UNIVERSAL CITY

Henry McRae, best known to the film world as director of the 101 Bison Company, has just been appointed director general of the West Coast studios of the Universal Film Manufacturing Company, located at Universal City, Cal. Mr. McRae has been with the Universal for four years and in that time has made a wonderful reputation for accomplishing everything he goes after. He is a wonderful advertisement for success. It was no surprise when he was appointed to take charge at Universal City and there is no solicitude on the part of any one over his ability to "make good." He always does.

The new director general has had a wonderful experience for such an important position. He has been property man, stage carpenter, stage manager, advance agent, actor, business manager, producer, and owner of stock and road companies, in his long and varied experience in the theatrical business.

Fundamental Principles
TRANSFORMED BY FEATHERSTONE

MORE ABOUT CENSORSHIP

At a recent conference of film producers, it was announced by one of the speakers that according to careful estimates only about two and a half per cent of all of the films produced in the United States were open to the charge of being offensive or improper. The most surprising thing about this statement was the complacency with which it was received and the small importance which seems to be attached to it. It does not seem to be a very serious matter that two million people every week should be compelled to partake of what is admitted to be mental and spiritual poison, even according to the standards of those who are seeking to defend the industry against the alleged menace of censorship. The fact is that the motion picture business is so big that a relatively small percentage may mount up into large figures.

Another difficulty is that our standards of safety and propriety are very inconsistent and unscientific. Most of us are impressed only by some unusual spectacle, and we go along unconcernedly, taking all kinds of chances and being deliberately poisoned and otherwise imposed upon until some terrible catastrophe occurs, and then we wake up for a few minutes, only to forget it a few minutes later, or perhaps to remember it as a sort of nightmare.

Millions of people may perish from preventable diseases, or patent medicine poisons, or insanitation, or impure food or drink, and we go the even tenor of our ways thinking nothing of it, but rather taking these things as we do well nigh everything else, just about as they are handed out to us.

SMALL PERCENTAGES LARGE TOTALS

So apathetic and short-sighted are we that it takes an Iroquois disaster, or a Titanic wreck, or a Lusitania outrage to arouse us. Yet right here in our midst are potential disasters that so far outnumber the victims of these three incidents that there is scarcely any comparison.

Taking the figures admitted by the producers themselves, we find that every week the people who are compelled to witness questionable film productions are numbered by millions instead of thousands. Who can estimate the damage done by these irresponsible messages? The helpless victims of such physical disasters may indeed have suffered no actual harm at all, simply a brilliant and unexpected interruption of their progress, followed by a rather severe strain on their friends and relatives, but the equally helpless victim of a book or a drama or a photoplay, suffers more than an interruption. He gets a set-back, which also affects his friends and associates, but in a different and more subtle way than would mere grief at his sudden taking-off.

A seed may have been sown that will wrongly influence his whole future, and the weeds that spring up in his mental garden may scatter their seeds in turn in other gardens, until by the well-known perversity and hardiness of weed-kind, their two and a half per cent might eventually offset much of the good done by the other ninety-seven and a half.

Every week as many voyagers as would fill a thousand Iroquois Theaters, plus a thousand Titanics, plus a thousand Lusitanias, are admittedly subjected to possible disaster. It is bad enough to be subject to the icebergs of chance, and the firebrands of carelessness, which even the best of intentions will never wholly eliminate, but there should be something to prevent an unscrupulous producer from launching a flock of screen torpedoes, each one a repeater, and each designed to scatter seeds of destruction wherever it strikes.

WHERE SHOULD EDUCATION STOP?

Perhaps only one per cent or one-half per cent are of this type, but are not even one million people per week worth safeguarding?

Let us now get right down to the bottom of the matter and see whether this whole discussion is sense or nonsense. Is there such a thing as evil after all, or isn't it best for the people to learn all they possibly can about everything, so that by-and-by we will all be fully educated and so tough that nothing can feaze us?

Perhaps this might be true in the long run, but this life is short at best, and there is not time to crowd it all in. Is there then any dividing line between proper and improper; between right and wrong? Or is it all a matter of different standards?

Without going into the abstruse depths of philosophy let the answer be that there surely is a dividing line, but it is the product of all the conditions. It is easily determined once the laws and principles are well understood.

Vice is not an indefinite or relative thing. It is just as absolute and surely destructive as any other poison. True it may be partaken of moderately without fatal results, but it is essentially harmful. As well excuse the moderate use of opium or cocaine. What then is vice? Here are two time-honored answers:

Vice is a monster of so hideous mien
That to be hated needs but to be seen,
But seen too oft—familiar with her face—
We first endure, then pity, then embrace.

Shakespeare's very definition is a direct warning to the motion pictures, for what is seen more often than the pictures, be they good or bad? And should the monster show his ugly mug once he is more than likely to come so often that familiarity might lead to all of the other complications.

There is more encouragement in the other definition.

Vice is the cob-web that grows over the faces of men who prefer darkness to light.

If there is one thing the pictures do in full measure, it is to turn on the light, and many a jowl-scarred misanthrope has had his wrinkles softened by a trip to a motion picture show. The two and a half per cent didn't hurt him any and the rest of it did him a lot of good.

In fact there is no question at all about the tremendous preponderance of the good influence and positive educational value of the pictures, but the would-be censor does not look at these things. He sees only the other side, and we are now interested in determining whether or not there is any other side.

What is Shakespeare's grotesque monster? Does he really exist, and is he dangerous? And should he always be kept in the background so that we tender mortals shall be allowed but an occasional horror-stricken glimpse?

Yes, he does exist, but not in the likeness of anything that could be given concrete form, or even pictured upon a screen. He is a creature of thought, of evil thoughts, nothing more. He is of himself invisible, but he may blight the appearance of God's fairest creatures. He may force his vile presence over the very threshold of purity, until all semblance of beauty, and inspiration and sanctity have been blotted out.

He may tempt the purveyor of art to lower his standards until he becomes little more than a sensation-monger. He has done this and is doing it for the stage. How then can we assume that the successor of the stage will escape, especially since the field of temptation has grown out of all proportion to the balancing influences of education, higher standards, and better qualities in the executive personnel of the industry.

In short there is absolutely no excuse for injecting into the photoplay the reactionary and vicious mistakes of the stage, and no possible reason for it except temporarily increased receipts.

The great problem right now is to decide once and for all just what is the difference between the fit and the unfit, for the whole difficulty seems to be due to the hazy notions and generally insufficient knowledge of the laws and principles involved.

Leaving aside all matters of religion, politics, race prejudice, and other things now controlled by opinion rather than knowledge, as subjects which will profit rather than lose by illumination, let us try to grasp the elemental ideas of opportunity, progress, and retrogression, so that we may intelligently separate the good from the bad.

Opportunity is the one fundamental American principle. It includes and guarantees liberty, freedom, and independence. It is itself guaranteed by a spirit that hovers over this land, and inspires in some degree the heart of every citizen. Should you seek to scatter seeds of error, of reaction, or of vice, all of which violate and tend to nullify opportunity, sooner or later you will hear and heed the scourging voice of that spirit, which says: "You shall not poison these little ones."

What then is poison? It is anything that hinders progress, whether by directly searing the soul, as by inculcating bad habits that a life-time will not outgrow, or by crowding out opportunities for good and useful living, as by filling a garden none too large with seeds of the weeds of wasted thoughts.

Of the possible bad habits, many are past all hope of direct control at present, but as most of them are based on habits of thought, and the worst of them are directly traceable to the force of example, we shall continue to see the motion picture brought to the bar of public opinion as the chief offender, even though the percentage of its mistakes may be comparatively small.

GOOD AND BAD

Right here we will turn on a little side light that may clarify certain mental muddles that have distressed many well-intentioned people. Just as there are some things inherently bad, which should not be seen at all, at least not without adequate preparation and explanation, so there are many beautiful and wholesome things that have been held to be evil, for the simple reason that a narrow and shallow and ignorant class of self-styled purists has misunderstood the nature of their ignorance.

One of these things is the human body, and another is the normal expression of human emotion. These have, of all things beautiful, had the hardest struggle for sensible, not to say official recognition. The body has, from time immemorial, been bandaged in inartistic clothing, whose atrociousness has been blamed upon the unoffending body itself, while similar offenses against the grand passion have caused it to be tabooed as a subject for general discussion and development. Here the trouble is that there is not enough light, and here is one of the privileges of the pictures.

Only see to it that when the lights are turned on they shall not reveal a trace of the withering monster that never yet has brought aught but calamity in his wake.

There is positively no need for courting the disapproval of anyone, least of all of permitting the critics of the screen to justify in any degree the fault-finding which has already proven so annoying.

THE OTHER SIDE OF THE PICTURE

There is a creature so much more inviting, so beautiful in every way where the monster is ugly, and withal so profitable and dependable, whether as friend and working partner, or as an ideal to work toward, that none who know the contrast, can be expected to hesitate, so the death of the official censor and the steady, uniform advance of the picture industry will be hastened by a general grasping of the real truths which underlie the spread of education, one little glimpse of which is afforded by the following description of the monster's natural enemy and prey.

Virtue is a maid so fair and true
That to be honored is her simple due,
But ah, the shining glory of her face
Oft proves too bright for our benighted race.

LOCAL CENSORSHIP

Theoretically, there should be no need for local censorship, assuming that there are adequate Federal laws and a National Board to whom all films would be submitted for approval.

In reality, however, this is far from being the case, and even if it were, the inhabitants of any given locality would be pardonable should they doubt the efficacy of such laws or such a board.

They know that there is a National Pure Food Law; they also know that three-fourths of their food contains poison, but what are they going to do about it? They must feed it to their children or half starve them.

Why should they not resent the idea that mental and spiritual poison may lurk in the pictures that they permit their children to see? Must they half starve their minds as well?

There is one important difference between supper at home and a photoplay around the corner. You can at least decide what your family shall eat, but the photoplay is like a meal in a restaurant and you know full well that in spite of the National Pure Food Law there may be ptomaines in the soup and the fish, and disease germs in the milk and the ice cream besides chemical poisons in the ketchup. Can you blame anyone, therefore, for being somewhat solicitous about mental food for his family? You should not be too harsh on the average citizen who, as a rule, is rather helpless when it comes to making selections, whether it be in regard to physical or mental refreshments.

It is well enough to say that there are plenty of wholesome foods and that he could change his dietary, etc.; also that if he does not like the restaurant supper, he does not have to eat it; but don't rub it in by adding that he and his flock can also get up and leave an offensive photoplay. Just remember, you wise ones who fear that censorship will trim your earnings, that they are all children at the photoplay, and it simply can't be done. They sit right there, fifty millions of them, and take what you hand them.

Be Loyal to the Men Behind the Game

IN an enormous glass studio, set in the midst of five million dollars worth of buildings and permanent equipment, a hundred people are applying themselves to the production of a feature film. They have been at it for months. It is the adaptation of a classic, and it must be right in every detail. Before it is finished its cost will run into many thousands of dollars; for time is money.

Classics are free to all. They carry no copyright, and whosoever will may film them. Just before the big feature is ready another "company" with no studio, no equipment, no investment, announces in big type and blatant phrases the release of THE SAME FEATURE. At least it has the same title, and conveys the impression that it is identical. And the no-investment company has produced this masterpiece in TWO WEEKS!

It can't be done, of course. But something can be produced, even in twelve days; and when it comes to descriptions and claims, adjectives do not care how they are used. The company that is nothing but an incorporation can shout just as loudly and use just as strong words as the company with a million dollar plant and a quarter-century of history. Lots of people judge a man or a company by the volume of its noise and the boldness of its assertions.

Pure bunk soon evaporates. Nobody can make big claims and continue to get away with it without delivering the goods. But there is a good crop of new suckers every week, even in the motion picture exhibiting business. They are the fellows who fall for the "feature" produced in three days, which presumes to compete with the honest film turned out after months of labor in a big, substantial, experienced studio. Even if the more intelligent exhibitors get wise early in the game, the glittering and unstable paper producer continues to sell his hair-trigger masterpieces.

There are quite a respectable number of film producers who started in this business before there was even a regular exhibitor. They had to make a demand for their films after the films were completed. They were good business gamblers, and they won out because they deserved to win. It was their supreme faith in the business and its future (for it had no present then) and their confidence in the still unborn exhibitor that made them take the big chance and go through hardship and worry to build up a new industry. Now they are entitled to their reward—which is nothing in the world but an equitable share of the business. They are not the ones who make the big profits; it is the fellow with the new corporation and the big words for small features that gets the gravy.

Be loyal to the fellows who made the game. If you don't care anything about the ethics of it and call it sentiment, try to realize for your own good that no company organized to pick up the driftwood of the film business and sell it for features can possibly give you the stuff that a company with experience and property and reputation and a long payroll can offer.

The exhibitor who plays the public for suckers is one himself. He is on his way to the used-to-be yard. The public has had a better education in pictures than it has in anything else. Almost anyone can tell you today whether a film is good or rotten. And they won't stand for the rotten stuff any more, either. You've got to give them the best there is. You've got to give them what the big studios turn out, because you don't take any chances then—you know it's right.

We don't want to knock the little fellow, or the big fellow either, who is just breaking into the film business with a new idea and a lot of enthusiasm. He will have a hard enough time without our knocking him. And if his stuff is right he will get away with it, too; but not otherwise. But the only hope he has for success is to go slow and aim at establishing a permanent business with a well equipped factory.

When a man has spent the best years of his life building up a business, and has just got it to where it looks good to him, where he has all the facilities for making real pictures and has worked economy in and extravagance out of his productions, he can get results for his patrons that no one can offer with less experience. When those patrons turn away then and help the get-rich-quick promoter grow fat, it looks like ingratitude.

Now your hard-headed business man really don't give a whoop if you call him ungrateful, or disloyal, or anything else, if he thinks he is getting his. But when he is getting stung instead, it is time to wake him up.

The producer with an establishment is the fellow behind the business and pushing it. The other kind are trying to make the business push them. The man behind deserves your business. But it is not merely a matter of deserving it. It is a question of common sense; of whether the exhibitor will take the best he can get for his money or the worst. And when the best is the most deserving, too, you've just got to be loyal to the men behind the game.

FEATHERSTONE'S ARTICLES

JUST the other day the representative of a large manufacturer told us that "Fundamental Principles," the series of articles by Featherstone running now in Motography, was the best stuff of its kind ever printed. Now we knew that long ago; but a publisher never does know whether or not his efforts to supply the best are appreciated by his readers.

No magazine or trade paper ever published could say that all of its contents was read by all of its readers. Trade papers especially have busy readers, many of whom will not take the time even to investigate articles which do not bear prima facie evidence of usefulness.

To those who, for any reason, have missed reading Featherstone, we want to say right here and now that they have missed something. And we repeat that Featherstone's articles are absolutely the best ever published for exhibitors and operators of motion pictures.

All good things are imitated, and one of the eastern trade papers is just starting a series of articles similar to those of Featherstone's—after ours have been running for eight months. Of course, any one with a knowledge of the scientific principles of motography is privileged to write articles on the subject. They may be good at that; but they will not be Featherstone articles, for the simple reason that no one else has the combination. A few have a thorough knowledge of the science, but cannot present it clearly to those who have not. Many others can write their information in lucid and simple language—but lack the science. Featherstone has both. No one who has read him can doubt that for a moment.

So we want to impress again upon our readers the importance of reading Featherstone's articles—an opportunity for information that comes only once in a decade. We don't ask you to take our word for it. It is there; read it—read it!

Featherstone is only one of the exclusive features offered to our readers which make Motography by long odds the best motion picture paper published today—or ever published. But his stuff alone, without considering the rest of it, gives more live thought-food in every installment than you can get anywhere else in this business.

BIG THREE FORM TRIANGLE FILM

Some Current Releases Reviewed

"The Girl From His Town"

Reviewed by John C. Garrett

"THE GIRL FROM HIS TOWN," scenarioized from the novel by Marie Van Vorst, is the four-reel Mutual Master-Picture to be released on August 5, featuring Margarita Fischer and C. Elliott Griffen. The latter does some very good work, and an all-star cast supports these stars. With splendid photography, scenes, both interior and exterior, which are beautiful, and a number of elaborate costumes, which Margarita Fischer wears well, this picture will prove a great success. It will be a special drawing card to the women, because of the many gowns worn by Miss Fischer, and the play in itself, because of its good cast, interesting plot, and popularity of Miss Fischer, will draw the masculine members to view the production.

Sarah Towney, a black-haired maiden, lives in a small Montana town, and works at the soda fountain stand. To this stand comes, amongst others, Dan Blair, who spends much of his time at the soda fountain, and one day, after consuming six cholocate sodas at one sitting, he leaves, and arrives home just in time to bid farewell to Lord Galory, an Englishman, who has been staying at Blair's home. The Englishman gives Blair an urgent invitation to visit him some time, in the near future.

Sarah Towney gives a singing recital in the town church, and it so happens that an operatic impressario, who has been forced to stay in the small Montana town overnight, hears Sarah sing, and is amazed at her ability. Her future as a star, on the stage, is assured.

Letty Lane in her dressing room.

After the death of his father, Dan, remembering the invitation of Lord Galory, goes to visit the Englishman, at his England home, where all the girls, because he is a good catch, set their caps for him. Josua Ruggles, the best friend of Dan's father, fearing for the safety of the boy, comes to England to look after him.

One night while at a theater party with Duchess Breakwater, who is angling for Dan as she needs the money, but really loves Lord Galory, Dan sees a star who is all the rage. Her name is Letty Lane, but Blair at once recognizes her as Sarah Towney, "The girl from his town."

Prince Ponitowsky is a constant attendant upon Letty Lane and Dan is also a nightly visitor at the theater. Both men succeed to a certain degree into working their way into the star's good graces, but the duchess is not to be outwitted and finally gets Dan to propose to her. The boy goes to Letty to tell her of his engagement and she takes the news very hard.

The Duchess of Breakwater gives a musical for charity at which Letty Lane is asked to sing. Dan takes Letty home and returns to the duchess's home just in time to see her in the arms of Lord Galory and hear her tell him that she does not love Blair, but needs his money. Dan blesses the couple and goes to Letty, who is overjoyed at the news of the broken engagement.

Sometime later Dan gains Letty's consent to become his wife and tells Ruggles of it. The westerner fears that Letty is marrying Dan for his money alone and he tries to get her to give him up by telling her that Dan is penniless and that if she will give him up he will give Dan half of his fortune, but if she marries him Dan will be without a cent. For Dan's sake the girl promises not to see him any more and writes him telling him of this decision, although her heart is breaking.

Dan is not to be denied "the girl from his town," and after a while Ruggles withdraws his hateful decree and Dan and Letty are happy in each others' love.

Fox's "Dr. Rameau"

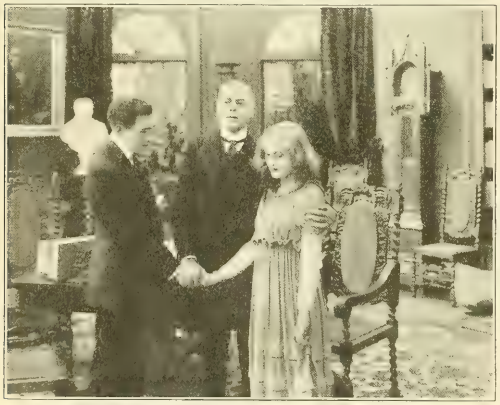
as Conchita Roland; Stuart Holmes as Paul Munzel; George Allison as Dr. Talavanne; and Jean Sothern as Adrean.



The story is an adaptation from the novel by George Ohnet, and in its picturization this attractive theme is every bit as charming as it was in print. In production "Dr. Rameau" is of high quality. The beautiful interior sets are made more impressive by rich lighting effects and photography of great clearness and depth. Will S. Davis directed the production.

After the death of his mother, George Rameau, whose father is a laborer, is adopted by the town doctor. The doctor's belief that little George would be a great physician proves true, for after years of study Rameau becomes famous. Rameau, Talavanne, a brain specialist, and Paul Munzel swear to remain friends all their lives. Rameau has an abounding faith in his science, and in a speech before the medical board he causes much unfavorable comment when he expresses his firm belief that all cures are effected by scientific methods and not by religion.

He surprises his friends by telling them that he is in love. Conchita Roland does not love Rameau but her mother persuades her to accept his proposal of marriage. True to his atheistic views he refuses to be married in the church and he and Conchita are married before a justice of the peace. Conchita agrees to have her portrait painted by Munzel. After many visits to the studio to pose for her portrait, she falls in love with the artist.

Talavanne learns of Conchita's love affair with Munzel and he succeeds in parting them. Rameau does not suspect his wife, whom he loves passionately. Conchita gives birth to a girl and her husband's happiness is now complete. The artist breaks his promise to Talavanne and returns to see Conchita. After leaving her, Munzel is injured by a runaway horse. Rameau, who sees the accident, brings the dying Conchita on receiving word of her lover's death, dies of shock. Rameau is inconsolable. He orders that her room be left unchanged. Adrean, who since her mother's death has been the recipient of his unbounded love, is now a young woman. Rameau gives his consent to her marriage. To secure Adrean's birth certificate he searches Conchita's desk. From letters that are in the desk he learns that his wife had been unfaithful and that Adrean is not his daughter.

Rameau's mind becomes unbalanced and he drives the girl from the house. He is finally persuaded to see Adrean, who is now in a dying condition. His former love for the innocent girl returns and he begs God to give him the power to cure her. Adrean is saved and Rameau expresses his belief in God.

American's "The Newer Way"

THE two-reel production, to be released by the American Company, on July 26, not only contains a good plot, but is an educational picture, and one which will be of interest to everyone.

Joseph Galbraith and Vivian Rich are featured in this production, and do very good work. Mr. Galbraith portrays the character of Ross, a rich inventor, whose wife had left him before he had gained his wealth. By the aid of "The Newer Way" Ross turns a farm which had not been bringing in money, into one of the best in the country. Electrical contrivances of all kinds are used and interesting descriptions are given in this story.

John Bates has much trouble running his farm. His methods of churning are insanitary, and finally no one will buy his butter or milk. His wife and daughters are worn out from the hard work they are compelled to do, and sometime later he receives a letter from George Ross, a wealthy electrical inventor, who holds a mortgage on the farm, telling him that the payment of the mortgage cannot be put off any longer. Bates decides to go to the city and see Ross personally.

In his elaborately furnished home George Ross shows his friend his recent electrical inventions. The friend remarks that it is strange with all of his money and his beautiful home that Ross has never married. Ross then tells his friend of how years before when he was a poor engineer he had been happily married, but one day after a quarrel he had returned home to find his wife gone and he had never heard from her since.

Bates calls to see Ross and tells him that the farm is not paying well and that he would like more time in which to pay the mortgage. Ross says that if Bates will use the newer ways his farm would be a good paying proposition. The farmer then tells Ross to try it himself for a year and after some time Ross goes to the farm to spend one year and use the newer ways.

Arrived there the inventor finds things in a very bad state of affairs. He has electrical devices of all kinds installed, electric light put all over the house, electric stoves, heaters, water system, churns, bottling system, washer, and all the modern devices. He then asks all the neighboring farmers over to see the results of this and they all agree that the "newer way" is the best.

The friends enjoy themselves with the girl's pet.

Ross has made the acquaintance of a mountain girl, Betty, and between the two a strong friendship has sprung up. They spend many happy days together and enjoy themselves playing with the friends which Betty has made of the birds and rabbits. On the day of his departure from the farm Ross does not find Betty at their accustomed meeting place and starts out in the direction from which she has always come. He arrives at a house on the mountain side and knocks at the door, where he recognizes in the woman who answers his wife and a reconciliation is effected. Then Betty comes down the mountain side and is told that Ross is her father.

SELIG'S release for July 29 is "The Isle of Content," a three-part drama, combining the passionate love of a young girl, unused to the ways of the world, and the contentment to be derived from the salt spray. Anna Luther plays the part of Jane, whose father takes her to a deserted island which he has called the "Isle of Content." Al Filson assumes the role of Jane's father, Capt. Spragot and Mrs. Spragot is played by Mrs. Watson. The hero, Ralph Ashton in real life, is Eugene Pallette. Vivian Reed is Rossett Van Nott, the adventuress who almost wrecks Jane's life.

A scene from Selig's "The Isle of Content."

Capt. Spragot, a man of the seas, drifts out of his course and lands on a small island, unchartered. The island is so beautiful that he enters it on his chart, expecting to go there some day. Mrs. Spragot, the captain's wife, did not like to have her husband go off on these sea voyages, and so he has promised her that, on his return, this would be the last trip he would take.

However, when he returns home he is made such a good offer that he signs a contract to be the captain on just one more trip. He tells his wife this, and she pleads with him not to go, but he goes. The captain's friend, John Western, secretly loves Mrs. Spragot, and when Spragot will not heed her pleadings she listens to Western and plans to elope with him. Before the captain starts he feels sorry for breaking his promise and decides to return, but when he sees his wife leaving with Western he takes his little daughter Jane and they go to the "Isle of Content" to live.

One day, Jane, in her playing, finds some beautiful diamonds, but her father tells her to leave them alone as they cannot bring her anything but unhappiness. The child puts the diamonds back and soon forgets them.

Some years later, after the death of her father, Jane in her ramblings finds the body of a man and drags it to shore. It is the body of Ralph Ashton, a wealthy society man, who, having lost his inheritance, worked on board a ship as steward. The ship was wrecked and his body drifted ashore. Jane nurses him back to life and they learn to love one another.

Ashton, in looking for an old coat, comes upon the diamonds and then his one wish is to get back to civilization, to sell the diamonds and once more live the life he has become accustomed. Every day they try to signal ships and finally one day a ship sights them and picks them up. Ralph disposes of the diamonds, which bring a small fortune to Ralph and Jane, who are now married. But Jane is not happy for she cannot adjust herself to the changed conditions.

Because Jane cannot be happy, Ralph leaves her and seeks other company. Accidentally Jane overhears Rossett Van Nott and Ralph planning to elope and she decides then and there that this other woman shall not have Ralph as she dragged him out of the sea and she, Jane, will have him and no one else. It is then she thinks of what her father told her and she wishes that she had destroyed the diamonds.

One night when Ralph is returning home he is slugged, drugged and carried to a ship where Jane is awaiting his arrival. They keep Ralph drugged until the ship reaches the island and when Ralph, in the little old hut on the "Isle of Content" regains consciousness and sees where he is a soft, tender light comes into his eyes for he realizes that here he will have contentment and love.

Lubin's "The Dead Soul"

Reviewed by John C. Garrett

THE three-reel Lubin production to be released on the General program on July 28 is "The Dead Soul." This picture is full of action and contains many exciting hand-to-hand battle scenes and is wound around a good story.

It is excellently photographed with realistic scenes taken on the wharves and on board a sailing vessel. L. C. Shumway takes the part of a minister of the gospel, who is shanghaied onto a sailing vessel and there is beaten mercilessly by the souless captain who is portrayed by George Routh.

The captain of a vessel, who is domineering and brutal, gives orders to have some sailors shanghaied and he himself on his way to the ship sees a minister. The captain tells his companion that it would be a great joke to shanghai a "sky pilot" on the vessel. He goes to the minister and tells him that there is a dying man on board the ship who wishes to see him.

Several days later the minister has become rather accustomed to the life on board the vessel and is trying to convert some of the old salts. He comes upon the captain abusing the cabin boy and going to him tells him that he must not abuse the lad. The captain turns on him with a snarl of rage and knocks him senseless to the deck.

That same afternoon the captain comes upon the "sky pilot" leaning on the rail of the ship reading his bible. He knocks the bible from the minister's hand and again deals him a mighty blow which stuns the young man, who rises and shows the captain a passage which reads "Whatsoever ye sow that also shall ye reap." The captain leaves the minister and as he is entering his cabin falls to the deck and is unable to rise. The minister seeing him goes to him and helps him into his cabin.

In Algeria there is a crippled old man, who is in love with a young Algerian girl. When she spurns him he kidnaps her and takes her to the market place where she is later sold to the captain who has come on shore. The girl is taken into the cabin and here the captain is attacking her when he is called to quiet a row on deck. The minister has seen the girl in the cabin and helps her to escape.

The captain on returning to his cabin and finding his prey gone immediately suspects the minister and sends the cabin boy for him. When the minister confesses that he had helped the girl escape, the captain lunges at him and hammers him with blows until the young man hits the medicine cabinet and he and the cabinet crash to the floor.

The next day the sailors are stricken with bubonic plague. Later the minister and the captain are both stricken with the dreadful disease. All of the bubonic serum has been lost when the minister had crashed with the cabinet to the floor. He manages to find one dose of the serum which he injects into the arm of the unconscious captain and he himself sinks dying to the deck. When the captain regains consciousness and sees the dead body of the minister he kneels down to pray for the first time in his life.

Morosco's "Kilmeny"

Reviewed by Charles R. Condon

LENORE ULRICH, long a Morosco favorite, and best known as the star of "The Bird of Paradise," makes her entrance into motion pictures through "Kilmeny," a five-part picture from the studios of the Oliver Morosco Photoplay Company. The news as to this being Miss Ulrich's initial screen performance emanates from the Morosco publicity department. Her debut is clothed in the grace, ease, and ability of a veteran. In addition to this, the charming little leading lady has the natural advantage of photographing well.

The story is fairly alive with the wild fascination which is bound to attach itself to well-visualized tales of Gypsy life and outlawry and innocent social abandon, which latter amounts to nothing more or less than an impish and open defiance of convention's starchy rules. The picture contains flashes of refreshing humor here and there, generally due to the calamitous and embarrassing consequences which followed in the wake of the pretty Gypsy girl's harmless pranks.

In one or two scenes, the one in which Kilmeny meets Bob in her foster parents' home, and that in which the girl is presented to her former guardians by her mother, for instance, the action passes over the situation before its full significance can be fully registered, but these little imperfect details are easily forgotten in an appreciation of the graphic manner in which the production is staged, both technically and dramatically. The photography and direction are splendid. Credit for the latter quality is due Oscar Apfel. In support of Lenore Ulrich, who has the titular role, are Herbert Standing, Howard Davies, Marshall Mackaye, Frederick Wilson, Myrtle Stedman and William Desmond.

Angry at being ordered off of the Calhoun estate, a band of Gypsies kidnap little Doris Calhoun. Twelve years later finds her a beautiful young woman, known as Kilmeny and loved by Barouche, a big, brutal fellow who is recognized as one of the band's leaders. Rather than become his wife, she runs away. In the woods she meets Lord Leigh, who is out hunting. He takes a liking to Kilmeny, and induces her to return home with him, where she is turned over to the care and tutelage of Lady Leigh. The latter's brother, Bob Meredith, visits the Leighs, and falls in love with their dark-eyed, bewitching protege.

The girl's affection for Lord Leigh arouses jealousy in the hearts of his wife and Bob. Kilmeny, becoming aware of the disruption which she has innocently caused, believes that it is her duty to steal away during the night. She finds her way back to the Gypsy camp and is there told that she must marry Barouche. Three days are given her to prepare for the wedding ceremony. The poor girl decides to surrender herself to the man whom she detests, but the timely arrival of Kilmeny's father, who has been summoned by Pierre, the girl's crippled playmate, saves her from the ordeal.

The Leighs and Bob receive an invitation to spend the week-end with the Calhouns. They are dumfounded when Lady Leigh presents Kilmeny, introducing her as her daughter. Lengthy explanations are left to the older folks—the girl and Bob seeking out a quiet corner in which to impart messages and explanations meant only for each other's ears.

World's "Sunday"

REINE DAVIS is featured in the World Film Corporation's five-part screen version of Ethel Barrymore's former stage success, "Sunday." Miss Davis, who is well known on the musical comedy and vaudeville stages, photographs well, and is seen to advantage in this pleasing romance. Montague Love, the English actor, who has been seen in many Broadway successes, also makes his first screen appearance as Henry Brinthorpe, the leading male role.

The story is of a charming orphan girl who is reared in a lumber camp under the care of four crude but big-hearted lumbermen, who advise her to accept her wealthy aunt's proposal that she live with her in England. There she meets the man to whom she finally becomes married. The theme is well constructed, and while there are no unexpected or startling developments in the plot, the interest is well sustained.

The picture was produced by George Lederer. The outdoor scenes are suggestive of the rugged country in which the action in the story takes place. Charles Trowbridge gives a satisfying and convincing performance as Jacky. William H. Tooker as Towser, Albert Hart as Davy, Adolph Link as Lively, Charles Dickson as Tom Oxley, and Jeanette Bageard as Lizette complete the cast.

Sunday, whose father died when she was a child, grows to young womanhood in the lumber camp where her father had worked. Her guardians, four workmen, decide to send her to a convent school. The girl is not pleased with this arrangement and speaks of it to Arthur Brinthorpe. Brinthorpe, who is the black sheep of a wealthy English family, proposes that Sunday elope with him.

He confesses that he has no intention of marrying her, and the girl hotly denounces him. Jacky is in love with Sunday, and when he learns that the Englishman has insulted her, shoots and kills him. The girl and her sweetheart agree to keep this a secret. Sunday leaves the camp and enters the convent school. Mrs. Naresby finally locates her niece and asks her to come to England and live with her.

Henry Brinthorpe, Arthur's elder brother, is a frequent visitor at the Naresby home, and the friendship which he has for Sunday ripens to love. He asks Sunday to marry him, and though she loves him deeply, she feels that his dead brother stands between them. That night the girl secretly leaves her aunt's house, determined to return to America. Henry and his friend, Tom Oxley, follow her and arrive at the camp shortly after she does.

Lizette, a half-witted girl who witnessed the fatal meeting between Jacky and Arthur, is jealous of Sunday, and informs Oxley of Arthur's death, explaining that Sunday killed him. Henry learns of this and he asks her if it is true. Sunday will not deny it, as she does not want to implicate Jacky. Jacky hears the question and confesses that he shot Arthur and explains the circumstances. Henry realizes his brother's perfidy and again begs Sunday to marry him, and she gives her consent.

The "Diamond From the Sky" has become wound around the head of a fish, which is caught by Quabba. The hunchback is in the act of grasping the jewel when a pelican, who is standing near, seizes the diamond in its mouth and we last see the bird rise into the air with the coveted gem dangling from his beak.

Esther, Quabba and Tom Blake manage to escape from the house where the terrible fight has taken place just as the police patrol wagon pulls up and the officers gain admittance only after the masked man has escaped. They bundle the old landlady into the patrol wagon and drive off.

Blair Stanley, after rushing out of the house, overpowers a man, who is fixing an automobile, and jumping into the car dons the automobile coat and cap and arrives at Mrs. Randolph's just ahead of Esther and Quabba. He offers to help Esther out of the automobile, but she pushes him aside, telling him that he was the one who had attacked her. He denies the accusation and says that he has been out in his car all day, but his face is all cut up and bruised. The hunchback and Esther leave for the west. Esther goes on ahead and Quabba follows with his pony, cart and monkey. In Los Angeles, Vivian Marston receives Blair Stanley and tells him that he must get her "The Diamond From the Sky" and part of Arthur Stanley's money.

Upon his arrival in Los Angeles, Quabba goes to see Arthur Stanley, but finds he is in the mountains investigating a mine. Marmduke Smythe and Blair Stanley also call to see Arthur Stanley and discover he is in the mountains. Quabba tells Esther of Arthur's whereabouts and she leaves for the mining town on the same train with Marmduke Smythe. Blair Stanley starts for the mining town in a roadster. Arrived at the station Esther and Smythe not recognizing each other are bundled into the old stage coach and drive on toward the mine.

Blair Stanley's car breaks down and he goes to the blacksmith shop where Luke Lovell is working just before the stage coach arrives. When the stage coach drives up and Blair sees Esther he tells Luke Lovell that there is someone in it that will hinder them from getting Arthur's money and slips the gypsy money, telling him that he knows what to do. Luke has not seen Esther but does see Smythe and recognizing him proceeds to fix the coach.

Marmaduke Smythe learns of John's whereabouts.

The stage coach with its unsuspecting passengers drives on and is rolling along the mountain side when it suddenly careens around a bend. The wheel comes off and the coach plunges down into the gulch. Blair Stanley and Luke Lovell, who had been watching for the coach to plunge down the mountain side, go toward it and we last see the wrecked coach and its passengers lying at the bottom of the gulch.

Pathe's "Pro Patria"

"PRO PATRIA," a six-reel adaptation from the story "Patrie," by Victorien Sardou, the eminent French dramatist, is presented by the Pathe Exchange, and the production, in Pathecolor, is a magnificent one. The story is laid in the Netherlands, and depicts the efforts of a group of dauntless noblemen to free their country from the tyrannical and unjust rule of a foreign monarch, whose plans, which were certain of success, are made known to the enemy by a woman whose treachery is the result of jealousy.

Henri Kraus, the distinguished French actor who is famous for his portrayal of Jean Valjean in the film version of "Les Miserables," interprets the leading role. His commanding presence and excellent stage deportment in this picture will long be remembered. Included in the cast are many other actors of fame in France. The splendid performances of all the characters is one of the features of the production.

Many incidents of current interest are connected with this film. The country concerned in the theme is now Belgium, which is at present, as it was then, under the rule of a hostile nation. It was staged in Louvain, and many beautiful scenes of that city, which is now a ruin, are plainly evident, and they supply a fitting background for all the action of the play. Also, an actor who plays a prominent part has since been killed while fighting for France.

Pro Patria is not a war play, no battle scenes being shown; in fact no conflict between armed forces takes place. And as it is based on history, it has no bearing on the present war. This product of the Pathe foreign studios stands out among the many features for the artistic treatment it has received. Such strict attention to technical detail is rarely seen.

The Duke of Alba visits the Netherlands as the representative of his king, Phillip of Spain. The demands made by the king are unjust and a group of loyal noblemen plan to assemble their forces and drive the Spanish soldiers out of the city. The Prince of Orange leaves for the country to prepare the army. The Count of Renaix aided by Count Carlo remains within the city to plan the campaign.

Dolores believes her husband, the Count of Renaix, unfaithful, and in retaliation carries on a flirtation with Count Carlo. Renaix, giving all his time to the plot which is to free his country, sees Dolores seldom. Dolores' lover is attacked by a drunken guardsman and slightly wounded. Through this episode her husband learns of her liason with Carlo. Renaix so humiliates her that Dolores determines to expose his intrigue to the Duke of Alba.

The Prince of Orange awaits the signal which is to announce that the time has come to strike. This signal Dolores makes known to Alba and he orders that it be given. "JUNE FRIDAY," a four-part melodrama, written by Lee Arthur and produced under the direction of Duncan McRae, who also plays a character part in the picture, will be the Edison release of August 6. The story is finely cast and well produced. The settings furnish material support in the way of environment for the work of the competent players. Some rather unique developments, notably the mock-marriage which the unprincipled Duncan goes through with the unsuspecting girl, and which is performed by her own father.

The titular role, which is highly dramatic, is played by Gertrude McCoy, whose ability to interpret emotional parts is well known, and her work in this picture is at all times effective. Duncan McRae thoroughly satisfies in the character part of the drug fiend, June's father. Augustus Phillips is seen as the villainous Paul Duncan, and makes real an especially ignoble type of manhood. Robert Conness gives a pleasing performance as Tom Van Est. Robert Brower as Theodore Barclay, and Mabel Dwight as Harriet Huntley, complete the cast.

Blake's mistreatment of his wife drives her to suicide. Thir child is cared for by Harriet Huntley. Blake is ordered to leave town. Years later we see Blake a valet in the employ of Paul Duncan. His daughter, still living with Harriet Huntley, has been named June Friday. While on a fishing trip Duncan meets June. The girl is greatly impressed by his description of the city, and agrees to communicate with him should she decide to seek employment there.

and Duncan, intoxicated, tries to induce the girl to visit his apartment. June's refusal decides Duncan to offer her marriage. She accepts.

The "marriage" is performed by Blake, Duncan's servant. Some weeks later Duncan sails to accept a responsible position in South America, leaving only a note for June, informing her that she will not see him again. By a locket which June wears, Blake learns that she is his daughter. The girl spurns her father when she learns that he performed the marriage which she had been led to believe was legal.

June, again working in the manicure parlor, becomes acquainted with Tom Van Est, a friend of Duncan's. Van Est asks her to marry him. She is persuaded to accept his proposal by her father. Three years pass during which time June lives happily with her husband. Duncan returns from South America, and calls to see Van Est at his office. Van Est, ignorant of Duncan's former relations with his wife, invites him to take dinner at his home. When Van Est leaves the room Duncan advises June to meet him that night if she would have him to remain silent in regard to her former life.

Unknown to her husband, June keeps her appointment with Duncan. At the apartment Duncan attacks her, and, in "A WIRELESS DETECTIVE" is the title of the sixth installment of the "Romance of Elaine," Pathe's thrilling mystery serial. The photography is very good and one very pretty scene is the secret entrance to the radio station located on the grounds of Elaine's summer home. You watch Elaine with abated breath, when in pursuit of the man making his way to the secret radio station, she is suddenly overpowered by the rush of a great waterfall and flounders around in the water hopelessly.

This chapter of the Pathe serial introduces a novel use of the wireless apparatus. The most common use of the wireless installed on ships is to communicate any trouble such as fire, wreck, or in the cases of war, location of the enemy quickly, but here we find the wireless used as means of detecting the whereabouts of a secret wireless station. Another interesting feature is the controlling of a waterfall by means of a lever. When any one starts to swim to the secret radio station they shut off the waterfall by means of a lever. On their entrance to the station another lever enables them to turn on the waterfall so that no one will know that there is an entrance in the mass of rocks over which the water rushes madly.

Lieut. Woodward receives a message that a radio station in his vicinity is using illegal wave-length and he is asked to make an investigation. Prof. Arnold happens to be with Lieut. Woodward when the message is received and having a wireless apparatus on his yacht he offers the use of this apparatus and together they start out.

Elaine, disguised as a man, is doing a little investigating on her own part. She has become suspicious of the many strange incidents which have been going on around her summer home and before she has gone very far she spies a diver coming up out of the water and follows him. He comes up on shore, deposits his diver's hood and proceeds to swim to some rocks. Elaine follows him, but before she can get very far the diver has seen her and on his entry to the secret wireless station, by a lever, turns a deluge of water on her and she is nearly overcome.

This man has been sent by Del Mar, a foreign emissary, and the message is an important one. During its transmission Arnold and Woodward are busy on Arnold's yacht and they intercept the message. THE NEW WILLIAM FOX POLICY

If You Have Partners Read this Message Aloud to Them

ON September 6th next, William Fox, president of the Fox Film Corporation, the man who has made film history more rapidly and effectively, since his entry into the business, than any other manufacturer engaged in the industry, inaugurates an entirely new policy. A policy that means much to the exhibitor. So much, in fact, that every exhibitor is earnestly urged to read with unusual care the facts which follow and which have purposely been set forth as tersely and crisply as possible and are designed to answer all the questions he may feel inclined to ask, so that, when he has perused William Fox's argument, all he will have to do will be to fill out the application for contract form without delay or questioning.

Beginning on September 6th, the Fox Film Corporation intends releasing every week one great feature, written by a celebrated author and headed by a famous star. Beginning on that date, the One-a-Week policy will be inaugurated and contracts with exhibitors, which are now ready, will read from Monday, September 6th, 1915, to Friday, September 1st, 1916, inclusive, guaranteeing the exhibitor Fifty-two (52) of the most magnificent features it is humanly possible to produce.

This innovation has not been entered into with undue haste. There has been no headlong hurry about it. This policy is a natural development of what Mr. Fox, ever with an alert "ear to the ground" for the exhibitors' needs, feels is a necessary step. Exhibitors throughout the country have expressed their desire for a William Fox Once-a-Week service, basing their demands upon the enormous success they have met with in booking the William Fox features in the past. But the wonderful qualities of those features called for the services of directors capable of meeting the high standards set by Mr. Fox—and such men do not grow on bushes. Not till now has it been possible—after combing the entire field, both here and abroad—to assemble a producing staff that Mr. Fox feels measures up to his requirements; the grade of picture, for instance, represented by Theda Bara in "The Devil's Daughter," "The Two Orphans," "The Clemenceau Case" and "A Fool There Was"; Betty Nansen in "Should a Mother Tell?" "A Woman's Resurrection"; William Farnum in "The Bondman," "The Plunderer," "The Nigger," "A Gilded Fool" and "Samson"; Nance O'Neil in "Princess Romanoff" and "Kreutzer Sonata"; Wilton Lackaye in "Children of the Ghetto"; Charles Richman in "The Idler," and Dorothy Donnelly in "The Thief." The features to come under the new policy will transcend even the notable hits enumerated in every way, impossible though it may sound.

Impossible it would be, too, were it not for the unequaled facilities acquired by Mr. Fox while his plans to accomplish the greatest service yet for the exhibitors of the land, were ripening. This opportunity, therefore, is taken to announce that there is now being constructed for the Fox Film Corporation a studio that, when completed, will represent an outlay of $2,000,000. It is the finest and most completely equipped for the making of great feature pictures in the world, and contains the very latest results of the investigations of the most eminent kineographic experts. Under the same roof with the vast glass studios, and their attendant shops and offices, will be housed a complete laboratory and developing and printing equipment, assuring unequaled facilities for handling the William Fox features, from the raw film to the finished product, directly under the personal supervision of the President of the Fox Film Corporation himself. With such an equipment it will be possible to manufacture greater and more perfect pictures than even the most fervent admirer of the Fox features so far turned out ever dreamed was possible. The law of the studio as laid down to the Fox producing staff is simplicity itself:

"MAKE EACH PICTURE BETTER AND STRONGER THAN ITS PREDECESSOR."

Nor does the William Fox Service stop there. You must call to mind the fact that the president of this concern is himself not only a maker of films for sale, hire or lease, but is the controlling power of a great chain of the handsomest picture houses in the country, numbering more than twenty, and having respective capacities of from Sixteen Hundred to Four Thousand. The William Fox Features are packing these houses. If they do that for William Fox they will do it for every exhibitor in the land. Doesn't that sound like horse-sense?

From the theatrical branch of his enterprise alone, Mr. Fox has amassed a fortune far greater than he can ever spend. He has an annual income that is many times larger than he requires. Mr. Fox is not harassed by financial uncertainty. The Fox Film Corporation does not rest on the shifting sands of stock-jobbery and notable feats of frenzied finance. Instead, it is rooted firmly in the living rock of a sound foundation of financial security. Its directors number such men as Thomas N. McCarter, president of the great Public Service Corporation of the State of New Jersey; Colonel Anthony R. Kuser, vice-president of The Prudential Life Insurance Company, world-famous for its slogan "the strength of the Rock of Gibraltar"; Uzal H. McCarter president of the Fidelity Trust Co. of Newark, N. J. Among the other directors of this corporation are John C. Eisele and his partner, Nathaniel King, of the banking firm of Eisele and King. Mr. King is one of the directors of a dozen banks and big business enterprises. Mr. Eisele is equally prominent and well known. These are the men upon whom, with Mr. Fox, the business integrity of the Fox Film Corporation rests. But above and beyond all this is the unique position that Mr. Fox occupies in the producing world. His interests and yours are identical. He could not afford to give you a mediocre picture, for his own success as a theater owner depends upon a rigid adherence to the pace he has set.

Right here, you may feel inclined to say, "Well, I've got a good theater in a good location. I pack them in right along. Why should I switch from the brand of pictures I'm using to the William Fox features?"

In reply, we give you the following facts: We are the only large firm in the producing business that does not buy a single fraction of outside film. We are the only firm that applies the acid test, administered by Mr. Fox himself and an advisory board of twenty-five of the keenest minds in the film business, to every inch of product. We are the only firm that presents a strictly "hand-picked" program and whose program is not made up of the products of several manufacturers.

"What's the matter with a program made up of the products of several manufacturers?" you ask.

Well, the writer happened recently to take dinner in a New York restaurant. At the adjoining table four manufacturers who are contributing to one program, were talking, and this was part of the conversation he overheard:

Manufacturer No. 1 said, addressing his remarks to Manufacturer No. 3: "The last picture you made and contributed to our program is a terrible looking thing. I don't see how any exhibitor can pay rental and earn a profit from a picture of that kind."

Manufacturer No. 3 replied to Manufacturer No. 1: "You've got a h—— of a nerve to talk to me about the quality of my picture. It is a darn sight better than the one you contributed to our program two weeks ago."

And so these four manufacturers were consoling themselves with the bad goods that they were making, and the fact that each of them felt, anyhow, that the other manufacturer was making goods just as bad as he was! Making, as we do, all our own goods, William Fox follows only one single undeviating standard—to make each succeeding production better and stronger than the last. Our competitors argue that we are not making money! The truth of it is, Brother, we aren't making money YET. The rental of film received from exhibitors does not yield us a fair and reasonable profit because the quality of our pictures is so high, the salaries of the celebrated stars featured in our productions is so huge, that, right now, YOU are getting the profits while Fox, serene and unperturbed, is putting out the best and strongest pictures ever and waiting with cool self-confidence for his returns. How's that for a frank admission? Would any of the "assembled program" firms dare to make it? Not on your terrestrial existence! But we WILL make money. It is a case of the survival of the fittest. Fox knows, and his associates in this great business know, that we are turning out "the fittest" and that the Fox Film Corporation will triumphantly survive and earn its deserved profits.

What a pity it is that you cannot be present at the reviewing and assembling of any one of our productions and see in session our executive staff, numbering twenty-five, fighting, arguing and working till all hours of the dawn, discussing how and in what way the picture can be assembled and released so that it has the greatest merit, value and drawing power. We frankly admit e are in this industry for the purpose of doing a legitimate usiness and to earn an honest profit, but we feel that you should now that our ambition runs in a far greater channel, and that that the world at large may acknowledge that our Company as made, and will make, a larger number of great and tre-endous subjects than any other manufacturing company in e world. To further that ambition we are willing to sacrifice large portion of our profit and, in a good many productions, LL of the profit.

Those not using our features profess to feel bad about the haracter of our pictures because our pictures deal with life. he Fox features don't adopt a sugar-and-water attitude towards e facts of existence. They are real pictures of real men and omen, not pictures of sweet-scented substitutes for human eings, behaving as no mortal beings ever did or ever will. hat is why the William Fox features are so immensely popular. ecause they are real, and sincere, and they do unerringly appeal the hearts and imaginations of everyone who sees them. e defy anyone to see one of our pictures and not find food for ought and conversation in it long after he has left the theatre here it is being shown. And that's the best sort of advertising y theatre can possibly get.

Now, here is where the suppositious exhibitor advances an-her objection.

"But my theatre is in a dandy location. I am doing a corking siness all the year round. If other manufacturers' pictures e inferior to yours why do they fill my house?"

You've answered your own question in the first part of it. n't you realize that it may be that very "dandy location" that counts for your success with the "rosewater" drama of some anufacturers? Don't you suppose that a very real reason why e "rosewater" producers are up in arms is because they can ad the handwriting on the wall? They can't "catch up" and ey're sore. The old-timers can't make the money they used with any old catch-penny feature since William Fox entered e field and showed them what real pictures are; and make no stake—That dull rumbling in the distance is the Doomsday ll sounding the knell to big profits on junk pictures.

"Well," we can hear the satisfied exhibitor saying at this point, "I'll admit that I do get pretty sad stuff put over on me once in a while and maybe what you say about location is right, and if I wasn't so advantageously situated I might see my business falling off and myself with more troubles than Mr. Carter has pills. But, things being as they are—well——"

Listen! Location is a whole lot, but it isn't everything. A strong picture in a weak location is apt to, and does, pull business from a weak picture in a strong location. Day by day more and more people are beginning to realize that the Fox Film Corporation's pictures are better than the best, and they are comparing them with the class of pictures that you, Mr. Complacent, Satisfied Exhibitor, are showing. By-and-by—and the time is shortening—the demand for Fox features will be so great that you will HAVE TO PUT THEM IN. How will you feel when that time comes to find that some long-headed showman has got ahead of you and secured the One-a-Week service?

Moreover, Fox feels that he has a mission to perform for the less luckily situated showman no less than for the satisfied individual we have imagined. His efforts will go on and on, despite the sore-headed producers, till he makes "STANDING ROOM ONLY" blossom out on theaters not so fortunately located by giving them the best productions and the greatest programs ever released.

We intentionally do not give the names of the noted stars we have signed, the celebrated plays and books the motion-picture rights to which we have acquired, for Mr. Fox feels that to do so at this time would be to give away the secrets of his business and let his competitors see his hand. But—Every exhibitor who has read what has gone before, and every exhibitor who has ever had experience, directly or indirectly, with William Fox features, or with William Fox personally, knows that his confidence will not be misplaced. The one ambition of Mr. Fox, which he has instilled into every member of his producing staff, is to produce features that will be BETTER THAN EVEN THE BEST OF THE PAST. For we realize that our exhibitors must be able to earn good profits to continue our contract and pay us promptly. So that you are doubly for a program of surpassing merit and pulling power. If you fall down on this it will be your own fault. If you can't get your contract it will be because you delayed in sending in your application.

"The Mating"

"THE MATING" is a five-part Mutual Master-Picture, released through the New York Motion Picture Corporation on July 22. Bessie Barriscale, who has become very popular for her very good work in former master pictures, takes the leading part, that of Doris Willard, the pretty daughter of a village minister. Miss Barriscale does even better work in this production than in any of her former productions and establishing herself as one of the best emotional actresses on the screen.

The story is from the pen of G. Gardiner Sullivan, who also wrote "The Reward," one of Miss Barriscale's late triumphs. There are a great many dramatic moments in the play and the director, Thomas H. Ince, deserves credit for making this picture one which will be a milestone in photoplays. The scenes in the girls' dormitory, the college campus and at the big football games are most realistic. Miss Barriscale is supported by a good cast, J. Louis Cody playing the part of "Bullet Dick" Ames.

Dorris Willard, the daughter of a village minister, realizes her greatest dream—a year at college. She is a very pretty girl, but her dresses which were made by the village dressmaker handicap her, and when she arrives at college the girls eye her with amusement. She is soon made to realize that she "doesn't belong" there and she is snubbed at every opportune moment and becomes desperately lonesome.

On the day of the big Princeton-Yale football game the girls, more to taunt Doris than anything, go to her room and ask her to accompany them to the game. Doris realizes she is not wanted and refuses the invitation, but cries herself to sleep wishing that someone like "Bullet Dick" Ames, the football hero, would like her.

Daisy Arnold, the undisputed ruler of "the beauty squad," is one of the girls who delight in snubbing Doris and is in love with Ames and well acquainted with his sister Eleanor.

At last unable to stand the snubs and ridicule any longer, Doris conceives a desperate plan. She writes herself a letter in which she declares love and proposes marriage, signing Dick Ames' name to it. She manages to drop the note in front of one of the girls, who picks it up and reads it, and it is not long before everyone is a friend of Doris.

When the news is brought to Daisy she tells the girls she does not believe it, and sits down and writes to Eleanor, telling her of Doris' saying that Ames had proposed to her, and finishes the letter by asking Eleanor and Dick to spend a few days at the college. Ames happens to see the letter and reads it.

Poor Doris is shakingly standing in the center of a group of girls when Daisy proudly takes Dick Ames up to her. Everyone is surprised, but no one is more surprised than Doris when Ames says that Doris and he are old friends. Then taking her arm he leads her out onto the campus.

After meeting Dick Doris is unwilling to carry out the deception, but he insists and before long they are very much in love with each other. The girl refuses to marry Dick, believing that he has asked her out of pity, but through Eleanor's efforts he makes her understand that he really loves her.

Metro's "Marse Covington"

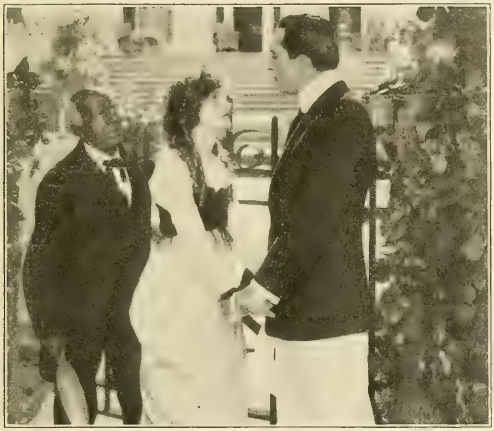
nelly. In the five-part screen version of this engaging theme, which was produced by the B. A. Rolfe Company, for the Metro Program, Mr. Connelly has a wider scope for his art of character delineation than was afforded him in the play which was his most popular vehicle on the legitimate stage.



The cultured Marse Covington, of Virginia, who lives up to the traditions of his family, in poverty, as well as prosperity, is the central figure in the story which contains an attractive romance. The production is of distinctive merit, being ably directed and splendidly photographed. The horse race, an important element in the development of the plot, is particularly realistic and exciting.

In prominent and capable support of Mr. Connelly are Adelle Barker as Martha; John J. Williams as Uncle Dan; Lyster Chambers as Walter Lewis; Howard Truesdell as Edward Bantree; and Paul Dallzell as Jim Daly.

Colonel Covington Halliday, known as Marse Covington, refuses Walter Lewis' request for his granddaughter's hand in marriage. The colonel's only objection to Walter is that he is a Yankee. He relates the incidents of his early life as a soldier in theConfederate Army to Martha in explanation of his hatred for the Northerners. Jim Daly is also in love with Martha. Daly, who holds a mortgage on Halliday House, plans to embarrass Marse Covington financially.

He and another gambler, Bantree, swindle the colonel by "fixing" a horse race. As the gambler's attentions are unwelcome to Martha and her grandfather refuses to influence her, the master of Halliday is turned out of his home. Accompanied by Martha and his servant, Dan, he arrives in New York. Unable to obtain employment, the colonel is reduced to poverty. Bantree, with the money stolen from Covington, establishes a gambling house in New York. Lewis, who practices law in New York, is retained by Bantree to look after his legal affairs. Poverty separates Dan and his master. Bantree, who does not recognize the old negro, employs Dan to act as butler in the gambling house. Daly comes to New York and sells the Halliday estate to Bantree. Dan overhears their conversation, and learns of the swindle. Later, in a fight over a game of cards, Bantree shoots and kills Daly. Lewis has learned from Dan that the gambler holds the deed to Marse Covington's home. The lawyer insists upon the deed as his fee for defending Bantree.

Halliday House is restored to its rightful owner, Marse Covington, who has been forced to enter the bread-line to secure food. The colonel, again master of his estate, rewards Lewis, whom he no longer looks upon as a Yankee, with a hearty consent to his marriage with Martha.

play. The clash between the strikers and the strike-breakers furnishes realism such as is seldom seen in pictures. This is the situation which Tommy has, in the previous chapters, worked so hard to prevent and which was so eagerly looked forward to by the grasping coal baron, Silar Kehr. The central figures do not play a very important part in this installment, as most of the attention is attracted to the workmen, whose growing anger now becomes uncontrollable. Their stubborn storming of the works results in wholesale murder.

The scene which shows the hordes of men and women who assemble and, each person carrying a rifle, march to the offices of their oppressors to demand their right, are as impressive and as exciting as any of their kind which have ever been presented. The people surge down the street in droves, each person as intent upon his mission as though he or she were the only one on the screen. Careful handling by Director Ince is responsible for the wonderful effect which is obtained.

Celestia and Stilleter visit the coal works. The professor outlines his plan for ending the strike to Kehr. The coal baron resents this advice and informs him that the men must be crushed. The workmen appoint Tommy, Gunsdorf and Carson to present the terms which they will accept. Kehr flatly refuses to discuss the situation with the representatives of the workers. After an argument with Gunsdorf, the capitalist orders his men to imprison him and his two associates.

A spy carries word of this to the strikers, whose anger now reaches a high pitch, and armed with rifles, they march to the works to demand the release of their leaders. The strike-breakers prepare for an attack. Stilleter locks Celestia in the office and, with Kehr, superintends the preparations for the attack. Freddy, after many disconcerting incidents, succeeds in making his entrance to the office, where he finds Celestia.

leaders. The men warn him that they are in earnest and intend to fight, but he remains firm. Their first volley brings a quick and effective fire from behind the stockade. Seeing many of their friends killed, the men become enraged and they become more determined in their effort to destroy the plant.

Gnusdorf, with a mighty effort, breaks down the door of the room in which he and his two friends are imprisoned. They meet Celestia and Freddy. Much to his rather deserved unwillingness, Freddy is forced by Gunsdorf to divert the attention of the man who is operating a Gatling gun by placing himself directly in front of it. The plan is successful, for this gives the giant striker an opportunity to overpower the man. The three men and Celestia and Freddy make their escape from the stockade.

VITAGRAPH HAS EIGHT-REEL ON INVASION OF AMERICA

Commodore J. Stuart Blackton of the Vitagraph Company of America has announced completion of the work on "The Battle Cry of Peace," an eight-part picture dealing with the question of the present state of unpreparedness of the United States, and showing what would happen should any of the first-class powers of the world decide to invade this country. The facts on which this picture has been founded were obtained from Hudson Maxim's book, "Defenceless America," but a strong dramatic story has been woven into the facts. Commodore Blackton declared he had produced the picture with the intention of so arousing the public to our present needs that the coming session of congress will make the appropriation which the National Security League and many other patriotic organizations have been fighting for whose purpose is increased armament.

Stuart Blackton.

The picture shows a landing force arriving in New York City, buildings in flames, the exodus of all this city's five million population to the interior. A really wonderful achievement has been attained by showing New York City as a deserted town in the hands of a hostile force.

How the Woolworth Tower would look in flames, the Capitol in Washington crumbling before the onslaughts of the guns of the invaders, and surmising what would happen to that 160 miles square territory which Hudson Maxim terms the vitals of the country.

The advisory board consisting of several of the most prominent government and civil officials work in conjunction with Commodore Blackton in producing this picture, which is supported by such men as Secretary of War Garrison, Assistant Secretary of the Navy Roosevelt, General Leonard Wood and General Montgomery M. Macomb, Theodore Roosevelt, Dr. Lyman Abbott and others too numerous to mention, all of whom have appeared personally in the picture.

An unusual feature of the picture is the fact that Commodore Blackton has dedicated it to the mothers of America, on whose shoulders, he asserts, falls the heaviest sacrifice in times of strife.

Perhaps one scene of the picture will serve to illustrate just how carefully has this picture been made. The scene in question shows, first, a flower bed, which, filled with the choicest American blooms, is shown an instant afterwards trampled down by the heavy boots and horses' hoofs of the invaders. Perhaps the wanton destruction in this one case shows more clearly than any other scene the destruction that follows in the wake of an invading force and will serve to bring home to America just what Belgium in its state of unpreparedness had to suffer.

"Care has been taken," said Commodore Blackton, discussing this picture, "to avoid arousing animosity against any other nation. The uniforms used by the invaders are of a nondescript character, the cap is a creation of my own, and no possible bias can be stirred up by the picture. In choosing names I was very careful and those used are the ones which have become more or less identified as belonging to Americans. There is one exception, however; it is that of 'Emanon,' which is simply 'No name' backwards. It has a foreign sound and serves to distinguish the character from the Americans. In picking the types who were to portray the characters I have been careful also and no country can say that we have aroused against them a feeling of hatred. The strict neutrality which President Wilson asks all Americans to observe has been carried out by the Vitagraph Company."

HEARST-SELIG SPECIAL TRAIN LANDS GUESTS IN CALIFORNIA

The Hearst-Selig special arrived in San Francisco on July 11. The members of the party were ferried across from Oakland to San Francisco and here quartered at the Clift and Fielding Hotels. On the evening of July 11 rubberneck buses took the party up the Pacific Heights to see the illumination at the exposition and from there they took a trip through Chinatown, which was one of the most interesting trips they have taken so far. On the morning of the twelfth the party saw San Francisco Bay from a chartered tug and landed at the Exposition, where they spent the rest of the day.

The Civic Auditorium, where the convention opened, seats 11,040 people in the main auditorium and 32,000 in the whole building. Scenes for "The Seven Suffering Sisters," the popular serial which ran in MOTOGRAPHY, were taken at the Selig Jungle Zoo, where thrilling animal action will be an added attraction to the pictures which will be released in a few weeks in conjunction with the Hearst-Selig News Pictorial.

Leaving San Francisco the night of July 13, they journeyed to San Jose and at 8 a. m. the next day they left in special chartered cars for a ride through the Santa Clara valley. The trip was sixty-five miles long and thoroughly delightful and was put on by an arrangement with the San Jose Commercial Club. After visiting the Leland Stanford University and seeing the ruins which the earthquake wrought and the wonderful way in which the institution has been rebuilt the party returned to San Jose. They next stopped at Big Trees, where gigantic redwoods were inspected, and after a picture had been taken they journeyed on to Santa Cruz and spent an hour there looking over the beach.

Monday the Selig party witnessed a special rodeo staged by cowboys at Caliente, Nevada, the bucking bronchos and branding calves, all of which were filmed. On Tuesday they were entertained by the Commercial Club, a concert at the Mormon tabernacle and a ride through the city of Salt Lake, Utah.

PATHE'S "ELAINE" SO GOOD EXCHANGE SALARIES RAISED

General Manager Louis Gasnier, of Pathe, made an announcement of remarkable interest to his hearers, and one that is very rarely made, when at a meeting of the Pathe exchange managers in convention in New York he voluntarily raised the salaries of his branch managers twenty-five per cent. This was Mr. Gasnier's tribute to the enterprise of the Pathe sales force that has brought the receipts on the serial "Elaine" over the million dollar mark. Pathe has surely accomplished great things in the picture business, and the well authenticated figures given out on the business done with "Elaine" will give the other film manufacturers much to think about.

SARAH BERNHARDT AT HOME A VERY PLEASING PICTURE

The Photoplay Releasing Company, having acquired the rights for the United States and Canada for the "Sarah Bernhardt at Home" pictures, on receipt of the negative from France, entered an order for prints to supply the demands which are in sight already. The film is in two reels and depicts the world's greatest actress in her home life—a life regnant with poetry, with love, and the nicer things of this mundane sphere.

The Divine Sarah is first depicted leaving shipboard at Belle Isle, Brittany. This is done by ferriage, and when the yawls, which carry her entourage and her luggage, approach shallow water, she is seen lifted up in the arms of a stalwart midshipman, who wades ashore with her.

The picture was taken two months prior to the amputation of her limb, and even then gives outward and visible evidence in her halting locomotion of the impending ordeal which followed on the surgeon's table.

The aged histrionic marvel of the world then goes through a course of sprouts for the camera man which is tensely interesting and highly dramatic. She is seen as hostess in her castle, serving of the cup which cheers. She makes a round of her landed possessions, entertaining peasantry and ministering to their wants.

She is reflected in the act of a highly interesting game of tennis—she is seen clambering from rock to rock to escape the oncoming tide. A fete is given in her honor and is followed by a bestowal of favors to those who do her honor. She is seen in her library, in the floral jungles which abound on Belle Isle, gathering, with her donkey cart as a floral basket, the exotics which there abound. She pays much attention to her lobster beds and is seen hauling in the pots with all the ardor and assiduity of one who depends upon this particular calling for a livelihood.

And finally, the Divine Sarah is pictured in her den overlooking the sea. Here she entertains lavishly and showers adorations and adulations upon her pets. All in all, it shows Bernhardt as Bernhardt in the flesh. It evinces the flow of soul which is within her. Her charities are brought out in bold relief.

The Photoplay Releasing Company, through its president, A. M. Gollos, is disposing of state and territorial rights very fast. It is planned to release the picture just prior to the Bernhardt opening at the New Amsterdam theater, New York City, on September 18. From this playhouse in the metropolis, the actress will make a triumphant tour to the Pacific Coast. It will be her final tour. The filmed Bernhardt, at motion picture prices, will follow the Bernhardt in the flesh at $5 per seat wherever the world's greatest actress appears.

VITAGRAPH WIRES CONVENTION

The telegram below was sent by Messrs. Albert E. Smith and J. Stuart Blackton of the Vitagraph Company to President Corey as a note of appreciation for the great work the exhibitors of America have been carrying on.

July 13, 1915.

Mr. M. E. Corey, President Motion Picture Exhibitors' League, Convention Bldg., San Francisco, Cal.

Extend our heartiest congratulations and wishes for success to all exhibitors. We are with you in spirit. Regret we cannot be present in person, but rest assured Vitagraph feels its obligation toward the men who have placed motion pictures on the enviable plane they occupy. Congratulations and well wishes.

—Albert E. Smith and J. Stuart Blackton, Vitagraph Company of America.

CHICAGO GOSSIP

Two very well known Middle West exhibitors were in Chicago this week from Iowa, one being A. H. Blank, Garden theater, Des Moines, the largest theater in this enterprising little city. The other is I. E. Greenebaum of the Casino theater, Davenport. Mr. Greenebaum has just bought the new Garden theater at Davenport and is spending sixty thousand dollars in remodeling this house to be what, in his own words, "will be the finest decorated theater west of the Mississippi river."

Frank J. Rembusch, the smiling mirror screen man, was in town on Thursday, having stopped over in South Bend on his way to Chicago, where he secured an order for a mirror screen from the Majestic theater and an order for a seamless silver fibre screen at the Colonial theater.

Arthur H. Sawyer, who will be remembered as the president of Sawyer's Film Mart, is now the general sales representative for the John Cort Film Company of New York, and is in Chicago with the Cort production of the "Melting Pot," copies of which he delivered to the Celebrated Players Film Company, also supervising the censoring of the picture. Mr. Sawyer leaves here for Boston the latter part of this week, but will return in about ten days, at which time he hopes to straighten up the affairs of the old Kinetophote Company, whose films he has for disposal in this territory.

C. C. Pyle, general sales agent of the Bartola Musical Instrument Company, is one of the busiest sales agents we know, never being found in his office. Pyle is always around where there are any exhibitors, so he appeared at the Sherman House on Thursday, where the out-of-town exhibitors were having a meeting. He says business is holding up very well with him, his chief difficulty being in supplying the instruments as fast as he can sell them.

"Jake" Kempner of the Radium Gold Fibre Screen Company has been stopping at the Sherman House, Chicago, for about ten days and will leave about the 20th for New York. Mr. Kempner has engaged two salesmen for the Chicago office of his company, and while he has been here has made business overtures to over 100 theaters, assuring us that he has received contracts from a great many of them for his well-known screen. Mr. Kempner stays here to make an installation at the Harper theater on Monday.

There was quite a meeting of out-of-town exhibitors at the Sherman House on Thursday, July 15, and we were glad to shake hands with some of the biggest moving picture theater men in the United States, most of whom have been subscribers to MOTOGRAPHY ever since there was such a book. Tom Saxe of the Saxe Amusement Enterprises, Milwaukee; E. Mandelbaum, representing the Strand theater interests of New York; L. J. Dittmar of Louisville; Tom Howard and his partner, N. J. Gordon, of the Scolly Square theaters of Boston, Mass.; Tom Furniss of Brunswick Amusement Company of Duluth; Frank Rembusch, who has six theaters in Indiana; William J. Sievers of the Grand Central and New Grand Central theaters, St. Louis; Aaron Jones of the Jones, Linick & Schaefer interests, are names to conjure with and represent a large portion of the first-run exhibitors throughout the country. The meeting was a little meeting for the purpose of getting better acquainted with each other, and that it was a complete success was testified to by the good feeling on all sides.

W. N. Selig got back from New York Thursday, July 15, and in his pleasant way chatted of business conditions as he found them from coast to coast. Mr. Selig has some very extensive plans for one of the most elaborate productions ever made. He purchased in New York a number of travel books illustrated with actual photographs of scenes in the Sahara desert, which illustrations will serve as a guide for the scenes used in the immense production of the "Garden of Allah," which the Selig company is going to produce. Mr. Selig states that he and his company have worked for several months gathering the essentials and planning the props and properties of this play, and laughingly interpolated, "Do you know that I heard of a film company making films of this kind in six reels in two weeks, while my company, with its tremendous facilities, big staff of artists and actors, knowledge and experience gained in over twenty years of picture making with some of the largest studios in America and a large staff of producers and acting folk, work for several months on a single big production. It seems to me," continued Mr. Selig, "that exhibitors sometimes fool themselves into taking these quickly and illy made productions and do not have enough loyalty for the men who have made film making a business, thereby making it harder for the responsible manufacturers, whose effort is to make pictures that will live and make money for the exhibitor." Mr. Selig promised for some time in the near future a de luxe presentation of "The Spoilers" in its original length of twelve reels. More will be said of "The Spoilers," as it is a production that has few contemporaries in this country. There is no reason why "The Spoilers" should not be an annual, as it is a picture which may be shown every year and obtain the same reception as is given such dramatic productions as "Way Down East," "Rip Van Winkle," etc. Mr. Selig said that in the Clune theater in Los Angeles "The Rosary" has been running for two weeks to capacity business. The theater is decorated so as to give the patrons the impression of being seated in a great cathedral, and the musical effects all tend to carry out this thought.

George Kleine returned to New York on Sunday last and is expected back again the latter part of this week, at which time he will probably complete arrangements for the moving of a considerable portion of his Chicago office to New York, where he can personally oversee it. We will be sorry to lose Mr. Kleine, who has ever proved a courteous listener and an entertaining speaker—a film man of tremendous ability. He brought to Chicago "Quo Vadis," the first big moving picture production.

Diplomatic W. J. Sweeney is having all of his talents called into play with the various operators' difficulties and vicious censorship problems which crop up from time to time. The only objection we have to Mr. Sweeney is that he does not talk. Getting information out of Bill is like pouring water up hill—it can't be done.

The Famous Players Film Exchange is now located on the nineteenth floor of the Consumers building in very splendid offices. The manager, F. M. Brockell, is quite pleased with the large amount of business which he claims to have done during the past month.

Salo Auerbach, who recently opened the Star Feature Exchange in the Mallers building, is a member of the firm, Choyinski, Wolf & Auerbach, which is completing the Strand theater, with a seating capacity of 1,000, on Division street, near Hoyne avenue, at an approximate cost of $50,000, and another house to be known as "The Vision," at Division street and Washtenaw avenue. This will give the firm five houses, its other houses being the Monarch, at Division and Hoyne; Newberry, at Clark and Chestnut, and Pastime, at Division and Robey. Mr. Choyinski of this firm has been a subscriber to MOTOGRAPHY for many years and we are glad to know of the success of these enterprises.

Louis Noto, local manager North American Film Company, states that the "Diamond from the Sky" is booking better than any other picture he has ever had anything to do with. Even the hot weather does not bother him, although he claims that some other serials are being reduced in price in order to maintain their schedule.

The friends of Adolph M. Eisner will doubtless be glad to learn that this enterprising young man is now in charge of the Mid-West Amusement Weekly of Minneapolis, a newsy publication devoted to the amusement field, reaching exhibitors of the Northwest. We extend the editorial right hand of friendship, Adolph, and wish you every success.

J. L. Friedman, manager Celebrated Players Film Exchange, claims that he did a business of over $3,000 in advance bookings on the "Melting Pot."

Harry Weiss of the Metro local exchange has taken the entire sales force who worked under him at the World and is going along like a 90-horsepower automobile. He has booked the Jones, Linick & Schaefer chain of theaters for the Metro program.

N. M. Reubens of the Fox theater, Aurora, Ill., was in Chicago last week looking over a few features. We were very sorry to hear of the death of Mr. Reubens' sister in an automobile accident a short time ago.

One of our subscribers, C. E. Irwin of the Princess theater, Bloomington, stopped in last week to speak about his new theater, the Irwin, which he will open in Bloomington early in August. He made arrangements to take the Paramount and Metro programs while in the city.

J. Albert Goldman of the Standard Motion Picture Company has under negotiation the producing of a five-reel feature for a local playwright, which it is expected will be handled on a state-rights basis.

A. H. Sawyer of the Cort Film Company will give a private showing of his company's pictures at the Hamilton Club. It is a special invitation affair by request.

George L. Cox has entirely rewritten the scenario on Joe Howard's well-known play, "The District Leader," which will be in four reels, with a prologue of one reel, or a total of five. From present plans, it is expected that Mr. Cox and Mr. Howard will take a company to California to produce this picture.

The moving picture department of the Chicago Tribune seriously contradicted itself a few days ago, one day having panned the picture "The Rosary" and the following day giving it a very pleasing review. Newspapers all over the country are going to make grievous errors if picture departments are not handled by a person of balance and judgment. The criticism of a moving picture production is just as serious a task as the criticism of a play, and the critic should be well founded in the fundamentals of manufacture, production, with some slight knowledge of photography and an intimate knowledge of what constitutes the limitations of pantomime work in moving picture productions. The trade is not supposed to take the newspaper reviews seriously.

Fred Linick has been promoted to the position of sales manager of the Photoplay Releasing Company and is making quite a name for himself in this capacity. The whole Linick family is going into the picture business, as his nephew, Max Linick, is now salesman for the Picture Playhouse Film Company, also in the Mallers building.

Our old friend Claud Plough is getting to be quite a theater magnate. His string at present consists of the Casino, Clark and Kinzie; the Liberty, 3705 Fullerton avenue; the Starlight, at Michigan City, Ind., and two others.

NEW YORK ITEMS

Joe Engel and Richard A. Rowland took a few days' trip down to Atlantic City last week, partly in the interests of Metro and the rest in the interests of pleasure.

The fact that "Cabiria" no longer graces Broadway does not by any means signify suspended action on its part. Harry Raver's last trip South disposed of much territory in that direction. The only districts not yet invaded by this spectacular production are to be found in Canada—and they have to be found quick, as "Cabiria" is as wonderful and magnetic there as it was in the United States.

E. A. Wilson, director of the destinies of Day and Night Screens, Inc., visited Chicago last week, and closed a deal with Frank L. Hough whereby the George Kleine people will hereafter handle their product.

F. O. Neilsen, of Chicago, is one of the biggest states rights buyers in the Middle West, is by this time enjoying the baths (sun, mud and water) and the other side-pleasures of West Baden, Ind. Mr. Nielson spent over five weeks in New York City preparing some big things which will soon be ready for announcement. His first intention in visiting New York was to help Mrs. Nielsen enjoy a honeymoon which had been delayed nineteen years, but business intruded so often that he gave practically all of his time to it and postponed the honeymoon until their arrival in West Baden.

Harry E. Aitken, Adam Kessel, Charles O. Baumann, and a few others left last week for the Pacific Coast studios to confer with the Sig trio. They are expected back within a short time.

During Mr. Hodkinson's absence the affairs of the Paramount Pictures Corporation went on smoothly under the able generalship of Jane Stannard Johnson, who, in addition to the little task of managing Paramount, also edited the two progressive Paramount magazines, and looked at pictures. Mr. Hodkinson was expected in New York about the middle of the week.

Although it has not yet been formally announced Miss Rumor has taken particular pains to have it known in and about Universal's office that Agnes Kessler, the author of many clever articles signed "Mlle. Chic," and Alan Watt, assistant director to Henry MacRae, and who accompanied Homer Croy on his trip around the world, are engaged.

Bill Barry and Brighton Beach are synonymous these warm afternoons. Nor has Bill been patronizing the ocean waves and breezes for nothing. He has turned from a white man to one of copper hue, and can lick tracks through a couple of miles of salt water without any special training. During the mornings Mr. Barry is a grave advertising man in the offices of the Nicholas Power Company whose Cameragraph 6A graces some of the best ads in the motion picture industry.

Julian M. Solomon, director of advertising and puublicity for Bosworth, Inc., spent last Saturday at his home in Philadelphia, and went from there to Atlantic City on Sunday to attend the outing given by the Motion Picture Exhibitors' League of Philadelphia. The only program outlined for the day was "good time." All were at liberty to search for it where they thought that it could be found in the largest quantities. —oh, yes. A good time was had by all.

It is rumered that Alice Joyce and Tom Moore may soon be seen in the Pacific Coast productions of a newly formed producing company with headquarters in New York City.

Much has been said about the distinct class in the copy posters and advertising novelties used by Universal in their late campaigns, but the names of the men behind this advertising have not yet broken into print. It is not a secret. They are Nat Rothstein and Ray Cavanaugh, and they are batting one thousand every day. The task in hand at present is comprised of the Broken Coin, Broadway Features, and program pictures campaigns.

B. P. Schulberg, director of Famous Players advertising and publicity and writer of many of their scripts, finished vacationing down on the Jersey shore last Sunday, and was back at his desk on Monday. A little fellow who answers to the name of Seymour Wilson and is not yet old enough to sign Schulberg did as much to keep B. P.'s time filled and interesting as did the ocean and its proverbial breezes.

J. L. Kempner, of the Radium Gold Fibre Screens Company returned to New York early this week after a business trip through the Middle West, during which he established a Chicago office and visited the Jones, Linick & Schaefer theaters in several of the largest of which he has recently installed screens.

Mr. Gulotta, general manager of the Metropolis Film Manufacturing Company, which is producing Chaplin impersonations featuring Minerva Courtney, made a business trip through New England last week, returning to New York Tuesday morning.

A new motion picture theater costing about thirty thousand dollars and seating 1,200 people will be erected in the center of Broad street, business district of Waverly, N. Y., and will probably open some time in November.

NOTES FROM ALL OVER

A new song, based on the great continued photoplay in chapters, "The Diamond From the Sky," is making a widespread hit in cafes and vaudeville circles the country over. The title of the piece is "Like a Diamond From the Sky." Leo Bennett wrote the music and Leo Wood the lyrics. It is published by The Cadillac Music company, New York. A striking picture of Lottie Pickford, heroine of "The Diamond From the Sky," together with a reproduction of the famous trade-mark, adorns the cover.

E. H. Calvert and his company of Essanay players, after three months of picture work in the Tennessee mountains, have completed the work there and returned from the Chattanooga studio to Chicago.

Dorothy Gish and Ralph Lewis are featured in the two-reel Majestic "Victorine," which is adapted from "The Goings On of Victorine," by Julian Street, the novelist. Work upon "Victorine" is in full swing at the Reliance-Majestic studios, under the direction of Paul Powell.

Pittsburgh, Western Pennsylvania and West Virginia territory for the Standard Program has just been acquired by the well-known Pittsburgh exchange owner, H. A. Lande.

It has not yet been decided by the Metro officials in what play they will present Martha Hedman, the Swedish beauty, and star of renown. It is likely it will be "The Butterfly on the Wheel," a play that had considerable popularity in New York a few years back.

The Itala company promises a private press showing of its newest New York-

Torino production about August first. The running time of the new film is two hours. Agnes L. Bain wrote the detailed scenario from the suggested plot by D'Annunzio, whose original creation, "Maciste," is the principal character in the new offering.

Robert Harrom, the Griffith juvenile player, is very prominently cast in D. W. Griffith's coming feature production. Harron's part is a great character one, which figures all through the story. Other principals in the same cast are Mae Marsh, Miriam Cooper, Walter Long, Mary Alden, Tom Wilson, Ralph Lewis and William Brown.

Herbert Rawlinson, star of the Universal Film Manufacturing Company, has been crowned king of Universal City. Following the recent national beauty contest at Universal City, in which sixty-one of the most beautiful young women from every state of the nation were entered, a popularity contest among the men employed at the picture city was suggested, and the suggestion met with instant favor. When the votes were counted it was found that the name of Herbert Rawlinson led all the best, and the famous Sanford Quest of "The Black Box" serial, was acclaimed "King of Universal City."

Little Will Archie and his "Pee-wee Picture Players" having finished the first of the fun films they are under contract to produce for the Headline Amusement Company, will start work on the second of the "Pee-wee" series a week from Monday. Title of the second comedy will be "Pee-wee's Honey-moon."

"The Climbers," the next Lubin release, in five parts, on the V. L. S. E. program, will introduce to "Big Four" enthusiasts Gladys Hanson, widely known as a Broadway star, and one of the most versatile leading women on the stage today.

Ben Wilson has just signed a two-year contract with the Universal. Mr. Wilson left Edison a year ago and is now a fixture with the Big U for the next two years, with which company he will star and direct big productions.

Ben Wilson and Dorothy Phillips are down in Alexandria, Va., filming scenes for "A Gentle Volunteer," a three-reel Rex feature.

"Roger La Hunte," produced by Augustin Daly some years ago with Wilton Lackaye in the stellar role, is now being filmed with Mr. Lackaye playing his famous role.

Wid Gunning, who conducts the motion picture department in the Mail and a general publicity and film specialist office in the Times building, has been busily engaged for the past few weeks in the joint occupation of host and city guide to Miss Helen Fickardt of Circleville, Ohio, and to his sister, Miss Helen Gunning of Chillicothe, Ohio, who are visiting him in New York City.

Marie Cahill and her company including Sam Hardy, her leading man, have just returned from Greenwich, Conn., where they have been completing the final scenes for "Judy Forgot," the Universal feature.

D. W. Russell, well known in motion picture circles in the West, where for some time he represented Mina Films, with headquarters in Chicago, has been appointed general sales manager, and is now at the eastern offices of this brand.

Gordon MacGregor is the latest photoplayer to join MinA Films at their Los Angeles studios. He makes his first appearance with this brand in "On the Job," a one-reel comedy to be released July 22.

Toto, the Malayan ape, who belongs to Lady Grace E. Mackenzie, after a gay evening spent in Broadway cafes was found in police custody lately.

Previous to entering motion pictures, Wilmuth Merkyl enjoyed several years of success in grand opera in Europe. Mr. Merkyl is now playing the leading part in "The Victory of Virtue," a six-reel feature being produced by the United Photo-Plays Company.

In line with their endeavor to have every part of their output reach the highest standard of perfection, Mina Films is directing especial attention to their posters.

The Los Angeles premiere of Oliver Morosco's photoplay "The Wild Olive," was made a special event by the management of the Alhambra Theater on Hill street, where the stirring American-Argentine romance was exhibited. The feature which was responsible for the packed house was the announcement that Myrtle Stedman herself, co-star in "The Wild Olive," with Forrest Stanley, would give a selected program of songs.

Director Francis Powers, "Billie" West, Frank Bennett, Lucille Younge, George Berranger and Olive Adair are at work at the Reliance-Majestic studios on "The Bride of the Sea."

Oscar Apfel, a recent acquisition to the producing staff of the Fox Film Corporation, will place in rehearsal within a few days, a five-part photoplay, the title of which has not been disclosed as yet. Harry Spingler has been elected to portray the juvenile lead in the feature.

The Essanay Company took two thousand feet of film recording various events of the National Advertising Men's Convention, in Chicago.

Complete Record of Current Films

Believing the classification of film pictures by the nature of their subjects to be of greater importance to the exhibitor than classification by maker, MOTOGRAPHY has adopted this style in listing current films. Exhibitors are urged to make use of this convenient tabulation in making up their programs. Films will be listed as long in advance of their release dates as possible. Film manufacturers are requested to send us their bulletins as early as possible. Reasonable care is used, and the publishers cannot be responsible for errors.

Y.; gas well at McKeesport spouts $7,000 worth of gas daily and defies efforts of men to put cap over bore; civil service takes over beach guards in Chicago; first bale of cotton of 1915 crop at Houston, Texas; boy scouts take charge of street car lines of Rome; Ida Elionsky, 16 years old, with hands and feet tied, swims dangerous current of Hell Gate; William J. Bryan speaks at Novel Independence Day celebration, San Francisco, Calif.; locomotives crash into each other at Emeryville, Calif.

Hearst-Selig News Pictorial No. 58.—HEARST-SELIG—JULY 22.—Federal inspectors hold test of life-saving efficiency of big lake steamers at Chicago; big silver fox ranch to grow furs is started at Holbrook, Mass.; Ed Walsh of the Chicago White Sox pitches a game after Fort Sheridan soldiers raise city pennant at Chicago; scenes along the battle line near Petka, Serbia; scenes along the battle line in France; New York National Guards build bridge and demolition squad destroy it with trotol gelatine; great crowds follow Thaw after he is declared sane in New York; liner Orduna narrowly escapes fate of the Lusitania and arrives in New York; heavy rains swell the Merrimac river at Lowell, Mass.

The Sky Hunters—(THREE REELS)—ESSANAY—JULY 24.—After the death of her father, "Little Chief" assumes the leadership of the "sky hunters," a notorious band of robbers who live in the mountains. The sheriff of the county has notified the secret service bureau at Washington and Steve Jackson is sent to investigate. "Little Chief" meets and falls in love with the secret service man. When the "sky hunters" capture Jackson and are ready to hang him "Little Chief" intercepts and she and Steve Jackson return to Washington. For further review see page 210, this issue.

F. M. E.

A Letter to Daddy—BIOGRAPH—JULY 26.—Zoe Bech and Jack Mulhall featured, with an all star cast. Old Townsend, the broker's little daughter, spies a long envelope which her father had put money in and takes it to her room. He had put a return address on the back of the envelope and the little girl superscribes on it "To my daddy," and mails it in the nearest mail box. Townsend's son comes home and his father has him arrested. The boy has just been married with the aid of the girl's savings, and just after his arrest the postman comes and on the top of the sheaf of letters is the missing envelope. The money is safe and daddy asks his son's forgiveness.

The Call of Yesterday—ESSANAY—JULY 26.—Featuring Bryant Washburn and Ruth Stonehouse. Sherforth, a college man, who is down and out, is mistaken by Dolly Hoodshaw for Mr. Forrester and considers his strange trampish garb a whim of his. Desperate for some change in luck he assumes the part she thinks he is taking and returns to the Hoodshaw home and there sees a picture of Dolly's brother, who had been a classmate of his. Later a fire breaks out in the house and Sherforth makes a thrilling rescue of the girl, imprisoned in the room with barred windows to prevent sleep walking. He tears aside the bars and drops the girl to safety and then saves himself.

Don Caesar De Bazen—(FOUR REELS)—KALEM—JULY 26.—W. Lawson Butt featured. Don Jose, Prime Minister, encourages the king in his infatuation for Maritana, a dancer, believing that when the queen learns of his love affair she will listen to his suit. Don Caesar de Bazen, a swashbuckling adventurer, is under the sentence of death for having violated the edict of duelling, and Don Jose forces him to consent to marry Maritana. He goes to the girl and informs her that the adventurer is anxious to make her his wife and she consents. After the marriage Maritana is whisked away, while Don Caesar is led away to be shot, but Lazarilla, whom he had befriended, extracts the bullets from the arquebusses and by feigning death he escapes. He pursues the carriage which is taking Maritana to the Royal Hunting Lodge, where she is told she will meet her husband. Don Caesar and Maritana learn of Don Jose's treachery and start out to enlist of the queen. They arrive at the palace to save the queen from Don Jose's embraces and in a duel which follows the prime minister is killed. They then inform the king of Don Jose's duplicity and in reparation he appoints Don Caesar governor of Granada.

The Earl's Adventure—LUBIN—JULY 26.—The young earl of Carnavon meets his ideal, who tells him that the price of her friendship is the Vantine necklace. That night the earl meets John Vantine and resolves to become a thief for the unknown girl of his dreams. He breaks into the Vantine mansion and is discovered by the master, but the earl makes a clean breast of it and tells him how it all came about. Returning from the opera the Vantine limousine stops at the door and a young woman alights. It's the Miss Sylvia Vantine, the bewitching heroine of the railway adventure. She is wearing the necklace, but upon dropping it to the floor, the earl recovers it and after that it's easy.

The Unfinished Portrait—(TWO REELS)—SELIG—JULY 26.—Mrs. Evans, to please her husband, sits for a portrait, to be painted by Guy D'Arcy. Evans returns home and cannot find his wife. He mounts the stairs and finds her in the company of a strange man. Evans goes to Europe and his wife endeavors to earn her own living. A country girl comes to the city and takes her life and her dead body is mistaken for that of Mrs. Evans. When Evans returns he is told that his wife is dead. Later he asks the artist to find a prototype and the artist succeeds in finding Rose herself and as she is posing for him her husband comes in, but she dies before he reaches her side. Privations had caused her life to suddenly end.

Mr. Jarr's Big Vacation—VITAGRAPH—JULY 26.—With his vacation money in his pocket, Jarr is knocked down by a bottle of whiskey which is thrown out of a window, and loses his wallet and all of his money. When he arrives home smelling strongly of spirits, Mrs. Jarr thinks he has been drinking and Willie finds the pocketbook, and Mrs. Jarr takes the money and goes to Uncle Henry's, leaving Jarr home all alone. Some time later he manages to scrape up enough money to get into the country, and after some mishaps arrives safely.

Reapers of the Whirlwind—(TWO REELS)—BIOGRAPH—JULY 27.—With an all star cast. John Howard forsakes his wife when he meets Cora Legrande, a famous dancer. The son, Charles, was coming home from Paris and before he arrives Howard writes to his wife telling her he is going away with Cora. Later Howard is injured in a duel with Voisin, Cora's manager, and when the scandal becomes known, Charlie renounces his father's memory and Cora, hearing of his wonderful work as an artist, goes to sit for him and falls in love with the artist. Mrs. Howard sees the portrait of Cora and recognizing it, asks the dancer never to see Charles again, but Charles has found in his mother's desk his father's note and a miniature of Cora. He rushes to her rooms and fires a bullet through Cora's breast.

Boys Will Be Boys—(THREE REELS)—ESSANAY—JULY 27.—Joseph Byron Totten, and June Keith featured. Because he is determined to write for a living Gerard Franklin disowns his nephew, Benjamin, who goes to the girl he is in love with, Violet Thompson, and assures her he will make good. Soon Benjamin's bills are past due and Artie Fishal appeals to his uncle, who agrees to pay Fishal $1,000 if he can rid his nephew of the writing bug. Graham tells Benjamin he is in love with Violet. Both Benjamin and Graham are invited to Violet's birthday party and it is here that Benjamin tells his uncle he has sold a play. Everything ends well—uncle is happy and Violet accepts Benjamin.

The Toilers—KALEM—JULY 27.—A piece of statuary showing a couple of gladiators attracts Mrs. Morton's attention and she purchases the marble and requests that it be delivered at her home. Ham and Bud look at the statue and then look at Mrs. Morton and are then buried in deep thought. Ham and Bud are carted to the Morton home, they having taken the place of the gladiators, and are placed in the reception room. The butler places some cakes on the table and they demolish the eats. The frequency with which the figures change their poses puzzle the guests and finally the deception is discovered and Ham and Bud make their getaway only to fall into the hands of a policeman, who yanks them off to jail.

Susie's Suitors — LUBIN—JULY 27.—Sue is happy in Jed's love until she falls heir to a lot of money. She is soon set upon by a choice assortment of fortune hunters, who later turn out to be jailbirds, and Jed, after some trouble, finally gets the girl. On the same reel with:

An African Hunt—LUBIN—JULY 27.—A Yankee explorer clambers into his balloon and soars into the air and starts for Africa. His adventures are very extraordinary. The animals, the pyramids and the sphinx itself combine to make his hunt a series of amazing adventures.

The Child, the Dog and the Villain—SELIG—JULY 27.—John Temple closes down his mine on the same day that Burns, a tramp, is kicked out of a saloon by Alvarez, foreman of the mine. The tramp falls in front of Temple's home and is cared for by Mrs. Temple, while Alvarez and his gang overpower Temple and leave to blow up the mine. Temple's little girl is wandering away in search of her dog. She encounters Alvarez and he decides to kidnap her, but the dog saves her life.

The Red Stephano—(TWO REELS)—VITAGRAPH—JULY 27.—With an all star cast. Red Stephano determines to intimidate Jack Schneider, and carries out his threat and steals some of the choicest horses on the ranch, killing one of the herders. After an exciting hunt he is captured and tied hand and foot to a horse and turned loose in the wilderness. Schneider's wife and her two children are captured by renegade Indians. She drives them off and comes across "The Red Stephano," revives him and he expresses his gratitude toward her. He later learns that Katrina's husband is his sworn enemy and is planning to reap vengeance on his children when the Indians return the attack. Schneider arrives just in time to save the little party from annihiliation, and Red Stephano, who is dead, was the means of saving his wife and children.

Poor Baby—EDISON—JULY 28.—Raymond McKee is seen as the tramp who mistakes Mrs. Jones' baby, which is well wrapped up in blankets, for the bundle of clothes he was to receive for chopping wood. After an eventful trip, Pete and the baby arrive in the next town, where baby is passed on from one to another. Pete learns that Mrs. Jones has offered a substantial reward for the return of her baby and he breaks in upon an indignation meeting, caused by the infant's presence in the home of an old maid, secures the now precious baby, and makes his way to the home of Mrs. Jones, where he receives the reward.

"Dreamy Dud," He Goes Bear Hunting—ESSANAY — JULY 28.—Cartoon by Wallace Carlson. Dreamy Dud tells Wag what a great shot he is. He aims at a crow, but cannot kill it and finally decides to kill a bear. They discover a teddy bear and is about to kill it when the mother bear comes out and chases him up a tree and stands down below shaking the tree. The gun drops and the bear picks it up, pulls the trigger and kills itself. At this time the father hurries out, becomes wrathful and shakes Dud to the ground. He grabs hold of him and is shaking Dud when he wakes up and finds his mother bending over him and telling him it is time to get up.

The Disappearing Necklace—("MYSTERIES OF THE GRAND HOTEL" SERIES)—(TWO REELS)—KALEM—JULY 28.—Featuring Marin Sais. Fulton and his wife arrive at the Grand Hotel, and Duncan, a society crook, ingratiating himself into Fulton's favor, learns that the latter's wife possesses some valuable jewelry. Mrs. Fulton is alone and he holds her up and steals her gems, but the return of her husband saves all the gems save a diamond necklace, which has mysteriously disappeared. The house detectives, Frances and Hilton, are assigned the case and Hilton trails him to a den, where he is captured. Duncan mockingly informs him that he has slipped the necklace into the vacuum cleaner and that he intends to return and recover the gem. After a sensational fight Hilton manages to phone Frances of the necklace hiding place and Duncan is captured as he recovers the jewel.

The Dead Soul—(THREE REELS)—LUBIN—JULY 28.—A minister is shanghaied onto a ship whose captain is domineering and brutal. He is a victim of many onslaughts by the captain and later when he helps a slave girl to escape from the ship, he is beaten senseless. The ship is stricken with the bubonic plague and as there is only one dose of serum to prevent the plague left, the minister injects it into the arm of the captain, who later regains consciousness, sees the dead body of the minister and prays for the first time. For further review see page 207, this issue.

Jimmy—SELIG—JULY 28.—Jimmy Hennessy is a lad of the slums who is a messenger boy and responds to the summons of Rose Hargreaves when she wishes to return her ring to Jack Peabody, with whom she has had a quarrel. In his boyish, frank manner, the boy proceeds to reunite the alieniated couple.

The Missing Clue—VITAGRAPH—JULY 28.—Harry Fisher and Templer Saxe featured in this story. Gyvus A. When it comes to dividing the baby, they are both stumped, but Jones who then sees the type of man he is, gives in to his wife. The reformation of this tightfist is laughable.

The Lie—Reliance—July 19.—David and his partner, Caleb, leave for a fishing cruise. After a terrible storm, Caleb's body is washed ashore and when he revives, he tells Joan that David, her husband, is dead. Joan gives birth to a child, and, for its sake, marries Caleb. Three years later, David, who has been picked up by a whaler, returns, but Caleb sees him first. He tells him that the child is his, and that Joan believing him dead, had married him. Joan overhears the lie, and just as her legal husband is about to go away, she rushes to him and tells the truth. Caleb then leaves the vicinity, and David and Joan are reunited.

The Little Catamount—Majestic—July 23.—Featuring Dorothy Gish. Hattie Hemlock, a girl of the hills, is known for her wilfulness and vixenish temper. She refuses to marry Dawson, her father's choice, and later resents the advances of Pete. Wallace, a young stranger saves her from the latter. Pete's jealousy leads him to tell Dawson that Wallace is a revenue officer, which later results in Wallace's being shot. Hattie presumes that Wallace has deserted her, and, leaving a note of farewell, starts for the top of a high cliff. Wallace, however, finds the note and reaches the "Little Catamount" in time to prevent her from a tragic death.

The Play of the Season—(Two Reels)—Kay Bee—July 23.—To avoid a foreclosure of the mortgage on his farm, Caleb Owens forces his daughter to become engaged to Gordon's son Jack. Later, Mary is seen with David Aubrey, the leading man of a theatrical company, and Jack leads her parents to believe that she is in a compromising position. Driven from home, she elopes with and then marries Aubrey. Some months later, Aubrey produces a play that is a success, and Mary, hearing of her father's loss of money by gambling, persuades her husband to send an agent to buy the old home. This is presented to her father and mother, free and clear of debt. Mary is forgiven, and she and Aubrey spend the summer with the old folks.

The Pretender—(Two Reels)—Reliance—July 24.—Henry Livingstone's father states in his will, that if Henry marries his ward, Winifred Gale, the portion will be larger. Winifred has never met Henry, and sends word that she will not marry him. While Henry is on his way to Australia, to look after his late father's cattle business, two crooks throw him overboard, and then pass off as the young millionaire and his physician. After disposing of the business, they return to America, and take possession of the estate. Meanwhile Henry, who had been found and held captive by South Sea Islanders, makes his escape, and arrives at his estate in time to discover the pretender forcing his attentions on Winifred. He rescues her, and Winifred, not knowing his identity, falls in love with him. The crooks disagree, and finally one testifies against the other, thus establishing Livingstone's identity. Winifred marries Henry, and they enter into their full inheritance.

She finally decides to take cooking lessons from Aunt Samanthy. At cooking school she learns that nut cake is made with nuts, so when the minister comes and announces that he likes sponge cake, she buys enough sponges for a good big cake. The parson eats a generous piece, then another and another and then takes a drink of water. The sponges in his inner man gradually begin to swell until the poor parson has taken on the appearance of a toy balloon.

The Deception—American—July 28.—Winnifred Greenwood and Ed. Coxen featured. Violet Day learns that the man she is betrothed to is already married. She is prostrated by the shock and goes up into the mountains where she meets

Tom Sexton, a young mountaineer. She thinks he is a mountain man and he thinks she is a mountain girl and in reality they are both children of the city. Dr. King who has sent them both into the mountains to recover visits the mountains and they both ask him not to reveal to the other that they are not mountain born. The doctor laughs as he realizes "where ignorance is bliss 'tis folly to be wise."

The Phantom Extra—(TWO REELS)—BRONCHO—JULY 28.—Featuring Rhea Mitchell and Richard Stanton. James Whalen attempts to influence John Zeldon, a newly elected senator, to vote against the miners' interests. Hazel Flemming, John's fiancee, interviews him for his home paper, and remembering his pledge to fight for the miners' bill, finds him undecided. The next day an extra is printed, telling of an accident in the mines that caused the loss of the lives of two hundred men. The senator finds this extra under his door, and, remembering his promise, changes his mind and votes for the miners' bill. Hazel tells him that this was a phantom extra, but he thanks her for saving his honor, and embraces her.

When Love Leads—(TWO REELS)—DOMINO—JULY 29.—Mary Dunning, in the hope of reforming her sister, Florence, gets a position in the same office where she is. Although Mary is in love with her employer, William Leonard marries Florence who is extravagant. After a quarrel with her husband, Florence arranges to elope with Rock, a former admirer, but being short of funds, goes to the office and helps herself from her husband's safe. Mary takes the blame for the theft, but Leonard finds a note left at home by Florence, and when she calls to make an appeal for her sister, it is shown to her. The comparative worth of the sisters is brought out, and Leonard's former feeling for Florence is expelled by love for Mary.

Billie's Rescue—RELIANCE—JULY 28.—Jim and Elmer Worth are successful brokers. Jim reproaches Elmer for neglecting to buy a certain stock that would have netted them a large profit. Elmer, despite Jim's entreaties, dissolves partnership and opens an office for himself. He fails, and refuses Jim's offer of financial help. Jim takes his nephew Billie to the beach, and arranges with the life guard to make Billie think he is drowning. Billie rescues his uncle, and is promised a reward. Elmer and his wife receive a message in regard to Billie, and thinking that their child has met with an accident, hurry to Jim's office. They hear of the rescue, and Elmer for the sake of his wife and son, agrees to go back into partnership.

The Straw Man—Majestic—July 29.—Georgie and Dan quarrel in school because Georgie gets in wrong with Carmen, and during recess they go to the cornfield to fight it out. A youngster tells them that the straw man has come to life, and they run, as fast as they can, back to the schoolhouse. Georgie follows his grandfather into the cornfield and helps in capturing the straw man, who turns out to be an escaped convict. The criminal is turned over to the guards, and Carmen, the cause of the fighting, kisses her hero.

After the Storm—American—July 30.—Featuring Vivian Rich and Harry Von Meter. Rev. Jerold Roper and his baby escape from a wreck. He places the baby in a strong bound box which is swept away by the waves and he falls unconscious on a raft. The box floats safely to shore where Jacques and Meg find it and decide to keep the infant girl. Twenty years elapse. The Rev. Roper and Fortells live in the same city. Meg and Jacques Fortell are the head of a band of thieves, but the woman has managed to protect her adopted daughter, Jane, from a life of crime. Lloyd Perry, an evil youth, demands that his price of silence concerning Jane must be herself and her foster parents agree. She is taken to his apartments and there her cries are overheard by Jerold, who rescues her. The minister discovers his daughter's identity by a strange birthmark on her arm.

When the Tide Comes In—(Two Reels)—Kay Bee—July 30.—Nina's parents were lost at sea, and her one joy in life was Glenn Morey's love. Miss Arnold, a young artist, visits the island, and attracted by Morey's appearance, engages him as her model. Nina is neglected and heart-broken, and near the end of the summer, overhears Morey ask the artist to marry him. That night Nina throws herself into the sea. The following day, Morey comes down on the rocks to brood over the artist, who spurned him and went back to the city with Blake to whom she was engaged. The body of Nina washed ashore by the incoming tide brings him out of his reverie.

Universal Program

What Might Have Been—Imp—July 20.—Marion receives two proposals, one from a policeman and the other from a sport. The former promises her a happy home, while the latter promises her a life of ease and luxury. Later, Marion leaves the policeman in the dining room, and sulks into the parlor. She dreams that she marries the sport. In the beginning everything is rosy, but her husband turns out to be a gambler, and before long he is down and out, and they are living in poverty. Her mother awakens her, and she is relieved to find that it is all a dream. It is needless to say that she accepts the policeman's offer.

Universal Animated Weekly No. 176—Universal—July 21.—Mimic war craft on at San Francisco; mountain climbers reach top of 11,224 foot peak, Mt. Hood, Ore.; train blown from track and villages destroyed in recent storm at St. Charles, Mo.; giant gas gusher pours wealth from earth at McKeesport, Pa.; Lincoln shaft unveiled at Long Beach, Calif.; head-on collision put on to thrill spectators at Oakland, Calif.; Harry Thaw free at New York; Lieutenant Warneford is laid to rest at Brompton Cemetery, London, England; cartoons by Hy Mayer.

According to Value—Laemmle—July 25.—Arthur Graham, confidential clerk to Edmund Stewart, receives a letter from his brother James, who has just finished a term in prison. On James' promise to live straight, Arthur secures a position for him in the same office. Stewart is financially embarrassed, and on receiving a note telling him that James is an ex-convict, he calls him into his office. Stewart gets James to consent to stealing some bonds and makes the necessary arrangements. Mabel Stewart and Arthur are to elope this night, and while waiting she hears a loud noise. She shoots the burglar as he is dropping out of the window, and rushes to the outside. Her father and Arthur appear on the scene and she recognizes the culprit. James tells of the agreement and Arthur forces Stewart to confess.

The New Jitney in Town—Imp—July 27.—Featuring King Baggot and Jane Gail. Drake, salesman in a department store, leaves his position for that of a jitney-bus operator. His bus being painted on one side causes considerable trouble with customers, they thinking that it is not the same car. Later, he succeeds in winning Jane, a saleslady, away from the floor walker, and takes her in his jitney to the parson to be married. Having had troubles galore with his bus, he offers it in lieu of a fee, but the minister refuses it. Before long the car breaks down, and they leave it in a field. The auto objects and starts up the road of its own accord. They hide behind a tree and get rid of the white elephant.

The Flight of a Night Bird—(Two Reels)—Gold Seal—July 27.—Featuring Cleo Madison and Hobart Henly. Cyrus Holt, a lawyer, is telling Chase, a young millionaire, to go easy with his money, and calls his attention to Katherine Weaver, who has just left the office. She is a living example of how fleeting riches are. Chase leaves in a huff and arrives at the railroad station to wait for Natalie. Seeing Katherine drop her purse, he picks it up, and jumps on the moving train. He restores it to her, and as the train is going too fast for him to get off, rides to her town. She shows him where she works, and he later obtains a position there, while people in his own town are wondering what has become of him. Circumstaces lead him to board with the Weavers and the outcome is, that his flight has been checked by Katherine.

Life and Moving Pictures—(Two REELS)—L-KO—JULY 28.—The husband, suspicious of wifie's "cousin" follows them into a moving picture theater. The drama on the screen disturbs the conscience of wifie and her "cousin," and suspicious hubby, with the aid of guns, enlivens matters. "Cousin" plays hide and seek, wifie bawls, and an innocent gentleman, who unfortunately gets in the way, is pushed through the screen. Hubby, after the disappearance of the chief trouble maker, forgives his wife.

The Double Standard—VICTOR—JULY 28.—Gertrude Steele tells Helen Ware that she should have the same privileges as her husband, and later, at an informal dinner, the wife is induced to smoke and drink when he does. This following suit leads to an argument and Ware leaves his home in anger. He and a friend go to a theater, and, while there, flirt with two girls in an opposite box. Mrs. Ware and Gertrude, who have followed in Ware's wake, see this little incident. After the show they follow Ware and his friend to a cafe, and take an adjoining booth that is separated only by velvet curtains. Gertrude recognizes two young men friends and invites them to sup with them. Later Mrs. Ware's companion attempts to fondle her, but her decency rebels, and she struggles and screams. Her husband appears from the next booth and, after accusations, denunciations and explanations follow all around, he realizes his error. He has been taught a lesson of equal rights.

Heritage—(FOUR REELS)—LAEMMLE—JULY 29.—Featuring Bob Leonard and Ella Hall. At the age of ten, Kate, a girl of the slums, is forced to go to work because of her father's losing his position. Years later, Marion Melton, who is interested in heredity, meets Kate and decides to test her theory. The little girl is persuaded to make her home with the Meltons. After acquiring both knowledge and polish, she is proposed to by Guy. Her marriage greatly displeases Big Bill McMahon who, while she lived in the slums, acted as sweetheart, friend and protector. Not long afterward, she tires of society, and has a stormy scene with her husband. The outcome results in her fleeing to the McMahons for protection. Big Bill, in a rage, calls on Guy Melton, states a few facts, and advises him to play straight. Guy, after arguing with Kate, succeeds in inducing her to return to him.

The Tale of His Pants—NESTOR—JULY 29.—Jerry Bunk arrives in a small town and, attracted by Mary's beauty, joins the church. Later, he attends a taffy pull in the church basement, and being ignored by Mary, walks to a corner of the room. He accidentally sits in some taffy, and breaks away minus some trousers. 'Liza Jane, an old maid in love with Jerry, enters the pastor's study in search of some old clothes for a tramp, and takes Jerry's clothes. Later on, the minister finds that his suit is missing, also a roll of money. The old maid tells about the tramp, and they start in pursuit. Meanwhile Jerry changes his attire to a long cloak, and when the minister returns, he finds his suit in the proper place. 'Liza Jane is then alone in the study, and Jerry tells of the predicament he is in. She then mends his trousers that had been recovered from the tramp.

The Rise and Fall of Officer 13.—NESTOR—JULY 30.—Lee, a newly made policeman, is not allowed to wear his uniform coat while with the cook. He leaves it outside and enters the kitchen. Jack seeing it decides to use it for a while, and later captures a thief, who is trying to rob his girl. She does not recognize him, but a report is made that Officer 13 is the hero. Lee's coat is again appropriated by a burglar, who robs the girl's house, and loses the badge in his struggle with the girl. She takes it to the station house, and as Lee is about to be sentenced, Jack arrives with two burglars whom he captured.

The Hunchback's Romance—(Two REELS)—IMP—JULY 30.—Rose is the hunchback's protege. Both are employed in Blum's sweat shop. Louis, the boss's son, gives Rose, a note which is later seen by the hunchback. He follows to their meeting place and overhears Louis' proposal. When Rose returns home, he tells her of his love, and how he has kept his promise to her mother to take care of and love Rose. She also hears the story of how her father was shot in Russia as a nihilist, and understands for the first time the reason for his devotion. The next day the hunchback saves Rose from being burned in the sweat shop.

The manufacturer who brands his films and advertises them in Motography is so sure of their quality that he is willing to stand the full force of possible complaints.

He is making something for which he is proud to be responsible. His trade mark secures for him the increased sales that result from satisfaction and identification. At the same time it secures to the great mass of exhibitors the certainty of quality which the known manufacturer must maintain if he is to continue to be successful.

When you book films, book films that are trademarked and advertised in Motography. The manufacturers of such films stand behind them. Your satisfaction is vital to the continued success of the trade-marked advertised films.

Trade marks and advertising in Motography are the two greatest servants in the film business today. Their whole tendency is to raise qualities and standardize them while reducing prices and stabilizing them.

He rushes into the burning building the second time and saves Louis, at the risk of his own life.

My Friendt Schneider—Big U—July 31.—Featuring M. MacQuarrie. David Hoffman is a heartless pawnbroker and loan shark. He helps no one and refers them to "Mein Friendt Schneider," who always aids them. Frank Rodgers is in love with his daughter Ruth, but his father, knowing of Hoffman's methods and cleverness, will not sanction the marriage. Later, Jim Rodgers is induced to hide behind the curtains in the pawnshop and watch Hoffman. Hoffman puts all appeals aside, but calls to his friend Schneider in an adjoining room. Jim finally realizes that Hoffman and Schneider are the one and same person. He appears before Hoffman who tells him his story. Afterward everything turns out well.

A Daughter of the Jungles—(Two Reels)—Bison—July 31.—Jack Packard, while at a ball given in honor of his engagement to Betty Ross, discovers that she is in love with Jim Crafton. Colonel Price tells him how Grafton's father caused the death of Mrs. Price during his hunting expedition to South Africa. Packard finally decides to let Grafton have the girl. Shortly afterward he joins Colonel Price on an expedition to South Africa in the hope of finding his daughter, who had been kidnaped by a negro servant some years before. After many dangerous adventures they find the girl and return to America, where Packard marries the colonel's daughter.

The Village Smithy—Joker—July 31.—Featuring Max Asher and Gale Henry. The widow's maid and the smithy's helper scheme to get the bashful smithy to propose to the widow. Clarence, a tramp, is caught stealing a meal in the kitchen, and is dressed up to represent a nobleman. The widow and Clarence then parade before the smithy's shop, and succeed in getting him jealous. The smithy awaits an opportunity and unscrews a nut from the buggy, which causes them to come to grief. When Clarence takes the buggy over to the blacksmith shop to be repaired, he goes through a rough deal. The smithy awakens, and then proposes to the widow.

Feature Programs

Fox

Dr. Rameau—(Five Reels)—Fox.—Frederick Perry featured in this modern drama based on the novel by George Ohnet. George Rameau, the son of a poor gate tender, becomes the foremost surgeon in Paris. His wife dies, leaving an infant daughter. Rameau is inconsolable. Years later he learns that his wife had been unfaithful and that Adrean is not his daughter. The shock almost unbalances his mind. He drives the girl from his house, and refuses to go to her even when she is thought to be dying. Dr. Talavanne finally persuades him to see Adrean. At the sight of her suffering his love for the girl returns and he works with all his might to save her. Rameau's treatment is successful and Adrean is saved for a life of happiness. For further review see page 205, this issue.

Lasky

The Clue—(Five Reels)—Lasky.—Featuring Blanche Sweet. Alexis Rabourdin and his brother, Boris, are visitors in the American home of Guy Bertram and his sister Eve. Both Guy and Boris are in love with Christine Lesley, a neighbor, and Alexis has similar fondness for Eve Bertram. Nogi, a sort of general valet and assistant to Guy Bertram is a Japanese spy and is planning to get possession of a map which is held by the brothers Rabourdin. A coin which Boris presents to Christine is slipped into Guy's pocket and later when Boris has started for Russia leaving Alexis behind to say the final farewell to Eve, Alexis is strangled by Nogi and the fatal coin which Boris gave Christine is found on the scene. Bertram is accused of the murder and later Boris is killed by an explosion which Nogi sets off. The Japanese dies soon after, first confessing that he slew Alexis, and Christine Lesley and Guy Bertram are last shown clasped in each other's arms.

Kindling—(Five Reels)—Lasky.—Charlotte Walker featured. The story tells of a woman of the tenements, married to a man, who believes that people in their circumstances should not have children. He says the slums consume them just as fire burns up kindling. He tells his views to his wife, Maggie, and she is afraid to confess she is about to become a mother. About this time Maggie is employed to do a little sewing and later she is offered one hundred dollars if she will help a crook rob this house, and as she knows she must have money for the support of the child to come she agrees, and receives as her share a brooch, which she pawns for one hundred and thirteen dollars. The robbery is traced and her husband takes the blame. Eventually the brooch is returned to the owner, who declares she will not prosecute Heine and lends him the amount necessary to take his family west.

Metro

Marse Covington—(FIVE REELS)—METRO.—Featuring Edward Connelly. Marse Covington is swindled and turned out of his home by Daly and Bantree, two gamblers. The colonel arrives in New York with Martha, his granddaughter and Dan, a servant. Covington is unable to obtain employment, and he and Martha are reduced to poverty. Dan is employed in the gambling establishment now being run by Bantree. The servant learns of the swindle and informs Walter Lewis, Martha's sweetheart. Lewis secures the deed to Covington's home from Bantree. The estate is restored to the colonel. Lewis overcomes Marse Covington's objections to his marriage to Martha. In the final scene the colonel is again master of Halliday House, and the young lovers make plans for their marriage. For further reveiw see page 214, this issue.

Mutual Masterpictures

The Mating—(FIVE REELS)—N. Y. M. P.—JULY 22.—Featuring Bessie Barriscale as Doris Willard, the daughter of a village minister, who is snubbed at college by all of the girls, and finally makes the girls believe that Dick Ames, the football hero, is in love with her by writing a note to herself to which she signs Dick's name. Later she is brought face to face with Dick Ames, who has learned of her deception and helps her out by making all the girls believe he is in love with her and soon finds that his pretending has grown into real love. For further review see page 214, this issue.

J. C. G.

The Girl From His Town—(FOUR REELS)—AMERICAN.—Dan Blair, son of a rich miner of America, sees Letty Lane, the star of the stage in London, who in reality is Sarah Towney, "a girl from his town," and falls in love with her. The Duchess of Breakwater, however, inveigles him into a proposal, although she loves Lord Galory. Later, however, Ruggles, who is looking after Dan, and fearing that the girl is marrying him for his money alone, tells Letty that Dan will be disinherited if he marries her. Dan breaks his engagement with the Duchess of Breakwater and finally is happy in the love of "the girl from his town." For further review see page 205, this issue.

North American

For Love and Money—(FOURTEENTH EPISODE OF "THE DIAMOND FROM THE SKY") (TWO REELS)—AMERICAN.—Esther and Quabba go west to seek Arthur Stanley, now known as John Powell. Blair Stanley also goes to see Vivian Marston and learning of Arthur's whereabout goes to the mine to see him. The coach in which Esther and Marmaduke Smythe are driving is "fixed" by Luke Lovell so that a wheel may come off and as they are going along the mountain side the coach plunges down into the gulch below. "The Diamond From the Sky" is last seen dangling from the beak of a pelican which is flying overhead. For further review see page 209, this issue.

Paramount

Kilmeny—(FIVE REELS)—BOSWORTH—Featuring Lenore Ulrich, supported by a capable cast composed of Herbert Standing, Frederick Wilson, Myrtle Stedman, William Desmond and others. The story centers about Kilmeny, who when a child was kidnapped from her wealthy parents, the Calhouns, by a band of gypsies. In fleeing to escape marrying brutal Barouche, she meets Lord Leigh and accompanies him home. Lady Lee's brother, Bob Meredith, visits her and falls in love with Kilmeny. The latter's affection for Lord Leigh arouses his wife's and Bob's jealousy, and the girl, regretting the disruption which she has innocently caused, returns to the gypsy camp where she is commanded to marry Barouche. Her father's timely arrival prevents the marriage. The Calhouns invite their friends, the Leighs, to meet their daughter, restored to them after an absence of over twelve years. Explanations follow, and Bob and Kilmeny come to an understanding. For further review see page 208, this issue.

Pathe

Where the Trail Led—(TWO REELS)—PATHE.—Jim Harding loses a large sum in the gambling-hall, and is unable to pay the interest on the mortgage which falls due in a few days. His wife sets out to try and borrow the money. She is thrown from her horse and is found unconscious by Jules Valdez, a road-agent, who is being followed by the sheriff. Jules carries Helen to her home. Jim to reward him for his kindness allows the bandit to hide in the house. The road-agent learns of Helen's need of money, and dressed in Jim's clothes, he goes to the gambling-hall. He robs the place and Jim, who was gambling and winning a great deal at the time, is accused of the theft, but when Jules learns this he gives himself up to the sheriff.

Safety First—PATHE.—A one-reel comedy in which Heinie and Louie prove that their friendship is stronger in distress than in prosperity. After expounding the theory that the world owes them a living they develop a thirst and they promptly visit a saloon. A fight starts and they make a speedy exit from the place. This is but the start of the many incidents which result in a chase which is as lively as it is funny.

On the Banks of the Creuse.—A colored scenic of the picturesque French river.

Intimate Study of Birds—(SPLIT REEL) PATHE.—Part three of the wild-life pictures of birds as they really live. On the same reel with "Police Dogs."

The Isolated House—(THREE REELS)—PATHE.—A stirring detective story of the master-criminal, who, preferring death to capture, commits suicide when he is run down by the detective. After his escape from prison the master-criminal lures Sir Rodger and his wife to the Isolated House, where he imprisons them. By the use of a lever, which is concealed in a hollow tree, the house is lowered beneath the surface of the water. A detective is retained by friends of Sir Rodger. The detective finally solves the mystery and the captives are rescued.

Pathe News No. 56—Pathe—July 14. —The French steamship La Champagne strikes sand bar near St. Nazaire, France; motor boat race at Hannibal, Mo.; society folks of Long Island view second annual show of the Southampton Kennel Club, Southampton, N. Y.; Ted Meredith, holder of the world's record for the one-half mile run, comes near equalling the record again; hydro-aeroplane designed to carry passengers between New York City and Albany plunges into the river on its first trip; picture showing the manufacture of war supplies had taken precedence over all other industries in England; locomotives collide at Oakland, Calif., for amusement of a number of spectators; roof of warehouse lifted off and carried blocks away by tornado which sweeps the entire West at Cincinnati, Ohio; pageant at Caldwell, N. J., celebration of the 225th anniversary of the founding of the town.

Pathe News No. 57—Pathe.—Thrilling exhibition of riding bucking horses at a Missoula, Montana, stampede; John Hasselbring of Woodhaven, New York, has one of the most remarkable gardens in the country; Harry K. Thaw leaves the county court room at New York City after being declared sane; "little" Billy McCarthy of Bradford, Pennsylvania, who is one year old and weighs eighty-five pounds and is three feet three inches tall; cartoon by W. C. Morris; scenes from different places where the season for water sports is now in full swing.

The House Divided—(Two Reels)—Pathe-Balboa.—A story with a strong heart appeal enacted by a capable Balboa cast. The picture is in natural colors, having been sent abroad for that purpose. The wife divorces her husband who she has ruined financially. Years later the man who is now a laborer and the woman who lives in luxury are reunited by their children. The interesting story is well presented.

How Eggs Are Tested—(Split Reel) —Pathe.—Very entertaining and instructive experiments with eggs. The experiments are all simple and can be performed by anyone. On the same reel with:

The Spider-Monkey—Pictures in natural colors of the spider-monkey, a South American ape which lives in the trees entirely, never coming to the ground for either food or drink.

Ima Simp On The Job—Pathe.—Ima Simp secures a job as porter in the Dew-Drop-Inn. He is not a very efficient porter. After allowing the guest's trunk to fall down the stairs five or six times he is helped by the little slavey. The guest learns that the maid has inherited a fortune and he attempts to win her. But Ima Simp spoils this and wins the heiress for himself. There is plenty of action in the picture.

Spit-Ball Sadie—Pathe-Royal.—Luke promises the captain of the dairy-maids that he will secure the best woman pitcher to play with her team in the game against the hello girls. Luke appears that afternoon dressed as a woman and takes his position as pitcher for the dairy-maids. No men are admitted to the game, so when the girls discover that the strange pitcher is a man they chase him out of the park. To save himself he is forced to suffer many inconveniences but Luke is repaid for his trouble by the pretty captain's demonstration of gratitude.

Universal Special

The Garden of Lies—(Five Reels)—Universal—July 17.—Featuring Jane Cowl as the Princess Eleanor Novodna, who has lost her mind in an automobile accident on the day of her marriage. One Dennis Mallory consents to enact the role of her husband to bring back her memory. They later fall in love with each other and the Prince of Novodna returns at this time and finds Eleanor in Mallory's arms. Eleanor regains her memory and upon being told that Mallory is an imposter will not be reconciled to him. Later the prince is killed and we last leave Eleanor in the arms of Dennis Mallory. For further review see page 164, issue of July 24.

Vitagraph Special

The Goddess—(Two Reels)—Vitagraph—Chapter Eleven—Celestia, accompanied by Stilleter, visits the coal works. Tommy, Gunsdorf and Carson are appointed as a committee to present the strikers' terms of arbitration to Silar Kehr. Kehr orders his men to imprison the leaders of the strikers. Word of this reaches the workmen and they storm the stockade. Celestia is locked in the office by Stilleter. Freddy, who has succeeded in entering the works, releases her. The strikebreakers from behind the stockade shoot down the workmen. Tommy and his two friends break down the door of the room in which they are imprisoned. They meet Celestia and Freddy. After a stiff fight with the gate-keeper they succeed in leaving the stockade. For further review see page 215, this issue.

World

Sunday—(Five Reels)—World Film—Reine Davis featured as Sunday, the little orphan girl who is cared for by the workmen in a lumber-camp. Sunday, now a young woman, agrees to live with her wealthy aunt in England. After a short friendship Henry Brinthorpe asks Sunday to marry him. Though she loves him the girl refuses his proposal because Arthur, Henry's younger brother, who is traveling in America, was shot and killed for insulting her. Sunday returns to America. Jacky, who shot Arthur, explains the tragedy to Henry. In the final scene Sunday accepts Henry's second proposal of marriage. For further review see page 208, this issue.

It is our aim to make this department as complete as possible, although to do this, we must have the co-operation of all the manufacturers of film in the United States. If brief stories of the films you are releasing this week are not contained in this department, it must be due to the fact that you have not supplied us with synopsis sheets. In that case please see that we are advised of your film titles and release dates, and furnished with a brief synopsis of the story. This department is intended for every film manufacturer, whether he uses our advertising pages or not.

The Press Agent Says—

That Francelia Billington, one of the Reliance-Majestic leading ladies, has a cat, which in a recent picture was seen to stroll into view, approach a fireplace in which there was a fire, stretch, yawn and then lie down. When asked how she got the cat to do this Miss Billington said that there was neither hypnotism or occult suggestion about it. She had put the cat, "Dallas" by name, in an ice box five minutes before that particular scene was made, and naturally the cat wanted to get to the fire as soon as possible after his icy experience. Friends admit this may possibly be an adroit manipulation on her part, but asserts that she does unusual things with "Dallas" for pictures.

That in advertising the showing of "Help Wanted," the Morosco film, at the Princess Theatre, Provo, Utah, the printer set up the announcement, "Help Wanted at the Princess Theatre." Early the following morning Manager A. L. Stallings was besieged by telephone and personal calls by applicants for every kind of a position from usher to manager.

That Dorothy Phillips, the Victor star, played the role of a cute Chinese maiden in the photoplay "A Message from the Orient," and she has a new nickname as consequence. Several real Chinamen were used in the picture. One of them addressed Dorothy in his native tongue. It so happens that she had learned a few phrases on her trips to the Pacific coast so without any ado she answered him in Chinese. Miss Phillips managed to keep up the deception until her sense of humor overcame her and soon she was stuffing her handkerchief down her mouth! Now she is known as Wee Si, meaning mischief.

That a tiny little miss of about four years, with wonderful dark curls and sparkling eyes while eating jam and cake in "His Reward," Sydney Ayres' new Powers-Universal drama, just looks right at you from the screen—and straightway your heart is lost.

H. E. Aitken Discusses Triangle Plans

COMBINATION PLAYS AT $2.00 PRICES

THE prime object of the Triangle Film Corporation was disclosed this week in an announcement from D. W. Griffith's and H. E. Aitken's offices that for the first time in theatrical history the "two-dollar" motion picture combination of short plays would be inaugurated. The Knickerbocker, New York's most fashionable play house, has been selected as the place and September 6th as the date of this event.

Mr. Griffith established the $2 motion picture play in March, with "The Birth of a Nation." The $2 combination, on the other hand, has never been tried. The aim is to present the same high level of excellence in an evening's entertainment consisting of two medium-length and two short pictures. The combination will enlist the supervision of Griffith, Ince and Sennett and the services of at least four stage stars weekly. Like vaudeville in this one respect, an entirely new bill will be offered each Monday night and will be continued throughout the week.

It is said that the first week's programme will include Raymond Hitchcock in a Keystone comedy and Douglas Fairbanks in a modern European military drama under the supervision of Mr. Griffith. A Billie Burke play will be presented early in September, DeWolf Hopper will be seen as "Don Quixote" or "Wang," and Dustin Farnum, Bruce McRae, H. B. Warner and Orrin Johnson will appear in romantic roles. With more than forty stage stars working under the personal supervision of the three great directors, the contribution of the Knickerbocker combination to the permanent records of motion picture art should be larger than that of any other producing combination in the world. President Aitken of the Triangle said this week:

"I believe the high-class combination of plays such as we have outlined will speedily become the reigning fad of New York and later of the country. Great changes will be made in the Knickerbocker following the short run of 'The Girl from Utah.' For one thing, the auditorium will be completely altered to suit the requirements of the three directors. Picture machines specially built for the presentation of the longer and shorter plays will be installed. In addition to the technical changes, the comfort and esthetic enjoyment of spectators will be looked after in ways novel to the administration of the old-style theater."

Within a comparatively short time MOTOGRAPHY hopes to be able to announce to its readers the names of some of the other theaters in the larger cities of the country which will run the $2 combination attractions. Only the largest and best houses, it is understood, will be considered.

EXHIBITORS' CONVENTION ENDS WITH VISIT TO LOS ANGELES STUDIOS

The exhibitors' party which went on to Los Angeles following the week of convention at San Francisco, which concluded on July 17, met at the Hotel Clark on Monday morning, July 19, and from there went in autos to Universal City. M. G. Jonas, Mr. Massey and one of the guides with which the city is equipped, conducted the party around the grounds, the studios and ranches, and then to the portion of woods where a big barbecue had been prepared. After the feast, Fred J. Harrington, the league's new president, expressed the sentiment of the party in a few words in which he thanked the Universal Company for its hospitality.

In the afternoon the Selig studio and zoo was visited and several pictures in which Kathlyn Williams, Tom Santschi and Bessie Eyton were featured were watched in the making.

A trip to the Reliance-Majestic studios was made on Tuesday morning, where Frank Woods, J. A. Kiefe, Bennie Zeidman and others of the Griffith staff comprised a reception committee and showed the visitors about the studios.

At eleven the auto party proceeded to the Lasky plant, where Cecil B. DeMille and Mr. Kley, publicity man, officiated. The house built especially for Geraldine Farrar and in which she has her dressing-room and rest-room, the latter containing her piano, and other rooms which add to the comfort of herself and attendants during studio hours, was one of the interesting objects on the Lasky grounds.

At 2:30 David Horsley's Bostock arena and Mina studios on Main street were reached, where Ernest Shipman, acting manager during Mr. Horsley's hasty trip east, proved an amiable and entertaining host. After conducting the party on a tour of the animals' quarters and explaining the advantages of the unique out-of-doors studio where the animal pictures are to be made, and of the studio where Mina films are now in the making, Mr. Shipman piloted his guests to luncheon. Afterward the party returned to the Horsley plant in time for the animal show held there every afternoon and evening.

Wednesday was a treat day with the Fox Film Corporation as host, represented in this capacity by its genial western manager, Harry Leonhart, whose headquarters are in Los Angeles. Auto buses and four private cars took the party out to Venice, the popular beach resort, where luncheon was enjoyed at the Ship

Cafe and afterward a round of various concessions was made. There were several hours in which the party was given its choice of amusement and the majority chose the beach. The return to Los Angeles terminated the three days of amusement provided for the exhibitors who visited that city. The Fox Company was thanked by its many guests for the day of pleasure at which Mr. Leonhart so capably officiated, and then the party scattered to their distant homes.

NEW YORK CARNIVAL AUGUST 21 TO RAISE LEAGUE WAR FUND

It has been decided by the New York Local of the Motion Picture Exhibitors' League of America to hold a great Field Day and Carnival at Brighton Beach, Saturday, August 21. The principal object of this affair is to raise a large war fund for impending legislation at Albany this fall which promises to be inimical to motion picture interests. The veteran warrior of the New York branch, ex-President Samuel H. Trigger, has been called from his retirement by his brother exhibitors, with whom he has fought shoulder to shoulder for so many years. The entire affair has been placed in his hands, but this does not mean that he will try to be the whole show himself. He will act in the capacity of general manager and wants everyone to share in the glory of the day; particularly the exhibitors, also the actors, directors, the exchange men, manufacturers and all.

With the return of Mr. Trigger to active participation in League affairs there seems to be a general brightening up around the League headquarters at 110 West Fortieth street, New York City. For the past year many of the faithful have been obliged to withdraw from League affairs to attend to their several businesses which had suffered from neglect through their devotion and sacrifices to the association. There has been a literal housecleaning at the League rooms. Last Monday the old guard was on hand going over the place thoroughly. A lot of old papers were thrown out; among them records and details of former controversies which are now dead and gone and which it is hoped will never come back to life.

The more this idea of a large outing is thought of, the more possibilities for a tremendously successful entertainment become apparent. Even at this early date it is possible to draft a tentative program with a number of events that are absolutely new to field day exercises or carnivals. The outing is intended to be a semi-trade and semi-public affair. It is to be the first one of a series of annual midsummer entertainments to alternate with the usual midwinter dance given by the League. Many of the contests will be exclusively for photoplay actors. There will be other contests for the public which will be judged by screen celebrities.

The official program will begin at 10 a. m., at the Brighton bathing beach, where swimming and water sports will be the thing until one o'clock. There will be swimming races for leading men, and other swimming races for leading women. There will be a contest, open to the public, for prizes which will be distributed by some one prominent in the photoplay world. A game of water polo is also scheduled for the morning session, and a comedy tub race for moving picture comedians. No doubt by August 21 there will be many more interesting events thought out, and perhaps some of the earlier ideas eliminated.

At 1:30 the entire trade will assemble at Coney Island and march behind a great big band to Brighton Beach race track, where the field day sports will be held from 2:30 until 5:30.

There will be many events going on simultaneously. Some of the large film manufacturing companies have excellent ball teams and contests will be arranged among them. There will be a horse race for leading men and another for leading women. The fat film fellows will run a foot race, with such cute little entries as Hughie Mack, Pete Lang, George Trimble and others. A tug of war by the strong men of the movie profession will be another number on the program; also shooting matches, running and jumping and the usual run of field day sports, all of which will be supervised by a professional manager of track events, whose name will be announced shortly.

The public will also participate in a number of events, mostly of a comic nature, the principal one of which will be a Charlie Chaplin contest, open to all comers. Mr. Trigger has determined that he will have Charlie Chaplin present in person if he has to hire a special train to bring him from Chicago, and if he does come he will probably judge the Charlie Chaplin contest himself. All of these public contests will be judged by some famous movie actor.

At 6:30 a monster shore dinner will begin, at which it is expected the entire trade in the East will be seated. The public will also be admitted to this dinner, as well as the trade, if they desire to come. There will be speeches by men who are famous in the amusement field, and the toastmaster will be a man of national importance in the film trade.

While the dinner is in progress the dance hall will be open to those who wish to use it early. Beginning at seven o'clock the dancing will continue until midnight. Dancing contests will be a part of the program. One of the contests will be for photoplay actors and actresses only, for prizes. A public contest will be the second event, the winner of which will give an exhibition dance against the winner of the photoplayers' dance for the big prize of the day.

There are many details yet to be announced. There is enough material of interest in sight even now to make a glorious holiday but there will be some valuable suggestions made, and as more promising ideas appear the commonplace ones will be dropped, until the program will be a list of novel surprises. Mr. Trigger wants to hear from everyone in the profession who has an idea or some new kind of a stunt, either comic or otherwise, that has never been done before. He wants to hear also from any of the photoplayers who desire to participate in any of the events or in any other way. Names for entries should be accompanied by information as to the particular event the entry is for. All communications should be addressed to Samuel H. Trigger, Motion Picture Exhibitors' League of America, 110 West Fortieth street, New York City.

Exhibitors to Pay for Censorship, Says Magie

Editors MOTOGRAPHY:—The State of Kansas passed a censorship law in 1913 imposing a tax of $2.00 per reel, the law being drawn exactly upon the same lines as the Ohio censorship law. The Mutual Film Corporation fought this law as to its constitutionality, taking it up through the Kansas courts to the Supreme Court at Washington, at the same time they presented their Ohio case of similar character.

The arguments presented to the lawyers by the Mutual Film Corporation were based almost wholly on Mayor Gaynor's decision to the effect it is not fair, just or lawful to censor a film prior to its being shown to the public, on the basis that up until such time no breach of law has been committed.

You will recall recently Judge McKenna of the Supreme bench handed down an adverse decision and immediately afterwards, in 1915, the State Board of Censors in Kansas, which is controlled by Mr. W. D. Ross, State Superintendent of Instruction, began censoring the films in Topeka and imposing the tax of $2.00 per reel. Since that time all Kansas City exchanges have paid this amount, and in addition have been obliged to pay the tremendous expense of sending all reels to Topeka, express charges both ways, maintaining an exhibition room in Topeka with additional labor trouble and expense all along the line.

This expense began to mount up to such huge proportions that I went the other day to Kansas City and on my arrival there read all records of the legal proceedings up to date from one end to the other. I found that the attorney general for Kansas, Mr. Dawson, in his answer to his bill of complaint before the Supreme Court denied this law would work a hardship on the film exchanges and that exhibitors in Kansas alone should pay.

He admitted that while it was true, for convenience sake, that the film exchanges would probably take care of the censorship of their films by presenting them to the Censorship Board before delivering them to the exhibitors, it was nevertheless true that the film exchanges should reimburse themselves by adding a few cents extra per reel to the film rental.

You can imagine my pleasure at discovering one of the prominent Kansas officials had recommended us to do the very thing I most wanted to do. I immediately prepared a rubber stamp. Therefore, on all bills going to Kansas exhibitors effective the 26th of this month we will charge all Kansas exhibitors ten cents a reel for censorship tax. This is the first time in the history of our business that we have placed on the exhibitors a tax for censorship. It is, however, inevitable that we must in future continue to charge these exorbitant taxes to the exhibitor for two very good reasons. Firstly, that we cannot afford to pay these large sums, and secondly, it is the intention of the State to tax the exhibitor and not the exchange. You will perhaps recall there is no buying film exchange in the State of Kansas.

There is another pertinent reason why this tax should fall right now on the shoulders of the Kansas exhibitors. As long as we went on paying this tax the exhibitors in Kansas would never wake up to the fact they had a censorship bill or it was unjust or burdensome to their business.

Now that they will have to pay it, we believe that they will wake up to the fact something must be done, and inasmuch as Kansas is particularly a referendum State the chances are the people will rise up and demand justice in this matter.

I have tried to give you briefly just a running account of the facts and need hardly mention we are carrying on a campaign actively and will not let it lag for a minute until we secure the relief we are entitled to.—GEO. A. MAGIE.

V-L-S-E MAKES PROMOTION; ITS SALES FORCE REWARDED

The V-L-S-E in accordance with its policy of recognizing and rewarding integrity and merit as recently announced over the signature of General Manager Walter W. Irwin, makes known the promotion of several members of the Big Four sales force.

The unprecedented success of the V-L-S-E Program, and the Big Four policies, has resulted in the well earned promotion of Branch Manager A. W. Goff, while many members of the sales force have been elevated to managerial positions. A. W. Goff, manager of the Cleveland branch, is named as the first Big Four division manager. He assumes charge of the western division, embracing Seattle, San Francisco and Los Angeles, on July 24, and will make his headquarters at the San Francisco office. Mr. Goff, by untiring effort, has made an enviable record in the Cleveland territory. He has been unusually successful in promoting the co-operative ideas of the V-L-S-E. The weekly reports from the section under Mr. Goff's supervision show that V-L-S-E business has grown there by leaps and bounds.

Sydney E. Abel, a salesman in the Ohio territory, becomes manager of the Cleveland office, succeeding Mr. Goff. R. S. Shrader, formerly a salesman in the Ohio territory, is placed in charge of the Cleveland sub-office at Cincinnati. R. R. Hutton, another of the Ohio salsemen, becomes manager of the Cleveland sub-office at Detroit. Frank Harris and S. W. Hatch, formerly salesmen in the Kansas City territory, are now managers of the Kansas City sub-offices at Denver and St. Louis, respectively. Assistant Manager R. B. Quive becomes manager of the San Francisco office. H. D. Naugle, salesman in San Francisco territory, is made Los Angeles manager. Tom North, salesman in San Francisco territory, has been made Seattle manager.

These comprise the list of promotions, each of which are the result of integrity and merit displayed by those affected and based on the successful accomplishments of each individual.

It has been proclaimed as a policy of the Big Four to fill positions, as they develop, from the ranks. Promotions will be made without fear, favor or politics among those whose records warrant advancement.

By a system of education, by personal visits, sales letters and articles in the Big Four Family, the V-L-S-E house organ, it is possible for every man who will study, to fit himself for the better positions that the rapid growth of this organization is constantly creating.

The company endeavors to employ only the best men, all working for the common good, to the end that the success of the company shall be their success, and that they and the exhibitors shall share in the benefits.

The results of these policies have been most gratifying. The success of the V-L-S-E Program is unequaled in the annals of the film industry. It has placed feature films on a higher plane than was ever before expected.

By accepting the suggestions and advice offered by Big Four representatives, exhiibtors all over the country are securing higher admission prices for their feature exhibitions. A percentage of this increased revenue naturally comes to the manufacturers, and they, in turn, are enabled to make features of greater superiority.

IN "BLOOM CENTER" FILM SELIG BURNS UP A TOWN

Constable Plum, Postmaster Pash, Phil Pickel, Percy Pinkham, the members of the Ladies' Art Embroidery Club, the Priscilla Sewing Circle, and the Ladies' Economic Club were all present when Bloom Center burned.

Bloom Center was the complete rural village erected by the Selig Polyscope Company at Los Angeles for the purpose of furnishing the locale for the "Chronicles of Bloom Center," a rural photoplay series, soon to be relased.

The village was erected at the cost of thousands of dollars. There was the general store and postoffice, the Methodist Episcopal church, the Melodion Hall, the barber and blacksmith shop—in fact, every essential to make perfect the true rural hamlet that is so numerous in the middle western United States and which supplies the population that is the bone and sinew of Uncle Sam's domain.

The burning of Bloom Center.

"The Chronicles of Bloom Center" is something different. The same characters disport themselves through the entire series, which consists each of a two-reel comedy. Home talent theatricals, the county fair, the "home coming" celebration, in fact everything that has attracted the attention of the ruralites figures in some way or other. Each picture play is complete in itself.

It was found necessary in concluding the "Chronicles of Bloom Center" to burn the village. The torch was applied, and as the villagers disported themselves after the manner ordered by Director Marshall Neilan, thousands of people formed an interested audience. The town pump was the only fixture that remained after the flames had gotten beyond control of the "Fearless Fire Fighters Company."

William N. Selig made a special trip to the Pacific Coast to view "Bloom Center" before and after its destruction. He was present with a party of distinguished guests when the flames held sway.

BIGGER CINCINNATI OFFICES FOR WORLD FILM CORPORATION

The new quarters of the World Film Corporation in Cincinnati are among the most beautiful as well as the best equipped offices in that section of the country and speak well indeed for the rapid growth of the business as effected by Manager Brehm and his able staff of assistants, whose slogan is "Watch us grow, grow with us!"

Situated in the Savoy Hotel building on Sixth street, the new offices take up the entire two floors of the building numbering ten different rooms, all tastefully decorated and supplied with the very finest equipment. On the first floor are located the executive offices and reception room. The system established in the new quarters provides separate offices for each department, and matters pertaining to each individual department are taken up directly with the heads of same, without necessitating an interview with each member of the force, before one's wants are attended to. So conveniently and quickly is everything handled that one is impressed with the thoroughness of the system and the careful attention to every detail, that prevails throughout the entire establishment.

Manager Brehm declares that though enlarged to nearly twice their former size the immense volume of business transacted even taxes their present capacity and the outlook for the coming season predicts another increase in his staff.

Assisting Mr. Brehm are George W. Hinton, formerly of the American Feature Film Corporation of Chicago, who is a recent addition to the force. Mr. Hinton has had a wide experience in the field, having handled films for years as well as managing several theaters. R. S. Moran, who has been road man for the "World Film" since the opening of its first Cincinnati office, is still in charge of the force on the firing line, and together with Harry Young and H. P. Rhineck, will take care of the out-of-town business. Tom Neer will retain charge of the shipping department, and with this staff of competent lieutenants there can be no doubt of the World maintaining its reputation for getting, at least, all that is coming to it.

According to Consul General W. L. Lowrie, the moving picture theater has not reached the popularity in Lisbon, Portugal, that it enjoys in most large cities.

AUTHOR JOHN W. HANSON ON MUTUAL'S ADVERTISING STAFF

The experience of John W. Hanson, of the Mutual's advertising staff, is interesting as an illustration of the type of men who are being attracted to the motion picture industry. Mr. Hanson began his career as an editorial newspaper writer, later becoming the literary head of a large publishing house. While in the publishing field he became the author of a score of books on various topics and took part in the exploitation of the works of celebrities like William J. Bryan, Theodore Roosevelt, Admiral Schley and other notables. He tells some very interesting stories of his connection with men in the public eye. Mr. Hanson's latest personal work is a volume entitled "Why the War in Europe."

John W. Hanson.

Before becoming connected with the Mutual he was actively engaged in the advertising agency field in New York, where he handled several national campaigns of considerable magnitude.

PROGRAM IS THE ANSWER WHEN J. R. FREULER SPEAKS

John R. Freuler, whose achievements as a builder of motion picture progress is a record of unbroken successes, and who therefore speaks as a practical authority, hails the regular program as the absolute salvation of the film business.

At the offices of the Mutual Film Corporation, of which he is now the president and general manager, Mr. Freuler discussed the present film situation as follows:

"Speaking both as an exhibitor and as president of the Mutual I see no cause for unrest in the minds of the motion picture exhibitors. As a matter of fact, the great, big, firm rock of the motion picture business is the regular program. It was on the regular program that the great business was built, and it is on this foundation that it will continue to be profitable. The explanation is simple and plain. Motion pictures are the amusement of the masses who require a pleasant, exciting or entertaining diversion at a cost within the reach of their pocket books. This is legitimately provided by the regular program at a price the great masses can pay. So long as motion pictures continue to stick to the field that they have made for themselves they will flourish and be profitable.

"In sticking close to the regular program the exhibitor has both feet firmly on the foundation of the motion picture business. Do not misunderstand me. I am not belittling feature pictures. They are admirable additions to the regular program, and they are business bringers when they are good and when they are properly used. But the line of assured development and positive profit lies with the betterment of the regular program of one and two reel subjects.

"As far as the Mutual Film Corporation is concerned, no secret need be made about what it proposes to do. It will continue to supply its exhibitors with pictures of a quality equal to the best feature pictures, and in addition to the brands now being shown, it will add, and make a part of its regular program, pictures distinctly novel and entertaining. One specific instance is a series of comedies with a comedian that will be the sensation of the year. Special attention is being given to the comedy element of the program, and arrangements have been completed so that we can definitely promise an even better program than ever before.

"The shorter pictures of quality are what the masses have demonstrated by continued patronage that they want. A ready example may be found in the brilliant short story as against the long novel. The pictures we have arranged for, and which I have personally seen, are supreme in plot, action, photography and interest, and are fully up to the best of the longer subjects on the market.

"The exhibitor, who is deceived by those who would lure him away from his affiliation with a profitable program, should think twice before he decides to forsake a profitable certainty for a 'pot of gold at the end of a rainbow.'

"I do not think that it is too much to say that the Mutual program right now is the Gibraltar of the motion picture situation."

WIZARD FILM COMEDIES PLACED ON WORLD FILM PROGRAM

A year ago last June three veteran motion picture men went into business together with no contracts or agreements further than the verbal understanding, "we'll be square with each other, and make pictures." The three of them were "Bobbie" Burns and "Walt" Stull, the comedians who had been with Lubin four years and a half and who established the Comic and Royal pictures on the Mutual Program, and Louis Burstein, who had been one of the organizers of the New York Motion Picture Company and of Reliance. A short time ago—in less than a year after their affiliation, they signed a contract with the Wizard Film Company, and on July 5, the first of the weekly comedies which they will henceforth make for the World's Film Corporation, was released.

Believing that there were no funny films in the world so good that they could not compete with them, the three comedy makers started out last year as free lances. "Bobbie" Burns brought the undertaking a remarkable acrobatic experience gained in such productions as "The Wizard of Oz," "Babes in Toyland," "The Follies of 1909 and '10," in a varied vaudeville and Hippodrome career and with numerous motion picture concerns. Stull lent to the company the more dignified accomplishments of an actor who had starred in 101 melodramas, not the least of which was "The Great Diamond Robbery" of 1907. To Burstein, with his ready business sense and his valuable experience as an organizer, was left the purely business undertaking of the company.

When the first two pictures, "The Tangles of Pokes and Jabbs" and "Two for a Quarter" were finished, the faith in the three men in their ability to produce comedies "which were" was justified. "Two for a Quarter" had a phenomenal reception, and had the distinction of being the only picture accepted by the Strand theater after it had been shown at any other place in the city. It was first shown at the Hippodrome. A week followed at the Strand, which preceded a similar run at the Brighton Beach Music Hall.

In their brief career, the clever and plucky "B. S. and B." Company has completed six pictures for the World's Film Corporation, which, aside from "The Tangles of Pokes and Jabbs" and "Two for a Quarter," are "One Busy Day," "The Quiet Game," "Mashers and Splashers" and "Juggling the Truth."

The three men are their own scenario editors, stage directors and stars. There is an individuality about both the comedians which puts their work in a distinct class, and the amusing predicaments in which "Pokes and Jabbs" will henceforth find themselves promise extraordinary comedy for the World's Film weekly releases.

The men are regularly assisted by Ethel Burton, Helen Von Huben, Pearl Shepherd and Laurie Mackin.

VITAGRAPH DEVELOPS OWN STARS; DONT NEED STAGE, SAYS BLACKTON

In a formal announcement made yesterday by Commodore J. Stuart Blackton of the Vitagraph Company, the exact position that the moving picture companies have taken in this controversy between the theatrical managers and the moving picture men was outlined.

"The position which theatrical managers have taken, it seems to me, is untenable," said Commodore Blackton. "In speaking for this company, I desire to say that it has never been our object to secure any of the so-called stars of the theatrical firmament. Our policy has been to develop our own stars, as for instance in the case of Anita Stewart, Lillian Walker, Earle Williams, Edith Storey, Antonio Moreno and numerous others. These stars are known to the entire population of this country; whereas those stars of the theatrical firmament are known to comparatively few, those who can afford to pay two dollars to see a production. How many people in towns of 25,000, 50,000, 75,000, and even 100,000, are familiar with the so-called Broadway stars? Yet every one of them could identify on the street any of the moving picture players. They know them, they are in intimate touch with them, they know their characteristics, their likes, their dislikes, there is very little that escapes them. Incidentally part of the motion picture public is recruited from those who one day in the month are able to pay the two dollars to see a theatrical production.

"The stand taken by some of the theatrical managers that they will not maintain their contracts with stars who appear in moving pictures will not affect the progress of the one form of amusement that has so far outstripped the others that this last cry is merely a dying gasp on the part of the managers who maintain a position that for years has been a burden and has been more of a restraint than it has been a help. I do not like to charge the theatrical managers with bad faith, but I do say that in attempting to restrain the stars from appearing in the moving pictures they are not only standing in their own way, but are attempting to deprive the public of what legitimately is theirs. That they were in the wrong is clearly seen by the fact that we, today are able to secure the highest possible price for our efforts; whereas they are having considerable difficulty in disposing of their tickets at cut prices.

"Those stars who care to enter the moving picture field will readily find an opening that will so enhance their popularity that where today they are known to perhaps, and this is a broad estimate, ten million people of our hundred million population; six months from now in moving pictures they will be known to a daily audience of fifteen million people. Such stars as Robert Edeson, Charles Richman and Frank Daniels, known for years to Broadway audiences, are today far more widely known to motion picture audiences."

LASKY'S "THE CASE OF BECKY" WILL STAR BLANCHE SWEET

Blanche Sweet in a style of photodrama work that is not only original with her but likely to place her, through the medium of forthcoming productions of the Jesse L. Lasky Feature Play Company, in a position as a star and favorite which she not yet has attained, is the unqualified promise of the Lasky officers.

For the second time since her engagement exclusively with the Lasky producing firm, she will appear in the leading role in a Lasky-Belasco production. The play will be "The Case of Becky," by Edward Locke, one of the sensations of the American dramatic season several years ago when produced by David Belasco.

Perhaps no play from the legitimate stage offers such opportunities for the ingenuity of the director and the art of the star as "The Case of Becky" provides in photodrama form. Margaret Turnbull, who wrote "The Clue," Miss Sweet's most recent production, has prepared "The Case of Becky" for the studio, and the presentation generally will have the benefit of the united co-operation of the studio force. Henry Reicher will be the director immediately in charge.

"The Case of Becky" will be Miss Sweet's next vehicle, following "The Secret Orchard," from the play by Channing Pollock, based on the novel of the same name by Agnes and Edgerton Castle. "The Secret Orchard" will be released through the Paramount Pictures Corporation on August 9.

"The Case of Becky" will be released through Paramount Pictures Corporation in the autumn. Miss Sweet's company will include Theodore Roberts, James Mill, Carlyle Blackwell, Miss Gertrude Keller and Miss Jane Wolff.

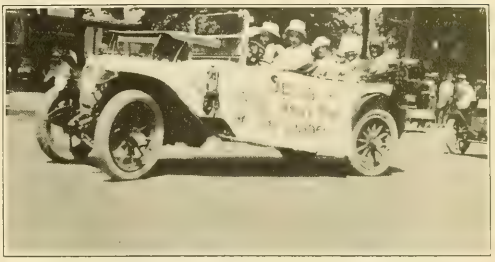
GOVERNOR OF MICHIGAN DISCUSSES LINCOLN CYCLE

One of the many notables throughout the country who have expressed themselves in unquestioned approval of the Lincoln Cycle now being issued by the Charter Features Corporation, is the celebrated Governor Ferris of Michigan. Interesting the motion picture field as a whole, more particularly, however, is the intimacy with which the governor speaks of motion picture exhibitors and motion picture exchanges. He seems to talk almost as an expert.

In writing to Charter Features Corporation, he addressed Benjamin Chapin, the Lincoln characterizer, who is the chief of staff, and suggested the names of several theaters in Michigan that unquestionably would find it to their best interests to handle the Cycle.

In the Wake of the Selig Special*

BY NEIL G. CAWARD



Ogden, Utah, Sat. Jul. 10, 1915

Squedunk, Iowa.

Dear Jack:—

Well Jack i spose you are jus About oiling up the old machine for the matiknee preformance at the old Metropolitan, while i and the Missus is getting reddy to klimb back a board the train and go on acrost the grate Salt Lake with this hear Selig Movie Speshul.

Believ me we is having some trip-the Missus and i. Coming to Shecawgo to get a board the train was only the beginning of the trip, for we is all ready gone moren twict as far and we aint there yet. That old train as runs from Squedunk to Shecawgo that youn me used to think was a pretty swell train aint in it with this hear train i and the Missus bin on now for 2 hole days and a ½. Why Jack this hear train what we are on now is 14 kars long and i no, cause I counted em myself, and you no darn well that i always count the box offis reseats korrect to a 5c nickel. Theres a Observation car with glas windows all over it and a big platform on the end where you can sit down on stuls and rubber at the scenery and theres 2 eating cars where some niggers bring you things to eat and a lot of these hear Pul Man Palace Kars and i and the Missus has got 2 of these hear sleeping shelves all to ourselves and besides that yet theres a kar all fixed up with seats and a motshun pitchur curtain and a machine for throwing the pitchurs on the curtain and everything, and we hav pitchur shows every nite and Jack it don't cost 0 to go to this hear pitchur show. Its all for 0. so i and the Missus go every nite.

The Ogden theater auto met the Sisters.

Some of the scenery.

Mrs. Brothers and the Missus.

And Jack still yet besides all these other kars theres a big car where they got a printing machine what gets out a newspaper called the Yelp a board this train—of course it aint no regular newspaper like the Squedunk Eagle, but then its pretty good and Jack i got my name in the very 1st one of these hear newspapers what they printed. Now what do you think of that. And Jack in this same kar where the newspaper is printed they got a coon what serves drinks just like down to Bill's place on the corner, only they don't serve no drinks when the train is stopped to a station cause they dassent. I seen by what the other fellers paid for their drinks that they was getting stuck, cause in 1 place i seen this hear coon get a hole 25c quarter for just 1 bottel of beer, but i didnt wanto look like a cheep skate so i wated till the train stopped and then i ordered a bottel o beer, and the coon sez as how he cudnt bring me no bottel o beer till the train started so i sez all right then i dont want no bottel o beer and that way it didnt cost me 0.

Well Jack theres a mighty swell lot o people a board this hear train and right a way before weed gone moren a few miles from Shecawgo I got interduced to this hear Herb Hoagland what is one of the big offisers of the Selig cO. and he interduced i and the Missus to John Selig, what is a bro, to old Bill Selig hisself, so you see i and the Missus is movin in pretty high society. And Jack i got interduced to a feller named T. Mac Manus what is General mgr of the Hurst-Selig News Pitoral and I tole him as how we run his pitchur in the Metropolitan and he tole me he was glad.

Ready to be filmed at Sherman.

*With apologies to Ring Lardner.

Well Jack before weed got settled down in our seats the day the train started what was Thurs. Jul. 8., this hear Herb Hoagland and another feller named Walt Bloeser of the Shecawgo Treebune come through the train giving away little red flags with Selig on em in white letters, and the Selig trademark in blu and white. They give both i and the Missus 1 and we took em cause they was for 0. And they had cains hitched onto em so you could wave em. And that nite Jack after it got dark a feller named Ed Kohl, what runs a couple o pitchur shows down to Cleveland, Ohio, he turned on the lights on the pitchur machine and by golly right there on that there train a running a 100 miles a hr. acrost the country they had a pitchur show and everybody kum and it was all for 0. Thats probly why every body kum. Course if we had pitchurs at the Metropolitan for 0 we could get everybody to kum 2.

And then Jack after the pitchur show was over this hear Ed Kohl and a feller named Geo Heinbuch, what owns a pitchur show 2, and a feller names Jos Andreucetti, what is Assist. Electrical Enjineer o the Shecawgo Northwestern Railroad and so he rides for 0 on the train all the time, and i got up in the baggage kar and we organized the ancien Order o Yellow Dogs what is a sekret Sciety, something like the Odd fellows or the Masons only diffrunt, and its for men only—all the fellers what is on the train and i tell you all about it when i get back home. Course being a sekret Sciety i cant tell you about it in a letter.

Well Jack i and the Missus went to bed then in these here sleeping shelves what they got on them Pul Man Kars and when we woke up we was in Nebrasky and beside the track was the N Platte river what aint no river at all but a lot o sand what they call a river. Its a awful desolate looking country but theres lot o Velvet and Bull Durham signs and that way it looked like home. Long a bout 4 oclock we got to a place called Shy N, and there everybody got off the train and bot postle cards and things and then the motshun pitchur cO what is aboard the train got busy and took a piece of the film called the 7 suffring Sisters what we read about in Motography.

Then they put 2 enjines on the train and we next stopped at a place called Sherman what is 8000 and 10 ft. above see level and there everybody got out and had there pitchurs took for the Hurst-Selig News Pitorial. When we got to going again we went thru a tunnel what was all dark and the lectric lights had to all be lit. Next A. m. we kum to a place called Steamboat Rock and a little further on to another named Echo and there everybody got off and klimbed on a flat kar what had chairs on it and they hitched this kar on a head of the enjine and went through a cannon where the walls o rock rose up 1 thousand ft on each side. One place they had what they called Devils Slide what was a crazy looking place what the Devil slid down when he kum to earth yrs ago. And Jack about a mile a way there was snow on the mountains tho it was Jul. and hot where we was.

About 9 oclock we kum to Ogden, Utah and when folks got off the train they was all given for 0 a box o cherries. Then they had a lot o street kars and some automobiles and the hole crowd was took out to Ogden cannon. The Ogden theater had one automobile what took the 7 suffring Sisters out to the place where sum more of the motshun pitchur was took. That ride on the st. kars was a pippin Jack and we seen all kinds o scenery and i enclose a pitchur was shows what sum o the scenery was like. And 1 place they went by a place called Bridal Veil Falls what is a overflow from the pipe line what hauls the water down from the Mts. for Ogden to drink.

Out at the end of the st Kar line is a eating house called the Idlewild and we all got ice kream kones and more postle cards. Up on the porch o this Idlewild place the Missus got her pitchur took with Mrs. Florence Brothers o Grand Rapids, Mich., who is the most pop. Skul teacher o that place. She won the pop. contest put on by the Gillingham & Smith Enterprises what runs pitchur shows there, and she got millyuns o votes because she been a teacher a long time and all the boys and girls that went to skul to her and is now growd up voted 4 her.

Well Jack then we got a board the st. kars again and was took back to the depo and now we is going across the grate Salt lake, but i tell you all about that in my next letter.

i got from a feller a board the train a list of the other passengers and here it is.

SAN ANTONIO'S SOLEDAD THEATER IS UNIQUE IN MANY RESPECTS

With the opening of the Soledad theater and roof garden in San Antonio, Texas, on Saturday evening, July 19, that city secured an amusement place which is one of the most unique in which pictures are displayed in the United States, for besides acquiring a theater with more than a two thousand seating capacity, where feature films of the highest grade at all times will be run, the Soledad roof garden affords seats for two thousand other people and contains besides an open air motion picture theater, a refreshment pavilion and dance hall. Both auditoriums are under the management of W. J. Lytle, who is also manager and a stockholder in the Wigwam No. 1, 205 Alamo, Alaza; Wigwam No. 2, 512 East Houston street; the Empire at Houston and St. Marys streets, and the Pike at 107 West Houston street.

The roof of the Soledad theater will be open during the summer months from 7 p. m. to 11:45 p. m., the plan being to open it approximately on May 15 each year and to close on October 15. A ten-piece union orchestra furnishes the music for the pictures and the dancing, while cabaret performances of the highest class are also staged on the portion of the roof devoted to refreshments. On the opening week such high-class acts as the Capitol City trio, Tom Smith and the Raymond Sisters were booked. The refreshment booths are modern in every respect and every kind of soft drink might be ordered. In addition it is proposed to serve light lunches consisting of sandwiches and the like, and during the season melons and fruit will also be sold on a scale of prices most moderate. The accompanying cut gives one an even better idea of the place than the printed description can possibly do.

Downstairs, seats for more than two thousand other persons are afforded and music is furnished by a $10,000 Foto Player equipped with bells and a Vox Humano attachment. Both the theaters are equipped with two Powers' 6 A projectors of the latest model and with Radium Goldfiber screens of vast size. The downstairs house has a cooling system by which 45,000 cubic feet of ice-water washed air is forced into the theater every sixty seconds by means of huge blowers, and there are 82 mushroom ventilators beneath the seats, all of which are on one floor. The admission price to the downstairs and the roof garden is 10c each. Features of the highest class will be used. All of the regular V. L. S. E. program being contracted for, as well as other big features, and in addition to running the best of the Paramount, Metro and Mutual Master-Pictures, all of the Chaplin films are first shown at the Soledad.

One of the most attractive features of the Soledad roof is the dancing hall, located directly in the rear of the section devoted to motion pictures and occupying a space 100 feet long by 40 feet wide. The best of dance music is provided, and it is anticipated that this floor will prove a popular place for the hundreds of young people who enjoy dancing.

According to Consul Julius D. Dreher, the Provincial Board of Censors has prohibited the use in Ontario of real or "faked" pictures of war, since this order has made it necessary to recall certain films of war scenes alleged to be the reproduction of operations on battle fields in Belgium.

RECEIVER ASKED FOR LADY MACKENZIE FILM CORPORATION

Chancellor Curtis, in Wilmington, Del., handed down on Tuesday, July 27, his decision in the bill for the appointment of a receiver and administrator of the assets of the Lady Mackenzie Film Company, a corporation of the State of Delaware, which was filed in the Court of Chancery by William B. Joyce of 115 Broadway, New York City, on behalf of stockholders and creditors of the film company. Mr. Joyce sets forth that he is a creditor to the extent of $70,000 and that he is the owner of 1,245 shares of the capital stock at a par value of $100 each. The company was incorporated at Dover, Del., May 5, 1915. State rights buyers are warned by the creditors not to purchase territory from the company while the matter is pending.

LITTLE MARY MILES MINTER

Little Mary Miles Minter, the new film star engaged for a term of years by the Metro Pictures Corporation, is thirteen years old. She has been on the stage since she was seven. Her success in the principal role in Metro's production of "Always in the Way," won for her the position she will fill hereafter as a prominent star in Metro's long list of stage and screen celebrities now appearing for Metro.

Mary Miles Minter.

Miss Minter has always been successful on the stage, due to a winning personality and personal magnetism that is unusual in one so young. She first came into the height of her stage success in the title role in "The Littlest Rebel," which was seen at the Liberty Theater, New York, in November, 1911, and presented by William and Dustin Farnum. After the New York run she appeared for an entire season in this play on tour.

In the fall of 1910 she was engaged to appear with Bertha Kalich in "The Woman of Today," playing the part of Edith Roxby. During this same summer she joined Robert Hillard in "A Fool That Was" as the child, the name of the character. Concluding her engagement with Mr. Hillard, Miss Minter was then engaged by William Farnum for a vaudeville sketch by Edward Peple entitled "The Littlest Rebel." It was produced in Buffalo in June, 1910, at Shea's Theater. She surprised everybody by her performance and her personal efforts were largely responsible for the sketch being elaborated into a play. She was only nine years old when "The Littlest Rebel" was seen in its enlarged form in New York. Miss Minter continued with this production playing all the principal cities of the country.

In the summer season of 1914, this gifted little actress was featured as the star in different cities where stock companies were playing. She appeared again during these engagements, in "The Littlest Rebel," and also put on long dresses for the first time, when she assumed the role of Cynthia Summer in "The Rainbow."

December last, Mary Miles Minter made her debut in moving pictures in a production called "The Fairy and the Waif." During last season at the Longacre Theater she was found in an important role in "What it Means to be a Woman." Miss Minter first come under Metro auspices and influence in their production of "Always in the Way," and made so signal a success therein that the Metro Pictures Corporation signed her for several years.

BRUCE MCRAE PLAYS THE LEAD IN PATHE'S "VIA WIRELESS"

With the list of the star actors and actresses which Pathe has signed up already looking like a "Who's Who in the Theater," George Fitzmaurice, who is producing "Via Wireless" for that concern, announces that Bruce McRae plays the lead. Such an announcement caused quite a stir along the Rialto, because it has always been thought that Mr. McRae would remain immune to the offerings of the silent drama producers, no matter how high their bid, and remain as he has been termed, "the best leading man on the American stage."

The advent of Mr. McRae in the silent drama marks that of a man who has probably enjoyed more popularity than any man on the stage today. He has appeared in some of the most successful vehicles and has co-starred with the best in the business.

Perhaps the fact that he is a nephew of that sterling English actor, Sir Charles Wynham, and of the famous dramatist, the late Bronson Howard, had something to do with his breaking into the theatrical game, for after a year in the wild and woolly, he came to New York, where, through introductions from his noted uncles, he was able to secure a part in Elsie De Wolf's and Forbes Robertson's company, which was then playing "Thermidor."

His success was immediate, and since then he has seldom been out of the public view, as the long list of plays in which he has appeared will attest. Incidentally it may be remarked that these productions were all the more appreciated because of this splendid actor's presence in them.

In explanation of Bruce McRae's manifold triumphs behind the footlights, it is inevitable that very much overworked personality should come into play, for of a surety, no more engaging one has diffused its presence on the American stage. Pathe's "Via Wireless" will be doubly strengthened by his acquisition.

RECORD BREAKING RUN CONTINUES

"The Birth of a Nation" passes out of its fifth month at the Liberty theater, New York City, with the performances this week and starts the sixth month of its successful engagement at that theater with no sign of diminishing interest. At the same time D. W. Griffith's wonderful spectacle is playing record-breaking engagements in the Brighton Beach Music Hall at the sea side, and also at Boston, Chicago, San Francisco, and has begun a summer engagement in Atlantic City. The big attraction is being presented to over 50,000 people a week in these points.

W. W. Hodkinson's Address to Convention

A GREAT FUTURE SEEN FOR MOTION PICTURES

HAD I been called upon a few years earlier to say a few words relative to the future of the motion picture business, I would undoubtedly have advocated quality pictures and higher admissions as the necessary steps for the future. Today, however, this is not necessary, as so many are advocating these things that it is generally believed that the better productions for the better people at higher admission prices than the regulation nickelodeons offer the best field for the exhibitor, although we cannot deny that there will always be a place for the cheaper pictures in the cheaper theaters catering to their particular class.

We all believe today that the motion picture business has a future. A few years ago most every one doubted whether or not it had a future, and it was frequently referred to even by those in it as a fad that would pass like roller skating and other amusements of that class. Even in the early days I did not doubt but that the business had a future if rightly handled, although I sometimes thought that it might be killed by the methods of those in it. The business has proved to be more virile than my expectations and it has withstood such abuses and reached a stage where I do not fear that it will ever perish, but it has reached such a stage where those that are unfit to help it advance must necessarily and will be eliminated in the future. In other words, those who are in the business must advance with it or drop out.

The motion picture business today is one of the greatest industries the world has ever seen, and is rapidly enlisting the capital and best brains of our land. The man who has seen fit to conduct his place of business in a haphazard way is bound to be eliminated by those business men who will work along different lines. A short time before leaving New York I heard our treasurer, Mr. Raymond Pawley, tell the story of a poor peasant clockmaker in Europe who became aspired by reading on a tablet in a church the words, "Without a Vision the People Perish." At first he did not even understand what the words meant, but after learning their significance he got a vision, and that vision was that he would make a clock that would be so wonderful that he would bring the entire world to his little village to see this clock. He persisted and did make such a clock, and he brought the entire world that traveled and many that made special pilgrimages to see this clock, consequently bringing fame and fortune not only to himself but to the village in which he lived. There is a moral in this that you gentlemen can take home to yourselves. You have not the problem of bringing the entire world to you but you have the problem of bringing the entire community in which you conduct your theater to see the exhibitions you provide for them and you can only do this by conducting your place in the right manner; securing suitable subjects for the public to see, by advertising to make known the fact that you have these subjects, and by the way you conduct your house and way of living become the permanent and necessary part of the community rather than looking upon it as transient and conducting something of questionable worth, as has been so often the case in our business in the past.

No great thing has ever been accomplished without an ideal; without a plan. Neither the manufacturer, the distributor, nor the exhibitor can continue in the future without a definite plan and the ideal way to advance the best interests of the business as a whole would be for the different elements to do team work according to some definite plan. The manufacturer should not endeavor to exploit the exhibitor nor the exhibitor to exploit the manufacturer. They should co-operate and work together. The plans of the organization which I have the pleasure of directing have in mind this form of team work. That you appreciate the necessity for the planning of a future or making plans a part of your future is evidenced by the activity of your speaker relative to the subject of censorship.

You recognize in censorship one of the big problems that faces the industry, but unfortunately merely going on record as denouncing censorship and being opposed to it does not solve the problem. In meeting this grave danger as well as in the conducting of your house for the future manufacture of business there must be definite plans to secure certain results. I have heard plenty of opposition to censorship but from no source have I heard a reasonable remedy for the curing of the censorship condition facing us. I have tried to look into the censorship problem from all angles, and while I believe that we should have free speech and uncensored pictures, the right to express ourselves as we see fit in the greatest of all means of expression of motion pictures, at the same time our desires or wishes along this line with well planned action will not prevent the spread of censorship throughout the land particularly when those anxious to make quick money out of motion pictures will produce subjects of such a nature that they only encourage censorship wherever they are shown, and this merely to secure quick returns that come from the exploitation of sensationalism and indecency and the people endeavoring to censor for the good of the community such subjects do not discriminate between them and the helpful, wholesome class of pictures that are so largely in the majority in this country today.

None of us knows to what extent the business may advance in the future. Who could have imagined five years ago that at an exhibitors' convention we would have present the greatest and most popular operatic star in the world, Geraldine Farrar, to grace a convention by her presence? Who can tell what recognition may come or what dignity may surround this business in which we are engaged in the next five years?

The motion picture business has often been compared to mining where in the early days of free gold mining, the washing of gold from the soil, anyone with a little experience or equipment found mining profitable. Later, however, when the supply of gold on the surface had been exhausted it was found necessary to invest capital in machinery, to engage engineers to lay out the work, and to make a business of mining. We have in the motion picture business exhausted the free gold mining methods and must make a business of it in the future and the success of such houses as the Strand of New York, the Stanley of Philadelphia, the Imperial of this city, the Orchestra Hall of Chicago, as well as many others throughout the country, show that our business is fast reaching that state and it is a business that deserves the best that we have in us. It is a business that has never had a history but that is now getting one. It is a business that is gathering statistics and data as to what has been done in the past and what is being done now that will guide us as to what we may do in the future.

Those exhibitors today who are trying to run daily changes even in the larger communities and are utilizing the big expensive productions produced by the manufacturers in such a way that they cannot possibly be advertised or shown to that part of the community which it is necessary to see them in order to support their production will find that the manufacturers cannot continue long making quality pictures for this class of support. We do not expect to see the elimination of the manufacturer through the lack of support on the part of the exhibitor, however, as quickly as we see the elimination of the exhibitor who persists in such methods through inability of the manufacturer to furnish it such subjects to meet this condition. The manufacturer will furnish the subject to those exhibitors who are progressive enough to run them for a suitable length of time and handle them in a high-grade manner. The success of houses running pictures for all week, half a week, or more than one day in most every community proves that it is feasible to give better productions this recognition and this recognition they must have for the manufacturers to continue making them.

There is at the present time a great overproduction both of motion picture films and motion picture theaters, if it can be so expressed. There will have to be a narrowing down process, an elimination process, and we are about to see the beginning of the last struggle for the survival of the fittest in the motion picture industry. The amount of capital necessary to engage in the business in any branch insures an early termination of the present condition of excessive and destructive competition. The prizes of the future are bound to go to those who best realize what the future has in store and who best plan what steps are necessary for its and their welfare.

H. M. WARNER CHAMPIONS INDEPENDENT EXCHANGES OF COUNTRY

Convinced that individual exchanges allowed to operate without being dictated to by a governing body are in a better position to flourish than offices established throughout the country under managers selected by a parent organization, H. M. Warner, secretary and treasurer of the Standard Photoplay Distributors, Inc., returned to New York with contracts to supply the Standard program to independent exchanges in every territory visited during his two weeks' absence from New York.

"What appeals most strongly to the many film men with whom I discussed the program," said Mr. Warner while commenting upon his trip, "is the fact that the man handling Standard pictures in every territory must necessarily be a responsible exchangeman and have his own capital invested in his own enterprise. This makes it incumbent upon him to deal with his patrons so as to give his business permanence, by representing his goods exactly as they are and charging for them in accordance with their true value. In other words, he is not a manager drawing a fixed salary from some distant office, which is liable to shift him or discontinue his services at any time and is driving him continually to show immediate returns on the pictures forwarded to him. Upon his present dealings depends his future success as an investor, and his reputation as a business man. Under these conditions he must demand productions that meet with the approval of the theater owners and he must charge for them according to their worth and without being controlled by prices fixed at some point where conditions are entirely different from those in his own territory. This compels him to exercise his best judgment in determining the needs of the theaters and causes him to use his best efforts to select the subjects that will help him to maintain a well balanced, high class service."

BRADY'S "ISLAND OF SUSPRISE" A COMING VITAGRAPH FEATURE

William Courtenay and Eleanor Woodruff head a cast of Vitagraph players in a picturization of Cyrus Townsend Brady's human interest story, "The Island of Surprise," now being produced under the direction of Lorimer Johnston. "The Island of Surprise" is crowded with adventure that will inject visualized action in the film version that is impossible to convey in the cold type on the printed page. Of the many Brady books adapted by the Vitagraph Company for screen presentation not one but what has scored a distinct success and this, the latest story to be placed in production, gives every evidence even in the first few thousand feet of negative, of being the richest in dramatic suspense and thrilling episodes of any previous Brady story. Already two railroad cars, a full Pullman dining car with its load of human freight, and a Pullman sleeper have been wrecked and completely destroyed by fire. Director Johnston took a company of all-star Vitagraph players from Jersey City to within twenty-three miles of Philadelphia in order to obtain twenty scenes that included the wreck, which was staged near the residence of J. B. Duke. To add realism to this wreck, Director Johnston did not inform his players of that was to happen and his cameraman, William McCoy, who had his camera set up in an advantageous position, secured realism in every minute detail, even to the horror depicted on the faces of the actors when they thought the wreck was real. "The Island of Surprise" will be completed in five parts and enacted in the principal characters by Mr. Courtenay, Miss Woodruff, Julia Swayne Gordon, Zena Keefe, Charles Kent and Anders Randolf.

SHEEHAN OF FOX COMPANY OPTIMISTIC ON CONDITIONS

W. R. Sheehan, general manager of the Fox Film Corporation, recently returned from a tour of the tain twenty scenes that included the wreck, which was very optimistic. He says that the company will start its fall season by scheduling one feature a week and among its stars will be William Farnum, Theda Bara, Nance O'Neil, Frederick Perry, Annette Kellerman, William E. Shay, Valeska Suratt and Dorothy Bernard.

Mr. Sheehan says that the influence of films on the nation at large can hardly be overestimated. He contends that it seems a far cry, for instance, from the subject of the drink evil to that of the moving picture industry, yet the latter is bringing tremendous pressure to bear on the elimination of the former, and numbers of people who previously spent most of their income in saloons now turn for relaxation to the moving picture theaters. One instance which he cited was that of a man who is a wholesale liquor dealer in Seattle, Washington, and who is now erecting a five hundred thousand dollar building on Seattle's busiest corner which is to be a moving picture theater. The liquor dealer told Mr. Sheehan that people must find some kind of relaxation and the decided change of public sentiment on the liquor trade brought him to the conclusion that the moving picture business is the one thing to fill the bill.

Mr. Sheehan in his remarks also mentioned censorship and said that the newspapers realized the importance of films and before long would realize the necessity for lending their utmost aid to curbing the exercise of unfair and senseless censorship.

Mr. Sheehan closed by saying: "The secret of our corporation's success may be attributed to the fact that its head, William Fox, is a man whose practical experience covers every angle of the moving picture business. He started the company which bears his name on January 1, 1914."

J. SEARLE DAWLEY RETURNS TO FAMOUS PLAYERS FILM CO.

J. Searle Dawley, conceded to be one of the foremost feature directors in the world, who joined the Famous Players Film Company shortly after its inauguration in 1912, remaining with that organization until the formation of the Dyreda Film Corporation, in which he was instrumental and of which his name supplied the first two letters, has now returned to the Famous Players producing staff, and will be assigned the direction of an important series of features.

J. Searle Dawley.

Mr. Dawley is among the oldest directors associated with the motion picture art, and was one of the first in the United States to undertake the production of features. His activities in this direction cover a wide range of subjects, many of which have been recorded among the most notable feature successes in the annals of the screen. He contributed a great part of the success achieved by the Famous Players' third release, Mrs. Fiske in "Tess of the D'Urbervilles," and subsequently created a number of the epochal productions which established the then unprecedented artistic standard of the Famous Players in feature producing, a policy of which at that time the Famous Players was the only exponent. As is now generally known it was the amazing popularity of these early multiple-reel subjects that attracted a number of other film producers to the feature field, with the present result that this is now the greatest branch of the motion picture industry throughout the world.

Mr. Dawley's first production for the Famous Players in his new affiliation with that company will be of Marguerite Clark in "Helene of the North," an unusual romance that presents this dainty star in the most unique impersonation she has yet assumed since her first triumphant association with the screen. The subject combines in a decidedly novel manner the cultured atmosphere of aristocratic society circles with the rugged environment of the trackless wilds of northwestern Canada, between which far extremes the drama sways with uninterrupted fascination. "Helene of the North" is scheduled for release on the Paramount Program August 19.

POPULAR PLAYS AND PLAYERS PRODUCING MUCH FOR METRO

One of the Metro Pictures Corporation's most active producing companies at the present time is the Popular Plays and Players Company. This concern has just completed a fine picture with Mme. Petrova. It is called "The Vampire," an original play by Lee Morrison.

Mme. Petrova has been much fatigued by her arduous duties at the studio, which consisted largely of acting under sunlight, at Fort Lee where Popular Plays and Players have their studio located, and where the sun rays shoot through the glass roof much stronger than if the scenes were photographed in the open.

After a short rest, Mme. Petrova will begin work again for Popular Plays and Players. Her next picture will be "My Madonna," taken from Robert W. Service's classic poem of the same name. Following "My Madonna," Mme. Petrova will be seen in an original play by Aaron Hoffman entitled "Go and Sin No More." This production it is understood will show Mme. Petrova more prominently than in any emotional role in which she has thus far been pictured.

Edmund Breese, last seen on the Metro Program in "The Shooting of Dan McGrew," will soon be under way in another of the Service poems called "The Song of the Wage Slave." The title amply suggests that this will be a story so powerful that Mr. Breese will find that his quality of acting will have full sway for vigorous and heart-pulling appeal.

Popular Plays and Players will retain the services of Mr. Breese for a production to follow "The Song of the Wage Slave." It will be "The Way of the Strong," an original play by Ridgewell Cullum.

The first appearance of Gail Kane on the Metro Program, will be made in "Her Great Match," a Clyde Fitch play written expressly for Maxine Elliott by that author, in which she starred most successfully. The picture is nearly finished and it will be released some time in August. After a short rest, Miss Kane will start work again for Popular Plays and Payers, in a production of another Clyde Fitch play, entitled "The Girl with the Green Eyes." This play was produced by Charles Frohman at the Savoy Theater, New York, with the late Clara Bloodgood in the role that Miss Kane will assume.

What will prove to be one of the biggest productions ever made for the screen will be an elaborate version by Popular Plays and Players of Clyde Fitch's "Barbara Freitchie." An important star has already been secured for this work but at this time, for certain business reasons, it is thought best to hold back her name for future announcement.

In depicting the incidents in the life of Barbara Freitchie, most of the scenes will be taken at the actual places where they occurred. The Mayor of Frederick, Md., has already invited the Popular Plays and Players to come to Frederick for its work and has promised to throw the town wide open for any kind of picturization that may be necessary.

NEW LUBIN STUDIO

The Lubin Film Manufacturing Company of Philadelphia this week supplies a photograph of its new studio, just completed at Sixteenth street and Glenwood avenue, Philadelphia, which is four stories in height, built of Lubin's new studio.

brick and has an area of more than 50,000 square feet. With such an enormous capacity for the making and finishing of film, the Lubin product will doubtless be handled even more rapidly than in the past and still more deserve its trade name "clear as a bell."

LASKY TO CONTRIBUTE NINE RELEASES DURING NEXT QUARTER

With nine new productions as its portion of the new quarterly list of releases through the Paramount Pictures Corporation, the Jesse L. Lasky Feature Play Company announces for the first time that the photoplay version of "Carmen," with Geraldine Farrar as the star, will be shown to the public in October.

The new Lasky releases will be equally distributed through September, October and November, which marks the beginning of the second twelve months of the Paramount program. Three Lasky plays will be released each month. While for the moment chief interest probably revolves around Miss Farrar in "Carmen," the list of stars and productions contains several important names new to the field of the photodrama and some exceptionally interesting titles.

September will be the month of exceptional interest on account of the selection of the stars and plays for that period. The releases will be the Lasky-Belasco production, Blanche Sweet in "The Case of Becky;" Charlotte Walker in "The Dark," original play by Hector Turnbull, and Lou Tellegen, noted romantic actor in "The Explorer," by W. Somerset-Maugham.

Great expectations are centered around "The Case of Becky" with Blanche Sweet. Frank Reicher is the producer. He supervised the making of "Secret Orchard" with Miss Sweet, and in this new Lasky-Belasco production he and Miss Sweet have stopped at nothing to further the ends of the play. As recalled by those who saw David Belasco's stage version the leading woman role is a girl with a dual personality. This sort of work is new to Miss Sweet.

October's three releases, of course, are chiefly interesting because the name of Geraldine Farrar appears among them. The "Carmen" production, staged and produced by Cecil B. DeMille, from a scenario by William C. DeMille, is one of the most ambitious things the Lasky Company has attempted. In support of the noted prima donna will appear Wallace Reid, Pedro de Cordoba, William Elmer, Jeanne MacPherson and Anita King. The other two plays of the month will be Donald Brian (his debut) in "The Voice in the Fog," from the novel by Harold MacGrath, and Laura Hope Crews in "Blackbirds," from the play of the same name.

November—last of the three months of the quarter promises comedy of exceeding worth in the photoplay versions of James Forbes' great play, "The Chorus Lady," and Victor Moore in "Chimmie Fadden Out West." Blanche Sweet in "The Cheat," also an original photoplay by Hector Turnbull, will be released that month.

Samuel Goldfish, executive head of the Lasky Feature Play Company, is of the opinion that the first quarter of the coming year reveals the Lasky Company as the leader in the photoplay feature field.

TWO PATHE BALBOA STARS MARRY AFTER HURRIED COURTSHIP ON COAST

William Courtleigh, Jr., and Miss Ethel Fleming were united in marriage at Long Beach, Cal., on July 21. Both are members of the acting force of the Balboa Amusement Producing Company. Mr. Courtleigh is a member of the well known theatrical family and is at present appearing in the name part of "Neal of the Navy," the smashing patriotic serial which Balboa is filming for the Pathe Company. Miss Fleming is a protege of President H. M. Horkheimer of the company and has just been making her initial appearance in pictures. Both Mr. and Mrs. Courtleigh, Jr., came from New York recently, but did not know one another until meeting at the Long Beach studio. Their union came as a complete surprise to the entire Balboa family. They had intended keeping it secret, but it leaked out when they were delayed getting their license and thus late in reporting. They will have a belated honeymoon, for two hours after the ceremony Mr. Courtleigh had to leave for San Francisco, where some scenes in his piece are being made at the Mare Island Navy Yard. As Miss Fleming was playing in another production, she could not accompany him.

V-L-S.E OFFICE IN CINCINNATI

The V-L-S-E announces the opening of a new office at 138 West Seventh street, Cincinnati, Ohio, in charge of R. S. Shrader. Mr. Shrader is of the hustling type of salesman, and since coming to the V-L-S-E has given excellent proof of his ability. As recently announced, Mr. Shrader is the man responsible for the exceptional booking in Cincinnati, for an eighteen days' run of "The Island of Regeneration."

Thomas Ince Discusses Future of Feature

PROXY DELIVERS HIS CONVENTION SPEECH

[Thomas H. Ince, director-general of the New York Motion Picture Corporation, prepared with much care the address published below, since it was to have been delivered by him in person before the fifth annual convention of the Motion Picture Exhibitors' League of America, in session in San Francisco, Cal., on July 16. But at the last moment Mr. Ince was summoned East on business and Frank Keenan, the actor, appeared as his proxy and read the address.]

WHEN a man, whose life-work is that of striving to provide amusement for the public of the world—and not making speeches from the rostrum—is tendered a request to address a gathering of men, whose knowledge along certain lines is greater than his own, he must needs feel highly honored. Such a request is, indeed, a flattering tribute to his versatility; a monument to his opinion of conditions that prevail in a sphere outside of that in which he toils. Those are my sentiments respecting this event.

When, a month or more ago, your honorable committeemen presented me with an invitation to tell you what I think of the future of the feature, I was compelled first to debate with myself the advisability of accepting. I am a producer. You are exhibitors. And, being exhibitors, you are more conveniently able to ascertain the likes and dislikes of the American photoplaygoing public.

"The Future of the Feature" is a subject with which you—all of you—are vastly, I dare say, more intimately conversant than I am. Yet, you have asked me to give expression to my views regarding it. Therefore, I repeat that I deem it an enviable honor to have been selected as one of the speakers at this—your annual convention.

In hearing what I have to say concerning the future of the feature, I know you will treat it as coming from a producer. I have surveyed the situation from a producer's standpoint, with the help of that information anent trade conditions, which has been imparted to me through the medium of the esteemed executives of the New York Motion Picture Corporation—Messrs. Kessel and Baumann. I have given it a careful, painstaking study—as only one who is sincerely engrossed in his work as I am can give it. I have climaxed my investigations by enlisting the services of the observations I have made during my career as a producer. And, before attempting to dwell further on the subject at hand, I want to tell you that I think the production of true feature photodramas is but just now in its infancy. Infancy, I admit, is a word that is hackneyed when used in reference to the motion picture art. But not so, when applied to the feature.

Let me first hark back to the days when I became but one of the many engaged in this great industry.

My early experiences were of the kind that now make me shudder at the thought of their repetition. The root of the evil rested in the fact that system was an unknown quantity. To use the vernacular, the noble game of "passing the buck" was the most popular form of pastime. Everyone concluded that his particular duties should be expedited by someone else.

Those difficulties, however, are irrelevant to the issue, and I cite them as only being incidental to what followed. It was the advent of more serious competition—the tremendous growth of the industry and the advancement of the art—that gave rise to further obstacles. Producing companies, as you will readily remember, continued to spring into existence everywhere, the construction of theaters seemed then, even as its does now, never-ending, and the American public's cry for better pictures became more pronounced, almost by the day.

Better pictures! Aye, there was the rub! They were a necessity, if the photodramatic art expected to prosper. But necessity, so the proverb reads, is the mother of invention. Consequently, there was little surprise manifested at the birth of a suggestion that pictures be made longer. Such a plan, I am not too modest to admit, had for some time found nourishment in my mind, so that I was quick to jump at the opportunity of carrying it into effect.

My initial effort was the production of "War on the Plains." It was two reels in length and if statisticians are correct it was the first of more than 1,000 feet that had ever been made in America. Reports of its success from a financial standpoint gave impetus to the movement. Unhesitatingly I decided that the so-called feature could be made popular, and thereupon resolved to feed more of them to the waiting populace. So I produced a few other two-reel plays and then announced "The Battle of Gettysburg." That, I feel safe in saying, speaks for itself.

Information that sifted out of the business channels of the company, shortly after the release of "The Battle of Gettysburg," immediately convinced me, beyond the slightest shadow of a doubt, that the feature was destined to become a fixture in the industry. And it seemed that countless other producers had come to labor under the same belief. For, from a vast majority of the concerns then doing business came the announcement that their respective outputs would, in future, include pictures of two or more reels in length.

And thus the feature motion picture took its place—a place it has not relinquished and moreover never will relinquish.

To say that the feature has come to stay would be putting it mildly. Not alone has it come to stay, but it has come to grow even greater in importance, too. You have but to pick up the trade journals and cast an eye at the advertisements appearing therein, to learn the truth of what I have said. Page after page is devoted to the exploitation of the feature film. And in the march of events, a comparatively few manufacturing companies are remaining loyal to the one and two-reeler.

That statement necessitates a discussion that is highly material—a discussion of the future status of the smaller films. It is not only my opinion, but the opinion, too, of numerous others with whom I have talked regarding the same subject, that the single and two-reel film will never pass. Both will always find a market. Neither ever will have to go begging for a place to show. Neither ever will have to fight to retain popularity with the multitudes of motion picture lovers throughout the country. Neither ever will have to be many times better than either has been in the past year or two. But both, and I say this unequivocally and without fear of contradiction—both will have to bow obeisance to the multiple-reel feature, with more complete humility than ever before.

I have said that the one and two-reel films will never lack for a market, that they will never have to go begging for a theater and that they will never have to fight for popularity. Why, you ask. Because, motion pictures, in a measure may be compared with the so-called legitimate theatrical productions, as the latter were some years ago. The feature pictures take the same rank, when coupled with the single-reel or two-reel film, as the four or five-act play of the footlight realm does, or did, when coupled with the vaudeville program.

There are those among the amusement-seeking people of the world, who can afford but a few spare moments for their entertainment. They must go where there is such entertainment as will have a start and finish. They are not content to pay admission to a theater playing a four or five-act play, when they have but a half-hour in which to seek pleasurable diversion. Ergo, the necessity of the variety house, where an act lasts from ten minutes to a half-hour.

This identical situation obtains in respect to pictures. Let me give you an illustration. I happened to be on Broadway, in Los Angeles, one day not long ago, when two sales-girls from one of the department stores, approached. Obviously, they were intent on spending their noon recess from their work, by attending a motion picture show. One house was exhibiting a five-reel feature. Another theater, immediately adjoining, was advertising two single-reel films and the same number of two-reel productions. The girls started for the feature house. They had scarcely observed the fact that a five-reel subject was the program, when they stopped, turned about and entered the other theater. "We only have twenty minutes," I heard one say as she passed me, "and you know, it would be awfully disappointing to have to get up and leave, after seeing only one reel. In this place we will, at least, have time to see a complete picture."

That little incident, in itself, is adamantine proof, I think, that the smaller film production will never have to hunt for a market. Therefore, because it will never have to hunt for a market, it will never have to fight for popularity nor beg for a theater.

There has been much discussion, pro and con, of late, over the prospect of "two-dollar movies," and the question propounded appears to be, "Will the public fall for them?" or words to that effect. The fact that the public is eager to spend two dollars a seat to see a film production has been demonstrated. And, I feel that there will be no difficulty in demonstrating that the public will continue to spend two dollars a seat to witness drama on the screen.

It will require time and expenditures of fortunes. But it can and will be done. It will take time to make perfect photo-productions; and money, as well. And only perfect productions can possibly convince the public, as a whole, that the sum of two dollars is worth spending for an afternoon or evening's entertainment.

To this end, it is essential that we provide picture-plays, such as have never before been provided regularly. In my opinion, there have been perfect photo-plays. But they have been comparatively very few. They have lacked the "Two-dollar" aspect. They, on the whole, have been unworthy of presentation to the public as a full afternoon or evening's entertainment. And it is that element of worthiness that we must impart to our future features, if we are to expect them to command theatrical prices.

One of the strongest arguments in support of my contention that the feature production is but in its infancy and that it rapidly is progressing to a position that will surpass our greatest "legitimate" productions, is the fact that the most illustrious stars are recognizing the importance of the films. True, they are expensive, but I have stated that money must be spent, and pay-rolls constitute a part of the expenditures.

For years and years the public has been paying handsome admission prices to see this or that notable actor or actress on the stage. The world has virtually admitted that the possibilities of the camera—of the studio—are vastly greater than the stage. Then, why should the world hesitate about offering the same amount of money to see the same stars on the screen?

I am a firm believer in the magnetism—the commercial value—of a prominent actor or actress in motion pictures. I am so staunch a believer in that doctrine that every one of the pictures I am making now and intend to make will have a celebrated artist at the head of its cast. And I do not believe that a star only has a commercial value. He has an artistic value to pictures as well. For, what of his artistry found no medium of manifestation on the stage is bound to find it in the studio. The limitless powers of the camera will seek out and give expression to his pantomimic abilities and thus will the drama, on the screen, be elevated to the heights that have never been attained by that on the stage.

In producing "The Alien," adapted from "The Sign of the Rose," in which Mr. George Beban worked under my direction, I found these things to be true. I had long been an admirer of Mr. Beban's character delineations on the speaking stage. And yet until I saw and observed the very lines in his face, as his emotions dictated their formation—when I saw them on the screen—I never had accorded him the credit that was due.

This, I contend, is applicable also to other wonderful artists of the drama and time will show if I am correct.

In conclusion, I might sum up my brief remarks by again emphasizing my prediction that the feature photodrama is only just coming into its own; that another year will see it packing theaters with people who will think nothing of paying heretofore unheard-of prices; that achievements now almost unbelievable will have been accomplished, and that instead of having but a few masterpieces a year, we'll have one every few weeks.

The motion picture industry knows no bounds. That is a statement frequently made, but it cannot be too sincerely repeated. It is not in its infancy, but it is still going to school, and it will not have reached its maturity until my prophecies have been borne out.

I want to tell you again, gentlemen, how profoundly honored I feel that you have made me one of your guests at this convention, and I want to congratulate you on the big, potent part you have played in raising the motion picture art to the standard it now enjoys, by your communion with the manufacturer. I wish you good fortune in your respective enterprises. I wish you harmony in the ranks of your splendid and powerful organization. And I sincerely trust that you all may live to see my forecastings fulfilled concerning the future of the feature. I thank you!

NO. 1,130,645. Method of Coloring Films. Issued to P. E. Snow, Croydon, England, assignor of parts to H. M. V. Sharp, Croydon, England, and H. V. Lawley, Battersea Park, London, England. A method of Coloring Cinematographic Prints. An enlarged print is made; from this, an enlarged stencil is made; from this, a stencil of normal size is made, the stencil then being a gelatine image on a celluloid strip. This image is saturated with dye and the dye transferred to the print by contact and pressure, thus coloring the print.

No. 1,134,611. Reflecting Cinematographic Camera. Issued to Robert Head, assignor to Robert L. Watkins, New York, N. Y. (Application filed May 26, 1909.) In the camera, the shutter carries a reflector. While the lens is open, to make the exposure, the light from the lens passes to the sensitive film strip; then when the shutter closes that path to permit the film to shift, the reflector upon the shutter reflects the image to a focusing screen where the operator may watch the image as in a reflecting hand camera, and if necessary, may follow a moving object with the focus of his lens while the picture is being taken.

No. 1,134,664. Take-Up System. Issued to George W. Bingham, Brooklyn, N. Y., assignor to The Bingham Manufacturing Company. The take-up reel winds the film with the leader out and the tail in the middle of the coil. The take-up magazine is a horizontal reel pan with a cone for a bottom. The leader end of the film is fed to the inner surface of the wall of the pan, the conical bottom guides the film against the wall, and the push of the film turns the pan as the film is fed steadily into it. The system of the take-up produces a reel with the leader outside, ready for reprojection without rewinding.

No. 1,136,194. Light Control System for Printer. Issued to Adolf Wolfsohn, assignor to Motion Picture Appliance Company, New York, N. Y. An electric lamp furnishes the light for printing; a rheostat regulates the strength of the light; a ratchet switch controls the rheostat; and finally, notches in the edge of the negative control the ratchet switch. As a notch passes the printing window, it shifts the ratchet switch to change the rheostat as required for the following stretch of film print.

No. 1,137,320. Shutter. Issued to F. W. Hochstetter, New York, N. Y., assignor to H. P. Patents & Processes Company, Inc. The improved shutter is a drum shutter having color screens in its windows.

No. 1,136,236. Panoramic Motion Pictures. Issued to Thomas A. Killman, Nashville, Tenn., assignor of part to E. H. Roy, Nashville, Tenn. The object is to provide means whereby the "field" of a motion picture may be very much extended, to an extent greater than "wide-angle" lenses offer, and whereby "panoramic" motion pictures may be taken and projected. The invention also provides means for projecting motion pictures upon a curved screen. The upper figure may represent either the camera or the projector. A "battery" of lenses are so arranged that the picture taken by one lens will match the margin of the picture taken by the next lens. The pictures for each lens occupy a horizontal strip of the picture film. Thus, in making a negative, half the horizon may be covered by one camera, or all of it by two cameras simultaneously, and the pictures may be projected upon a semicircular screen with the projecting booth in the middle of the arc, producing the full illusion of a panorama. If such projection could be made general, the limiting "narrowness" of the motion picture stage would vanish.

No. 1,135,846. Feed Magazine. Issued to Harold J. Rickon, San Francisco, Cal., assignor of part to E. H. Kemp, San Francisco, Cal. The reel feeds from the center of the open hank of film, the novelty of the reel being found in the double cone which forms the center of the reel or magazine. The film passes over the inner cone, is deflected outwardly, then by the outer reversed cone it is deflected again into a plane parallel with the main hank of film on the reel, and then is in condition to pass downward into the motion head.

RICHARD TUCKER AGAIN WITH EDISON

Richard Tucker has returned to Edison primarily to play the part of George Osborn in the feature production of Vanity Fair," in which Mrs. Fiske is to be starred. Mr. Tucker played the same role with Mrs. Fiske, in the theatrical version, which, however, will not be used in the Edison version, an entirely new and complete scenario having been prepared from the book itself. Edison has been able to secure several players who figured in the original stage production.

Richard Tucker.

Mr. Tucker, however, is not new to Edison films, though they are the only pictures he has played in. He returns from Worcester, Mass., where he had his own stock company for the summer season. Except for occasional visits to the stage, Mr. Tucker has been with Edison nearly four years, and has appeared prominently in many of their most successful releases.

He was born in Brooklyn and was an industrious bank clerk in Rochester, N. Y., when the theatrical yearning became too much for the routine worker and he joined a stock company then playing there. After about a year's experience he was with Nat Goodwin and after a season with Bertha Kalisch in "Cora," Mr. Tucker joined his fortunes with Mrs. Fiske and appeared in some four plays and several curtain raisers with her.

In the photoplays Mr. Tucker has been one of the quickest to gain popularity, as he combines exceptional experience and technique with a spontaneity—a natural boyishness of manner, tempered with a clean-cut and directness of interpretation making for a distinct screen personality. He is again a member of the Edison stock company and will appear soon in a number of the three and four-reel features which that company is putting out.

SELIG RED SEAL AUTHOR NICHOLSON COMPARES BOOK, STAGE AND SCREEN

Meredith Nicholson, author of the novel upon which the six-reel Selig Red Seal play "The House of a Thousand Candles," which will be released through V. L. S. E., Inc., on August 23, recently commented on the great difference between screen subjects and those of the stage and printed page.

"Things that we see in the motion picture drama and which are plausible in every way on the screen would seem utterly out of place on the stage or written in fiction form," he said. "This may be one of the reasons motion pictures have given the speaking drama a body blow and have taken the melodrama clear off the stage. The screen has, without a doubt, been established for all time and all those within the industry must now bend their efforts toward improving the quality of the productions and the mechanical devices used in presenting them.

"The motion picture is a part of the great American democracy; it places the theater within reach of anyone, for even the poorest of families can afford a nickle for each member of their home circles at times to enjoy subjects at one of the neighborhood houses. That was the great trouble with the speaking dramas—it was presented in theaters whose prices were beyond the reach of the poor. Motion pictures can be made a pulpit in which social and political ideas may be placed before the people as in no other way. Their moderate admission price is their great democratic feature.

"Doubtless there are many plays which will not be as appealing in motion pictures as on the speaking stage, because of the absence of the human voice, but there is no fact quite so visible at the present time as that the stage has suffered greatly from the popularity of motion picture. It seems almost too bad, too, for only within the last fifteen years has the American playwright had his chance. Up to that time the producers refused to consider the work of any American playwright on general principles; they thought if a play was written by an American it was not worth producing. It was only after they had been proven wrong that the producers changed their point of view. Then motion pictures entered and the playwright is now forced to work under a handicap, unless he turns his hand to the new art, as many of them are doing."

Ring W. Lardner, the Chicago sporting editor, is the latest writer to make a success by the epistolary method. Even the small boys on the streets are saying "You know me, Al." Be sure when this happens to a writer, he has arrived.

"The Letters from Bugs to Gus," which form the basis of the Ring Lardner series of comedies released by the World Film, are intensely humorous outpourings of a confidential nature, written in amusingly colloquial language, that have delighted the millions of readers of the Saturday Evening Post and the Chicago Tribune Newspaper Syndicate. Bugs tells how he becomes a baseball player, and the first of the series of films devoted to showing his misadventures with the Chicago Cubs.

In the picture, leading lights of the baseball clubs and the big leagues are shown on the field—Roger Bresnahan, Garry Herrman, Honus Wagner, Thomas and others whose names are household words wherever baseball is talked about—and that is all over the United States. The captions are in the quaint broken English used by Mr. Lardner in his Saturday Evening Post articles, and in themselves will provoke many smiles.

BALBOA-WALTHALL SUIT DECIDED

In deciding the injunction suit of the Balboa Company against Henry Walthall in favor of the defendant, the court in Los Angeles found that there had been no sufficient contract between the two parties. The Balboa Company introduced telegrams and letters which indicated that a contract had been contemplated, but that no contract was ever consummated—hence the decision in favor of Walthall.

READ MESSAGE ON NEXT PAGE

Read this message from J. Stuart Blackton to the mothers of America

This book is dedicated with respect, reverence and admiration, and with the earnest prayer that their eyes may be opened to the peril which menaces and will continue to menace them, their children and their loved ones, until the present state of "Unpreparedness" has been remedied.

"The hand that rocks the cradle rules the world," and in those mother hands lie the power to demand and to receive adequate protection against war, just as they demand and receive proper police protection against crime.

To the fearless patriotism of Hudson Maxim, and the plain, practical, straightforward truths in his book "Defenceless America," I owe the inspiration and impetus which caused me to conceive and write the silent drama of "The Battle Cry of Peace."

To over a score of other real Americans—some of the most prominent men in Army and Navy Administrative circles in the United States, I owe a debt of gratitude for the invaluable assistance of their advice and counsel in the preparation of that photo drama and its subsequent visualization in motion picture form.

Nearly every important motion picture yet produced has been made from a story or a book. In this case the book was written after the completion of the silent drama.

The aim and object of both book and picture are to arouse in the heart of every American citizen, a sense of his strict accountability to his government in time of need—and to bring to the notice of the greatest number of people in the shortest possible time the fact that there is a way to insure that peace for which we all so earnestly pray.

"Let us have Peace!" General U. S. Grant, one of the mightiest warriors in the world's history, coined that phrase. With his genius for command, for attack and defense, he whose business was War, wanted Peace.

No body of men are half so anxious for Peace as the Army and the Navy. Every sane, constientious human being is against War and for Peace.

But as a Nation we must not only be Champions of Peace and of the laws of humanity, but we must have the Power to enforce those laws! The Power to insure that Peace!

Let us disarm—let us become helpless, unprotected, emasculated, and there shall be Peace, but not Peace and Plenty, not Peace with Honor. Crushed, bleeding and trampled upon, America may find herself on her knees begging for "Peace at any price."

The Contract and the Player

A CONTRACT.

A scrap of paper—an agreement by which two parties decide on certain terms and conditions, each party binding himself to perform certain deeds in return for which the other party is to fulfill certain promises.

In one sense such a document is technically but a flimsy bit of paper bearing certain written word or phrases, but from long usage and custom it has come to mean much more. The man who knowingly and willfully breaks the terms of a contract is looked upon with scorn by his fellowmen and rightly so.

In the motion picture industry actors of fame and note sign contracts with powerful film interests, by which they agree for a certain stipulated time to appear in productions staged by the latter, giving, during the period of the contract, all the best of their art and skill, in return for what, in many cases, amounts to a princely fortune when compared with the humble stipend which the thespian was once wont to receive.

And yet in spite of the supposed sacredness of the contract we find frequent cases in which the actor, at a moment's notice, sees fit to ignore all his obligations and to desert his employer to enter into another contract with another employer, though it is to be seriously doubted whether his second contract is any more to be depended upon than was the first.

From the actor's standpoint the jump from one film concern to another is held to be justifiable because the new contract enables him perhaps to earn a higher salary than did the first. But what about the manufacturer?

In estimating the cost of productions the manufacturer always has to take into consideration certain fixed charges, such as studio overhead, cost of raw stock, developing and printing, distribution, posters, advertising, royalties, etc., but in preparing his estimate he figures, naturally, on the sum agreed upon between himself and the actor for the services of the latter, and ofttimes it happens the actor is promised a salary of such a tremendous figure that the only possible way by which the manufacturer can "break even" is for him to feature the player in a certain number of highly advertised feature productions for which a higher rental can be obtained. The manufacturer could never afford to employ the actor in the first place if he knew beforehand that the player would appear in but two or three releases and then jump to another concern, though by distributing his work over a number of subjects and correspondingly charging the salary against more production he sees a possibility of making a small profit even though the salary may appear a tremendous one.

But when the actor breaks the contract between himself and his employer all the estimates of the manufacturer go wrong and he has to prepare his figures anew.

Ethically the player has no more right to break his contract—or the manufacturer either for that matter—than has the coal company from whom you purchase your winter's supply of fuel. It would be considered highly illegal for a fuel dealer to agree with his patrons to deliver to them a stated amount of fuel at so much per ton, the agreement reading that delivery was not to be made until a stated date, and then when the appointed time arrived to have the dealer tell the patron that the price of coal had advanced in the meantime and that delivery could now only be made provided the higher sum were paid. True the price might have advanced, but the terms of the original contract are still presumed to be binding.

Frequently film manufacturers suffer the loss of their best players in silence, fearing lest the taking of legal steps to retain the services of the player will expose them to the ridicule of their fellow manufacturers and the public, but the increase of the practice on the part of players of regarding contracts lightly will surely and certainly lead to an understanding between manufacturers by which it will be difficult for players breaking existing contracts to secure employment with other reputable manufacturers.

In this day of advertising it is largely the manufacturer who is responsible for the actor's fame in the first place, and it is only the long continued exploitation of this or that player which leads to the actor in question becoming a notable, a public favorite, worshiped and admired the country over. Knowing this condition to be true the manufacturer will have the more incentive to unite in an effort to stop the breaking of contracts.

In a small fashion the same trouble has been experienced in baseball, but the public so quickly showed its disapproval of the contract jumping that players soon came to realize that they were shattering the pedestals upon which they had been raised and today one rarely hears of the baseball star who is a contract breaker. Doubtless the exhibitors themselves will equally resent the lack of loyalty on the part of film favorites, once they realize in full the injustice which the practice works upon the manufacturer and the exchange.

In justice also to the great host of actors who earn their daily bread by posing in the hundreds of studios that dot the country, let it here be said that the contract breaker in the profession is the exception and not the rule, for by far the great majority of the players are implicitly to be relied upon, are men and women of their word, who when they sign a contract honestly intend to live up to the stipulations of that document. Accordingly this editorial is intended only for the few who, blinded by their lust for riches, have seen fit not alone to ignore their plighted word and their own best interests, but to deliberately ignore their written agreements with their employers.

HEARST-SELIG PHOTOGRAPHERS FILM "EASTLAND" DISASTER

Exclusive views filmed of the Eastland disaster for the Hearst-Selig News Pictorial may be utilized in the investigation of the cause of the terrible catastrophe now under way in Chicago, Ill. The Hearst-Selig News Pictorial staff was on the scene of the disaster five minutes after the big passenger boat turned over. The motion pictures of the terrible disaster, carrying an object lesson likely to prevent similar tragedies in the future, were ready for general release a few hours later.

The presentment of these pictures, it is believed, will be an impressive object lesson and aid in the preventing of similar accidents in the future. The scenes presented herewith are exclusive and will probably figure importantly in the official investigation instituted by the United States Government and the City of Chicago.

We lamp by a recent issue of the esteemed Dramatic Mirror that the cut line writer is stealing our stuff. When stuck for a caption beneath a cut illustrating a stirring scene from Somebody's five-reel feature we have been wont to surmount the difficulty by writing "A tense moment in ——————'s '——————.'" This method evidently appeals to our Eastern friend also, and upon mature deliberation we have decided to waive all rights, titles, claims and interests to this particular phraseology.

Lubin's "The Climbers"

Reviewed by Hugh Hoffman

CLYDE FITCH left quite a legacy of hard work to motion picture adaptors. Fifty per cent of the thought in a Clyde Fitch play is in the cleverness of the lines. Therefore with the lines eliminated there is some work to be done to elaborate the plot so that the motion picture production will be as brilliant as the stage play.

One of the quickly apparent things about a Fitch play when one begins to analyze it is that some of the wittiest lines are entirely superficial, and could properly be classed as decorative detail. His plots while founded on the merest grain of an idea are nevertheless substantial and hold water like a new copper kettle.

In the picture version the story begins with the wedding, which is somewhat earlier than the beginning of the stage play, that began with the return from the funeral. According to Clyde Fitch the entire Hunter family were social climbers. They were selfish to a painful extreme, even to Blanche Hunter herself. They were cold-blooded aspirants for social distinction regardless of national or international laws of social warfare. They would torpedo their best friend if it would advance them any in the social scale.

On this point the picture play is not as emphatic as the stage play. The very thing that drove Richard Sterling into bankruptcy was the ambition of his wife and his wife's family. The picture version does not even show a good motive why Richard Sterling should have plunged so recklessly into speculation. The Hunter family, according to the scenario writer and producer, are not of any special interest so far as the affairs of Richard Sterling are concerned. They merely appear as the mother and sisters of his wife, and their heavy drain upon the family resources has not been sufficiently shown. This is why it is difficult for a reviewer to state whether the picture will please those who never saw the play.

The three principal characters are Blanche Hunter, later Mrs. Richard Sterling; Ned Warden and Richard Sterling, played respectively by Gladys Hanson, George Soule Spencer and Walter Hitchcock. These three parts are unusually well acted by three highly experienced players. It seems, however, that Mr. Spencer and Mr. Hitchcock would have been better cast if each had been given the other's part. Here again we draw from the stage version. Robert Edeson in the original production played the part of Ned Warden and Frank Worthing played the part of Dick Sterling. Walter Hitchcock, who plays Dick Sterling, looks like Robert Edeson, and George Spencer, who plays Ned Warden, looks like Frank Worthing. They got away with their parts perfectly from a technical point of view, but it was really very hard to keep from remembering the Edeson-Worthing combination.

The photography is not the best that Lubin has been known to do. There are lots of feature film manufacturers who would consider the photography in this picture as something particularly fine. There are some fine refreshing winter scenes taken in very crisp cold weather, without the slightest trace of static. We are not so sure of the advisability of photographing love scenes in such cold weather as this on account of the large clouds of vapor that come from the mouths of the lovers, especially when their faces are close together.

The Christmas eve feast.

Barry O'Neil has produced the picture in a capable manner from a technical standpoint. The scenes are correct, the costumes are proper and everything else is according to Hoyle. There is a splendid dinner scene that is very pleasing on account of the overhead lighting effect. A big ballroom scene is cleverly arranged and directed. The entire story calls for elaborate settings and the scenes measure up to the requirements.

The story in brief is that of two suitors for the hand of Blanche Hunter, whose family is socially ambitious. Dick Sterling wins the girl and his friend and rival, Ned Warden, acts as best man at the wedding, though bitterly disappointed. Financial reverses occur in the family and soon all are penniless. Dick Sterling turns out to be a coward in the face of failure and Ned Warden, through his love for Dick's wife, saves the family from disgrace. Dick's cowardice increases to such an extent that his wife becomes disgusted with him and openly declares her love for Ned Warden. The story ends cleanly, as Warden steps out of the case after having recouped the family fortunes by legitimate means.

"The Scarlet Sin"

Reviewed by Florence Enk

HOW easy it is for us to give up our pleasures and luxuries to do our duties in the world and yet how hard it is for others to give up those things and accept the harder things life has to offer. "The Scarlet Sin," a Universal Broadway Feature released on August 2, is a photoplay in four parts, written along these lines. They have cast Hobart Bosworth as Eric Norton, a minister, who found it very easy to give up his fashionable church and beautiful home to go to a small mining town, where poverty and the devil reigned, to try and bring these men to see light. Jane Novak, Eric's wife, Cecelia Norton, found it as hard to give up these luxuries as Eric found it easy. Of course, there always has to be someone to tempt the weak and Frank Elliott as Richard Allen has been given this part. Grace Thompson played the part of the stronger type of woman and as Edith Jackson, Norton's ward, she was well cast.

There is action aplenty throughout the four reels. It is a thrilling moment when Cecelia, after her elopement with Allen, returns to her husband and son on the eve of her husband's marriage to his ward, finds the home ablaze and her son in it. She makes one wild rush through the flames and smoke up to the nursery, returns with the child in her arms and then faints. Realization of her wrongs comes to her too late, and she passes away.

Because Eric Norton will heed to the call of his heart, and take a church in a small mining town in order to convert these men, Cecelia, his wife, listens to Richard Allen, and one morning while Eric is preaching at the little church she makes ready to go to Paris with Allen. However, the owner of the town's "blind pig" and Norton's most bitter enemy comes to the church and tells Norton of his wife's action. Norton will not believe him and they immediately start a fight, the owner of the "blind pig" getting the worst of it. Norton returns home and finds what this man has told him is true. He goes to his enemy and apologizes but the apology is not accepted.

The owner of the "blind pig" assaults Norton.

The miners strike and it is Norton's endeavor to get them back to work. He goes to the owner of the mine and between the two they get the men started. However, the owner of the "blind pig" cannot see Norton win favor with the men and so steals some dynamite and after the men have gone down into the earth the dynamite explodes. Many of the men are killed or injured and among them is this owner of the "blind pig." When he is brought up to earth by the minister, he confesses that he did it, thinking the blame would fall on Norton, and then passes away.

While all this is happening, Cecelia has been deserted by Allen in Paris, and she and another unfortunate are occupying an attic room together. Cecelia tries to secure enough money to come to America, but finds it pretty hard. Her room mate goes out, doning Cecelia's coat, and when she comes to the river drowns her sorrows in the water. Her body is found and seeing the name of Cecelia Norton in the coat they think it is she and when Norton learns of her death through the papers he marries his ward.

However, on the eve of the wedding Cecelia returns to the little mining town, and peeking in at the window sees all.

Norton considers Allen his friend.

She is grief stricken and desires one last look at her little son. The little boy has become tired and his nurse takes him home and puts him to bed. On coming down the stairs she trips and falls, dropping the lamp. The house immediately catches fire and the nurse escapes. Cecelia, seeing the blaze and realizing her child is in the house, goes in and rescues him and then becomes unconscious.

Eric and Edith hear of the fire and rush from their festivities. Norton has the unconscious Cecelia taken to the doctor's office and when the covering is taken off her face, Norton is dumbfounded to see his former wife, whom he thought dead. Cecelia begs Norton's forgiveness and this being granted, with a smile she slips from this world. "And though her sins were as scarlet they were washed white as snow."

Edith, unaware of the identity of the woman who rescued Eric's son, finds content and happiness in the squalid surroundings which were the cause of Cecelia's "scarlet sin."

"The Diamond From the Sky"

Reviewed by John C. Garrett

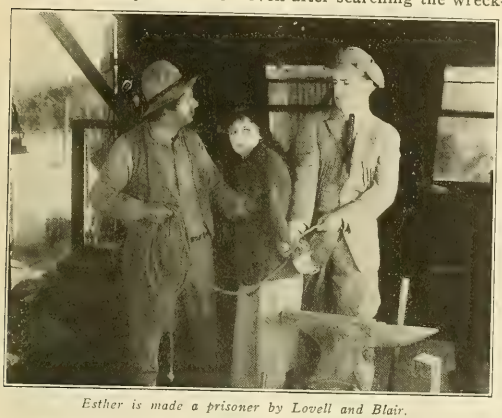
CHAPTER FIFTEEN of the North American serial "The Diamond From the Sky" or "Desperate Chances" does not serve to develop the plot of the story to any great extent. The scenery along which Quabba and Esther take their flight is beautifully photographed.

Opportunity has afforded every member of the remarkable cast in this chapter a chance to show dramatic ability as well as physical prowess. Esther spies an aerial cradle used to send ore across a gully and dragging the loyal Quabba after her she climbs into a perilous basket and directs the hunchback to untie the cable fastening, and out into space go the two occupants. This is one of the biggest thrills which has been staged in the serial.

Marmaduke Smythe amuses himself with the contents of Esther's suitcase.

The diamond is dangling from the beak of the pelican and Quabba chases the bird over swamp and marsh and through grasses until he loses track of it. Later we see the diamond emeshed in a slimy marsh with frogs playing around it.

As the picture opens Esther sees Blair Stanley and Luke Lovell carefully surveying the ruin they have wrought. She pulls herself together, climbs out of the debris of the wrecked stage coach unhurt, and later knowing she is caught in the mesh of the souless plotters, hides the document which tells the story of the heir of Stanley hall under the rocks.



Luke Lovell gathers the girl in his arms and carries her to a blacksmith shop and there he and Blair Stanley tie the girl to the anvil and leaving her, go back and again search for the missing document.

Meanwhile Marmaduke Smythe pulls himself out of the wrecked stage coach, takes his deerhead and a suitcase which are lying near at hand and starts off on a tireless journey over the mountains. Upon arriving at a resting place he opens the suitcase and there to his dismay finds that it is full of feminine finery.

Esther tries to wrench herself from the ropes which are holding her to the anvil and at last by working the blowers which flame the fire, with her feet, she heats a poker and throwing this to the floor she manages to apply it to the heavy rope and later is freed from the bonds. Quabba who is passing the blacksmith shop hears Esther beating against the door and crying for help. He takes a heavy mallet, smashes the door through, and he and Esther make their escape.

age and being unable to find the document return to the blacksmith shop and find that their prey has escaped, and immediately start in pursuit of the girl and Quabba.

After a chase over mountains and through valleys Blair and Luke Lovell come upon Esther and Quabba on the edge of a deep gully. Here the girl forces Quabba into the frail aerial cradle which has been used to send ore across the gully, she herself climbs in after him and the frail car starts out into space. Blair Stanley whips out a knife and cuts the cable and we last see Esther and Quabba dangling in the air from a frail rope.

Arthur Stanley, now known as John Powell, arrixes at Santa Barbara to board his yacht. Vivian Marston also arrives at the same hotel, and as she is bound to throw herself in the way of Arthur she learns that he is about to take a trial trip in the yacht and hires a sail boat with a desperate plan in mind.

tion for the labor difficulties which arise constantly. Tommy, however, has no faith in the plan, and does not hesitate to openly oppose it between employer and employed.

There is no doubt but that the goddess is sincere in her belief that a corporation such as above mentioned will revolutionize working conditions and make all men equal; she was instructed along these lines during the entire fifteen years which she spent in the secluded cave which she was led to believe was heaven, and she emerged from there convinced that she was sent to reform the world; but circumstances lead one to believe that the multi-millionaire, Barclay, has another motive besides that of benefiting mankind in accepting the presidency of the universal corporation.

As has been the case in the last few episodes of the Vitagraph serial beautiful, this chapter is marked with several mob scenes which, for realism and effect, have seldom been equaled in pictures. The action here is not near as quick or thrilling as that in chapter eleven, but the interest is nevertheless kept at its highest pitch by the series of unique situations which the twelfth episode employs to advance the story.

As the last scene in the preceding chapter faded out, Celestia and Tommy were seen walking through the gates of the besieged stockade. The goddess succeeds in influencing the enraged mob of striking miners, who were about to charge the walls surrounding Kehr's place, to delay the attack at least long enough to afford her an opportunity to explain her plans for reforming and saving the world. The delay becomes permanent, and a compromise with the coal baron, Kehr, results, as the men are brought to realize that their stubborn battle against capital will bring them nothing but poverty and suffering.

There is one person in the assemblage, however, who does not approve of Celestia's doctrine, and that is Mrs. Gunsdorf. Her hatred for the girl leads her to become the tool of Mary Blackstone, who has journeyed to the mining

In the meantime, Stilleter has wired Barclay, telling him of Celestia's success in subduing the mob, and inviting him to visit Bitumen to see for himself the wonderful headway which the girl is making in her work of reformation. The goddess asks him to accept the presidency of the new corporation which is to own the world and in which each citizen is to be a stockholder, and he consents. Tommy Barclay files past the speaking platform with the men, but, unlike them, he refuses to shake hands with the multi-millionaire, his foster-father, and predicts only failure for the corporation which, he insists, will be ruled by the capitalists—not the people.

"When Love is Mocked"

HOW often do we find the happiness of young lovers wrecked by the advent of some bewitching "beauty," and then how cruel the lover can be to his loved one after his first meeting with this so-called "beauty?" The Selig Polyscope Company has produced a very successful photoplay along these lines in "When Love Is Mocked." It is in three parts and is scheduled for release August 12.

In the cast we find Eugene Pallette, a fisherman, who loves Yvonne, Lotta Grimes, but who forgets her when Mme. La Glou, Anna Luther, comes upon the scene; the fisherman's mother, Lillian Hayward and George Demerst, Mme. La Glou's husband. Every one of these do their best to make the picture what it is and George Nichols, the author and director, may well feel that he has put forth a picture that is worth seeing because of its excellence and clearness of photography and the moral it carries.

Because her husband will not buy her a certain necklace, Mme. La Glou decides to go to the sea shore. At the sea shore she meets a fisherman, who is bethrothed to Yvonne. The fisherman thinks her the most beautiful woman he has ever seen and because Mme. La Glou likes the beautiful figure of the young fisherman she decides that she will amuse herself with him while waiting for her husband to come to her with the necklace.

It is only the matter of a few hours before the fisherman becomes her slave and believes that he really loves her. That night he returns home late and is cruel in his treatment of his sweetheart and mother, who have waited anxiously for his homecoming. The next day he spends entirely with the beautiful woman of the world and that night does not return home nor does he return the next day. The mother and girl are almost exhausted waiting for the one they love to return, but time goes on and still he does not come.

La Glou, finding that his wife has left, decides to buy the necklace and present it to her. The fisherman on coming to the sea shore finds Mme. La Glou with her husband and becomes crazed at the sight of another man with his beautiful lady. He demands an explanation, but Mme. La Glou merely laughs at him and, dazed, he falls over the cliffs, unconscious.

The mother, at home, cannot stand it any longer, and with a lantern searches the shore. Walking along she comes upon the prostrate form of her son and drags him home. Mme. La Glou and her husband return home and a month later when her husband has to leave town, she decides to return to the fishing village to again see the fisherman. She meets the fisherman's mother, and the mother realizing that this woman was the cause of her son's unhappiness, she decides to put an end to her. She offers to take Mme. La Glou to her son. They enter a boat and in the middle of the sea the mother chops the bottom of the boat out, and together they go to their death and the sea, unmindful of its burden heavily rolls on toward the shore.

Love for Yvonne has once more returned to the fisherman and they, unaware of the mother's sacrifice, are happy with each other.

World's "Marrying Money"

Reviewed by Hugh Hoffman

A VERY girly picture is this five-reel comedy production by the World Film Corporation. Add to this the charming and pervading personality of Clara Kimball Young and the result is more than pleasing. Photographically, the picture is a gem. The camera work was done by Harry Keepers, who was so long at the Vitagraph Company, and who accompanied Clara Kimball Young with the Vitagraph Company on her trip around the world, some two years ago.

There is no denying the fact that Clara Kimball Young is a dream. The way her work registers on the screen is a marvel to every motion picture man as well as to the public. She could make any story get over by the mere fact of her presence in the picture. The plot itself borders on the farcical. It is all about a couple of penniless young lawyers, and a will, in which one of them is supposed to inherit a lot of money but doesn't. The wrong fellow gets the money and the young lawyer gets a pittance. Clara Kimball Young is a wealthy broker's daughter and the broker loses all of his money. It becomes a story of love in spite of hardships, further complicated by the usual foreign count who has things all his own way, up to a certain point, when things begin to break in favor of the young hero, who is really the choice of the beautiful maiden.

The story depends entirely upon Miss Young's drawing power. The settings are entirely adquate and excellent. William Jefferson in the leading comedy role is pleasing enough, and handles his part skilfully without ever once getting on the wrong side of the deadline between comedy and pathos. Chester Barnett as Ted Vandeveer, his young partner in law, is most acceptable in the part.

One of the best things in the entire picture is the finish. When anyone pulls a new kind of a finish it is time for critics and reviewers to throw up their hats and dance with joy, and the ending of this picture is a pippin. PATHE'S "The Romance of Elaine" gets more mysterious and contains many a thrill as it progresses. The seventh installment, "The Death Cloud," abounds in thrills and mystery. Again the tramp is active and succeeds in saving Elaine from the hands of Del Mar and his confederates. We wonder who the tramp is.

Throughout the Elaine series new inventions have been used which serve as means of overcoming the enemy or enemies, and in the "Death Cloud," when Del Mar and his confederates find themselves hemmed in by United States troops they use asphyxiated bombs as a means of defending themselves, and the bombs prove very successful.

Del Mar, a foreign emissary has been trying to mine all United States harbors and because of his fear of detection he has found another place for his secret arsenal. This time it is a deserted hotel and here he receives new supplies and issues instructions to his confederates that any person loitering around the place shall be captured and held prisoner.

The tramp brings Elaine her disguise.

Elaine and her party, as well as Del Mar, receive an invitation from cavalry "D" of the United States troops to participate in a paper chase and they all start off. In the meantime the tramp has been watching the goings on around the hotel for a long time unobserved, but finally he is captured and two of the confederates start off and notify Del Mar.

The chase begins and Del Mar accompanies it for a short distance and then at a time when no one is watching escapes back to the arsenal to look the prisoner over. The chase continues and in some unaccountable way Elaine becomes lost. She gets down off her horse in order to get her surroundings and while her back is turned the horse runs away. Horseless she wanders on until finally she comes to the arsenal. Del Mar sees her and they make her a prisoner.

A confederate of Del Mar's comes to take the tramp to Del Mar, but the tramp proves to be a little too much for the confederate and overcomes him. The tramp takes the clothes, including goggles and nozzle of the confederate, and gives it to Elaine, instructing her to assume this disguise and make her escape. Elaine does as she is bid and goes boldly forth. She meets one of the guards of the arsenal and passes by him and after she has gone a little way her hat falls off and her hair tumbles down. Of course, this is a giveaway and the confederate fires. The shots arouse Del Mar and his men and they search for their prisoners, but both have made their escape.

Elaine and the tramp encounter the troops and report what has just taken place. The troops and the tramp start off to capture Del Mar and his confederates. Del Mar and his men, armed with asphyxiated bombs soon make short work of the attack and go back to their arsenal while those Schnell is also infatuated with the girl and realizing Ted's weakness decides to make it a means of winning Austen's love.

One day while Austen, her father, Ted and Bayard are going through a large power plant, Ted becomes frightened and Bayard noting this calls Austen's attention to it. The girl will not believe that Ted is a coward, but finally listens to the plan Bayard unfolds to prove Barham's cowardice. Ted disguises himself and holds up Ted and Austen and forces Ted to give up all of his money and then turns and chucks the girl under the chin. Ted stands helpless, finally walking away from the scene and Austen then returns her engagement ring, telling Ted to come back when he has proven himself a man.

A few days later, Ted saves the life of an old man by rushing in front of a speeding automobile and dragging the man to safety. The newspapers get hold of the story and write Ted up as a big hero. Austen reads of his heroism and immediately telephones him and tells him to come to her, but the boy tells Austen the act was not one of bravery as he did not realize any danger when he saved the man's life.

While at the club Ted learns of the race which is to take place at the Chicago Speedway and he determines to enter and prove that he is no coward. After days of trial racings the final day of the race approaches and Bayard Schnell realizing that if Ted wins the race he will also win the girl, bribes Barham's mechanician to pretend illness in the middle of the race and he knows that Ted is such a reckless driver that no other mechanician will take the other's place.

They are off and Ted is leading the race, when Austen, who is sitting on the grand-stand, sees his mechanician slide down into the seat and Ted is forced to stop the machine. No one else will take the mechanician's place and finally Austen all covered up in cap and duster jumps into the machine and she and Ted start off.

Ted gets back into the race and is the victor. That night while he and Bayard Schnell are at Austen's home, the mechanician whose conscience is hurting him comes in and confesses that he was bribed to become sick.

Schnell is ordered out of the house by Austen's father and Ted and the girl are left alone. He has proven his bravery.

IN "The Princess of India" the Sun Photoplay Company offers a production of rare photographic and scenic beauty. The story, while diffused as is usually the case with spectacular productions, has some pleasing situations and is well interpreted. It is the story of a princess who is afflicted with a strange malady and an English sportsman who, seeking adventure, presents himself to her father, the Rajah, and, posing as a European physician, wins the love of the beautiful princess.

The desert scenes are striking in their uninviting, arid stretches of sandy waste. Especially impressive is the scene in which the caravan is seen in silhouette. The action, supported as it is by these remarkable settings, awakens and sustains the interest of the spectator. Two royal Bengal tigers, splendid specimens, play a prominent part in the picture. When called upon, they furnish some stirring action, notably when they attack a camel which the travelers are forced to sacrific in order to save the caravan.

The high quality of the photography of this film is one of its strongest points. All the scenes are clear and have great depth, and are further enhanced by the tasteful tinting which the finished film has received.

Through an advertisement in a newspaper he learns that a wealthy Englishman wishes to obtain the services of a man acquainted with India, to organize a hunting expedition.

The Rajah of Aude is told that a certain fakir possesses great healing powers. He sends for the fakir and offers him enormous wealth if he succeeds in curing Ivna, the princess, of her strange illness. The healer is unsuccessful and the rajah condemns him to the beasts. Though some of the situations, which are melodramatic, are rather improbable the picture is interesting and entertaining.

Pat O'Malley, who plays the title role, gives an exhibition of his skill on the tight-wire, and he performs many difficult feats with apparent ease and pleasing grace. Gladys Hulette is also featured, and, as Patricia, the little girl who instills in the circus boy a desire for learning, her work deserves only the most enthusiastic praise. Herbert Prior as Bob Hunter is a satisfying "heavy." Charles Sutton is seen as Colonel Beverly. Other members of the cast are John Sturgeon; Bigelow Cooper; William West; Robert Brower; and Mrs. Wallace Erskine.

Tom Stratton, "the boy king of the wire," is injured during the performance in a small town. He is taken to the village doctor's home and treated. Patricia Beverly, a little girl who saw the accident, visits the boy and reads to him. They become fast friends. Patricia persuades Tom to give up his life as a circus performer and remain in the town and work his way through college. Years after this Colonel Beverly dies and Patricia, his granddaughter, is left without an income. She secures a position as reporter on a New York newspaper through Bob Hunter.

The girl does not trust Hunter, but she is forced to ask his assistance to obtain the position. Tom, now graduated from college, works in the law office in the town. Senator Strong prepares a bill prohibiting child-labor and a number of politicians, among them Hunter, offer him a bribe, but the Senator will not be bought off. This bill creates a great dale of interest and the editor of the Record sends a reporter to interview Strong.

The reporter is unsuccessful. Patricia is given the assignment. Tom arrives in New York and at the office learns where Patricia has gone. Hunter decides to compromise the senator by forcing him, at the point of a gun, to sign an incriminating statement. Dressed as a little girl, Patricia is invited into the house by the senator's little daughters.

Hunter, wearing a mask, enters the house and the helpless senator signs the statement. Patricia sees this and she rushes for the telephone. Hunter recognizes her and attempts to break down the door of the room. Tom arrives at the house and hearing her call for help climbs the telegraph pole and walks the wire to the window of the room. Hunter is arrested and the Senator gives Tom a position as his secretary. In the final scene the two young lovers embrace.

used are very good. In the spring of life little Helen Badgley as Pauline Avon meets William Hallet, who is portrayed by Leland Benham. In the summer of life Mignon Anderson, one of the Thanhouser favorites, takes the part of Pauline Avon as a young woman, and she becomes betrothed to Hallet, who as a man, is portrayed by Harris Gordon. In the fall of life the couple, after a rather unhappy married existence, are separated, and in the winter their paths once more cross and they become reconciled to each other. With splendid photography and a well-chosen cast this picture is well worth seeing.

Little Pauline Avon and Will Hallet, playing in Dr. Avon's yard, realizing nothing of the theories of "psycho-analyses" their world was filled with amusement and romance. One day, Frances, a young girl of seventeen, comes to visit at the Hallets, and little Will forgetting his first love, writes a letter, proposing to her. The girl tells him she is already engaged, but to remember that he proposed to her. Frances always kept this note from the little lad of nine years. Later Pauline and Will are married. A baby boy blesses the home of the Hallets, but dies when but a few months old. Pauline never gets over the death of her child and her continual brooding worries her husband.

They move to the city and here again meet Frances, who entertains them at her home. The gulf between Pauline and her husband widens, and one day Will leaves for Chicago on business. As he is coming out of the door he sees Frances, who has just overheard a conversation from which she learns that she has but one year to live. He tells her of his going to Chicago and after he has gone Frances writes a note to her husband, telling him she has but a short time to live and is going away with a man who has always loved her. She hastens aboard the train that Will is on and after telling him of her foolish act the man has her write a note to her husband, telling him that she is going to visit her old nurse. Will jumps off the speeding train and hurries back to Frances' home where he extracts the first note she had written and places the second note in the envelope and leaves it for her husband.

Will meets the "other woman."

When Will gets home he takes out the note and is in the act of throwing it into the fire-place when his wife comes into the room and demands that he show it to her. He tosses the note into the fire-place and his wife picks it up. As she starts to open it he tells her that if she reads it he will leave her for good. Heedless of this warning she reads the note and Will goes out of the door.

Years later Will receives a letter telling him that the cemetery in which his infant was buried is to be cut up and roads put through it. He hastens home and here after rescuing his wife from a burning building they are reconciled to each other.

"The Righted Wrong"

Reviewed by Thomas C. Kennedy

"THE RIGHTED WRONG," a three-reel Milano Film being released by Pathe, is a melodramatic love story of merit with the added attraction of handsome sets, exceptional photography and a splendid cast of players. The theme concerns a young woman, the adopted daughter of a prince, who is forced to become a circus rider through the villiany of the prince's nephew, who eventually receives her rightful heritage and the fulfillment of her love.

The action of the story carries one through contrasting stations of life. Both the interior and exterior scenes of the large estate playing the part of the prince's home are beautiful. Equally true in atmosphere is the action which takes place in the arena and dressing rooms of the circus. The photography contains many remarkable lighting effects.

A scene at the cafe frequented by Captain Sindor.

Captain Lindor, a spendthrift, asks his uncle, the Prince of Lindor, for financial aid. The prince becomes impatient with his nephew, and a heated argument ensues. Hesperia, the prince's adopted daughter, overhears the discussion and through her intercession Lindor receives the money. The prince is still angry and changes his will and makes Hesperia his sole heir. Max, one of the coachmen employed by the prince, is secretly in love with Hesperia. He steals into the house and takes a photograph of her.

Jim Wilson, the head-coachman, learns of this and informs his master. Max is dismissed. While walking about the grounds the prince dies suddenly from an attack of heart failure. Wilson carries him to his room. Wilson takes the will, which he finds in his master's room. He shows the will to Lindor, and promises to remain silent if Lindor, who in the absence of the document, will receive his uncle's fortune, will pay him a steady income.

Hesperia leaves the estate. She sees Max, who is now a famous jockey, with a circus. As she is an excellent rider she has little trouble in securing employment with the same company. Wilson demands more money from Lindor. When the captain refuses to increase his income he threatens to expose Lindor by showing the will which he still retains. Lindor's wife, Magada, sends for one of the circus men, with whom she is acquainted, and promises him a reward if he will secure the will from the coachman.

Max's fellow performer speaks of this to him. Together they steal the document from Wilson. Max substitutes a sheet of blank paper and sends the sealed envelope to Lindor, who boastfully shows it to Wilson and then destroys it. Hesperia presents her claim and she is made mistress of the estates of the Prince of Lindor. Max and Hesperia are married.

Lubin's "The Witness"

Reviewed by Neil G. Caward

ON Thursday, August 5, Lubin will release a three-reel special feature, entitled "The Witness," a grim story produced by Director Joseph Smiley, after the photoplay of Clay M. Greene.

The story concerns Fred Carlisle, head bookkeeper in a bank; James Thorn, a defaulting bank cashier; and their two children, who, as mere infants are sweethearts, and ere the picture ends renew their love vows, though grim tragedy seems to have forever separated them.

Lillie Leslie and Joseph Smiley are the featured players in this three-reel drama, Mr. Smiley appearing in the role of James Thorn, the bank cashier, and Miss Leslie as the grandmother of Carl Thorn, the son of James. Both of these talented players get everything possible out of the roles assigned them, though it is barely possible Miss Leslie could be criticized for not showing the marks of time more distinctly as the story advances.

James Thorn, the bank cashier, after himself embezzling large funds, alters the books of the head bookkeeper, Fred Carlisle, to cover his own crime. Later, when Carlisle is arrested and released on bail, he learns from the night watchman of the bank that Thorn had spent many hours at work on the books when he should have been home abed. Suspicious that Thorn is to blame for his disgrace, Carlisle visits the latter and as the result of a quarrel between the two men, Thorn shoots Carlisle, the act being witnessed by Carl Thorn, the young son of the embezzler, who had hidden behind the draperies in the room and seen all, without his presence being suspected.

The tragedy is reported as suicide, though at the inquest the boy attempts to tell his story which would convict Thorn of murder. His grandmother, however, succeeds in quieting him, and for many years thereafter he is never trusted out of her sight, lest he reveal the grim secret which concerns his father.

To insure safety he is taken abroad by his grandmother and as time passes becomes a bitter misanthrope, forgetting even Elise Carlisle, daughter of the dead man and the sweetheart of his babyhood.

Some years later Carl returns home and by chance again encounters Elise. The two renew their love vows, but the girl receives a letter, left by her mother, enjoining her to devote the rest of her life to clearing the memory of her father from shame, and believing that this imposes a duty upon her from which there is no escape, she writes Carl that a message from the dead renders it impossible for them to meet again.

Elise secures a position in Thorn's office as his stenographer and there overhears an interview between Thorn and the night watchman, in which she obtains proof that her father had been innocent of the crime. With this evidence she goes to Thorn's home to demand that he clear her father's name, but Thorn arranges to abduct Elise to secure his own safety, though Carl frustrates the plot and tells what he knows. Thorn, as the film ends, commits suicide and Carl, to atone for the wrong his father has done, bestows on the innocent victim his everlasting love and protection.

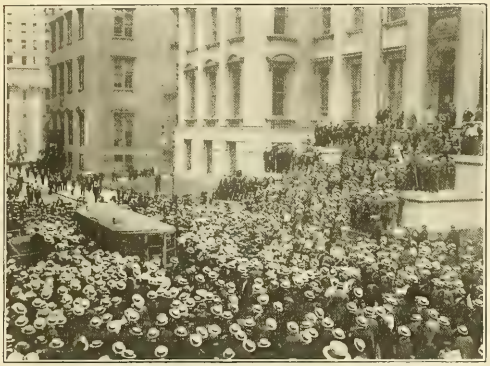
CHICAGO'S MOTION PICTURE HOUSES STAGE "EASTLAND" BENEFIT SHOWS

As a result of the Eastland disaster, benefit performances were announced not alone by the legitimate stars playing in Chicago, but also by several hundred motion picture houses of the windy city.

Many of the houses donated 5 per cent of their entire week's receipts to the families of the sufferers, while hundreds of other houses announced that the entire receipts of Wednesday night's show, Thursday night's show, Saturday's matinee, etc., would be turned over to the relief committees. In fact, as MOTOGRAPHY goes to press, the indications are that there is scarcely a house in Chicago but will contribute its mite toward the aid of the stricken families. Next week an estimate can probably be given of the receipts turned over to the Red Cross Association.

V-L-S-E EXHIBITION SYSTEMS ARE PROVING VERY SUCCESSFUL

Reports coming into the V-L-S-E executive offices from exhibitors in all parts of the country pay earnest tribute to the co-operative policies and the finer points of showmanship being taught by the "Big Four."



From all points come advices that systems of exhibition as suggested by V-L-S-E representatives in all of the principal cities have been started and proved successful in the highest degree. Throughout the country theater managers are using big newspaper space to announce the V-L-S-E features as they are booked, and the daily newspapers are devoting liberal space wherever the exhibitors contract for V-L-S-E service.

Monarch Show Company, Oklahoma City, Okla. Theatrical and moving picture pictures; capital stock, $1,000. Incorporators: A. J. Varvel, E. L. Rodman and C. F. Case, all of Oklahoma City.

Smithville, Tex. Capital stock of the Star Theater Company of Smithville, Tex., increased from $3,000 to $15,000.

The Star Airdrome, McAlester, Okla., (A. Bert Estes, manager) has changed at least temporarily from stock and musical comedy, together with vaudeville, to moving pictures and vaudeville, and will show western and comic pictures as a tryout.

Texas

The Airdome at Brownswood, Tex., which showed vaudeville and moving pictures, was totally destroyed by fire July 16; cause of fire unknown. The loss was partially covered by insurance.

At at meeting of the Council of Mothers held at Dallas, Tex., July 21, Mrs. Reed Finley presented a set of questions sent out by the National Board of Censors with regard to the character of pictures that should be shown at children matinees, which are becoming popular all over the country. The questions applied to a number of detailed points in pictures and asked whether or not a bad influence would be exerted over children under 16 years of age if certain scenes were shown.

Following are some of the questions and answers.

1. Are young people from 12 to 16 accustomed to repicture in their minds details secondary to the main story in the film?

"Yes," the women said.

2. Shall crime and sex scenes which arouse unwholesome curiosity be shown, entirely eliminated, or cut when objectionable parts begin?

Such scenes are not fit for children, they all agreed.

3. What do you think of the use of fear as a motive, to check evil?

Not good, they said. Yet fear of punishment and worry for fear of not being promoted is the main elements used to get results in the public schools, one woman declared.

4. What about pictures of adventure with thrills such as cowboy scenes, etc.?

All right.

5. What is to be done with pictures showing gambling, cheating, killing by shooting or with knives or hanging?

Should not be shown.

6. What about torturing scenes?

Take the law too much into their own hands, they thought.

7. What about details of crime against property, such as arson, thievery, etc.?

Objectionable. Charlie Chaplin should not steal, even with a gun on the end of a cane.

8. Is it possible to lay down any absolute rules about the use by an individual of weapons for defense or offense?

No. Follow the good books, was suggested. A book that is not fit to be read is not fit to be filmed.

9. Shall pictures belittling the sanctity of marriage be shown?

No. They are the most destructive of all and undermine everything.

10. What position should be taken about manifestations of love before and after marriage?

Bad for the child under 16. All "mushy" and "sticky" love scenes should be cut out. It was rather a broad subject, though, the women agreed, to decide on a moment's notice.

11. Shall triangular, intricate problems of married life be shown?

No.

12. Shall evil be punished and good rewarded?

Every picture should not only point out the moral, but prolong it.

13. What about persons appearing partially clothed, such as in bathing suits?

All right, they said, though it depends on the setting of the picture.

14. Is it possible to exclude parts containing leers or winks, etc.?

Yes, for they often contain the worst parts.

15. Can a distinction be made between dancing at parties, in dance halls or low resorts?

Yes, all suggestive dancing should be cut out, even though only a flash to show the kind of a resort.

16. Can any rule be made against showing cruelty to human beings, animals or insects?

There should be. Some children are abnormally cruel and need to be cured. A long discussion followed on how to cure.

The questions and answers as given above will be sent to the National Board of Censors for such action as the National Board may desire to take relative to censoring picture films.

Sunday picture shows in Dallas, Tex., between 2 p. m. and 12 p. m. was held legal in the case tried July 22 in the criminal district court at Dallas, in case prosecuted against W. D. Nevills for Sunday violation of law. County Attorney M. T. Lively announced in court that in view of the decision, no more Sunday picture shows would be prosecuted unless the criminal court of appeals should change the ruling under which the Dallas ordinance was held in force. Twenty-nine complaints had been filed charging violations of the Sunday law. Summed up, the argument on behalf of the picture shows was that the Dallas ordinance did not suspend state law, but that by provisions of the home rule bill the control of picture shows was legally accorded to cities of over 5,000 inhabitants. It is expected that the Council of Churches will appeal the case to the criminal courts of appeals for decision.

NEW YORK NOTES

J. Kempner of the Radium Gold Fibre Screen Company returned early this week from Chicago, where he established a branch office, installed several screens and made arrangements for installing several more.

Albert S. LeVino, secretary and treasurer of the Arrow Film Corporation, is in Winsted, Conn., where he has a company of fourteen people engaged in the production of the exterior scenes for "Right Off the Bat," featuring Mike Donlin. For his extras, LeVino draws upon the town's population, and there isn't any of it that he cannot get, so well are the picture players liked by the villagers.

W. W. Hodkinson and his son, Kenneth, returned this week from San Francisco, where Mr. Hodkinson journeyed in the interest of Paramount and where his son was connected with the Progressive Motion Picture Company. It is expected that Kenneth Hodkinson will hereafter occupy a desk in the home office of Paramount.

North America Film Corporation—Bookings continue to increase and the officials state that with the almost universal satisfaction evidenced by the exhibitors, they see no reason why this serial should not continue to run for at least two years. The "Million Dollar Mystery" has already run over a year.

New York Motion Picture Corporation—The policy and future history of this company has not, as yet, been definitely settled. There have been few transactions in the stock, but the market holds very steady.

General Film Corporation—The future course of this stock is naturally largely dependent upon just how far the V. L. S. E., as an independent organization—though made up of the constituent companies of the General—develops along the line of pretentious serials, marketed by themselves and so curtailing their output formerly marketed through the General.

The market is very unsettled and trades are scarce.

Biograph Company—Stock is very easily secured, with very little buying power in evidence.

Mutual Film Corporation—The common stock is wanted around 59 to 60. Some of the buying the past two weeks has been of a very good character.

World Film Corporation—In spite of some very bullish items, the stock seems to have a downward tendency.

Thanhouser Film Corporation—Very few trades have been reported since this company reduced the par value of its stock from $100 to $5.

The Life Photo Film Corporation is now comfortably situated in their new offices on the sixth floor of the Candler building, New York. Their former suite, located on the same floor, is now the home of the American Correspondence Film Company.

On Monday night, July 26, a Universal company under the direction of Jack Harvey staged some scenes in and about the Cedar Cliff Inn, New Rochelle, N. Y., for a coming Universal release. At midnight the onlookers were the guests of the players at a "between days" supper at the inn.

Harry Reischenbach, director of publicity for the Metro Pictures Corporation, is expected back from California either late this week or early next. H. R. has ever been a busy bunk artist, but during his stay at the west coast he far exceeded his New York speed, in one case getting columns on the front pages of all the newspapers for a story which, whether true or not, is so sensational that it takes a master diplomat to put it over.

Southard Brown, formerly in the publicity department of Warner's, and more recently publicity manager for Alliance, is now doing publicity for the Associated Film Manufacturers, which has recently become allied with Gotham.

The Nichols-Finn Advertising Agency of Chicago have recently opened up an office in the Fifth Avenue building, New York City, with Mr. Kuhn in charge.

Julian Solomon, publicity director for the Oliver Morosco Photoplay Company, is now away on a vacation. George Henken and Pete Schmid have inherited his work.

David Horsley, who came East last week to sign up with the Mutual program and a day or two afterwards returned to his west coast studio, is expected back in Gotham within the next week or two.

PACIFIC COAST NEWS

By "Captain Jack" Poland

Los Angeles

The past ten days have been very busy ones for the motion picture heads, entertainers, publicity men and others, because of the hundreds of visitors. Last week the city was crowded with Elks attending the national convention in this city, and many special stunts and features were pulled off for the antlered herds at the studios.

At Universal City last Saturday, Director-General Henry McRae pulled off a rodeo and western celebration for the Elks and visitors that was exceptionally interesting. At Selig zoo a special program was in order, with the naming of a baby elk born at the zoo after the local order No. 99. At other studios the Elks were welcomed, and many players who are Elks participated in the convention proceedings.

Next came along the big Selig special, which reached Los Angeles last Friday with its twelve cars and special motion picture car and equipment, producing en route from Chicago to California the big feature, "The Seven Suffering Sisters." Many newspaper men, exhibitors and others were guests of the Selig company on the trip, and the concluding ceremonies and conclusion of the pictures at the Selig zoo were of unusual interest.

During the present week the Shriners, numbering several thousand, have been wandering around the studios, and open house and welcome signs have been in order. Then the wanderers from the exhibitors' national convention at San Francisco dropped into Los Angeles, where special entertainments and courtesies were extended them, all of which adds to the prestige and popularity of this film metropolis of the Golden West, and the end is not yet.

Tuesday Mayor Thompson of Chicago, now prominently mentioned for the presidency of the United States, arrived in this city with a special train loaded with officers and members of the Illinois National Guard as a personal escort. The mayor and his party had the picture fever, and after visiting several of the larger studios, where they were guests of honor, featured in pictures, etc., left for San Diego and the exposition, all of which made Los Angeles resemble a Chicago home scene with Chicagoans shaking hands and greeting each other.

Macklyn Arbuckle, well known on the legitimate stage, is making a new record as he appears in films under the auspices of the Oliver Morosco Photoplay Company in a new picture featuring suburban politics of an original order.

Neil G. Caward, associate editor of Motography, was a welcome visitor to the Los Angeles studios last week. He came as a guest of the Selig company on the Selig special, and was entertained royally. At the Universal films Assistant Director-General Don Meaney took personal charge of the visitor and towed him around the new $1,000,000 plant, showing it to the best possible advantage.

Los Angeles friends of Isadore Bernstein, former general manager of the Universal Film Manufacturing Company and builder of the magnificent west coast studio, were pleased to read in the current issue of Motography that Mr. Bernstein had affiliated himself with the $3,000,000 Equitable Corporation and expected to return to the coast at an early date, when a big new studio will be built and used in the production of motion pictures.

Nat C. Goodwin, the famous actor, and "Governor" Otis Turner, leading director of the Universal staff, have already become great friends, with Turner featuring Goodwin in the French play, "Business Is Business," for early Universal release. It will be a four-reel film and is pronounced exceptionally strong.

Director William C. Dowlan of the Universal staff is forging steadily ahead, and is now featuring Carter de Haven and Mrs. Carter de Haven in a college comedy that promises unusual circumstances and much humor.

At the New York Motion Picture Corporation headquarters, Inceville, a large staff of directors, stars and camera experts are busily shaping up for the advance work for the production of big features to be directed personally by Thomas H. Ince for the oncoming Kessel - Baumann - Griffith - Aitkin - Ince-Sennett $2 pictures program. If present plans mature, as now conceived, masterpiece features of an unusually high class will be produced in southern California. It is an established fact that scenic experts are now visiting all parts of southern California seeking locations of the out-of-the-ordinary character for the building of the new special pictures.

Mack Sennett, the Keystone comedy head, is sojourning in Colorado, taking a much-needed rest far removed from scenarios and players, and he reports that he is particularly happy.

With Eddie Foy and all the little Foys, Raymond Hitchcock, Mabel Normand and such comedians constantly busy at the Keystone, an exceptionally interesting class of comedies may be expected for the summer releases.

Charlie Chaplin, the half-a-million-dollar-a-year comedian of Essanay fame, is the star of Broadway in this city. All the kids are aping him by becoming miniature Charlie boys, and every time his name appears over a picture house it means full crowds. He is undoubtedly a popular drawing card, yet, withal, is modest and entertaining personally.

David Horsley will arrive in Los Angeles July 27, and reports from his new moving picture studios are to the effect that he brings with him to Los Angeles a number of new leading men and women and will at once inaugurate a busy season of productions for Mutual releases, using eight to ten companies in producing popular-priced pictures. He expects to recruit his forces mostly among local players, and is receiving applications for positions in various companies now forming. Horsley's return and advent so strongly into the production fields is being watched with interest.

Frank Lloyd, a former well-known Universal director, has joined the directing staff of the Oliver Morosco Photoplay Company and his productions are to be featured by that organization.

CHICAGO GOSSIP

C. C. Pyle returned on Monday from a trip which he made throughout the southern cities, visiting Asheville, N. C., and Birmingham, Ala. Mr. Pyle oversaw installations of the Bartola instrument in both of these cities.

David Horsley arrived in Chicago en route to Los Angeles on the 22nd. He was quite pleased over the contract recently signed with Mutual. Mr. Horsley said he would probably be back in New York within three weeks to personally oversee the arrangement of the studio in Bayonne for the making of some master picture films for the Mutual company.

H. E. Aitken, energetic, businesslike, returned from La Junta, Colo., after obtaining all the signatures to incorporate arrangements for the Triangle Film Company, arriving in Chicago on the 22nd. Mr. Aitken said that his new company was going to devote ample time to the making of the very best kind of five-reel photoplays and that the product would be fully up to that demanded by the public from the three big directors who form a part of this company. The officers of the Triangle Film Company are H. E. Aitken, president; D. W. Griffith, Thomas Ince, Mack Sennett and Adam Kessel, Jr., vice-presidents; C. O. Bauman, secretary. It is understood that Mr. Kessel will also act as treasurer.

Stanly Twist arrived in town on Saturday last. Mr. Twist stated that he had fully recovered his health and is now in a position to take up active work in the film business again.

Aaron Gollos of the Photoplay Releasing Company gave a de luxe showing of the two-reel film, "Sarah Bernhardt at Home," at the Illinois theater on Tuesday, July 27, to which the representatives of the various trade journals and all of the newspapers, as well as all the exchange men and exhibitors who wish to attend, were invited.

George K. Spoor arrived in Chicago on Monday, the 19th, after a short trip to the Pacific coast. It is getting to be so that the railroads would have to go out of business if there were no film companies.

Messrs. Lochrane and Brown of the Northwest Weekly called at MOTOGRAPHY'S office twice during their visit to Chicago last week, reporting excellent progress with their venture in the Twin Cities. This is the first local weekly which has lasted longer than five issues, the present release of the Northwest Weekly being No. 14.

J. Albert Goldman of the Standard Motion Picture Company is doing developing and printing on the wrestling match picture which was taken at Omaha July 4, at which time a new American champion was made.

Richard L. Crescy, who is well known among the Chicago exhibitors through his ownership of the Clifton and Little Sheridan theaters, is contemplating entering into the producing end of the business. Mr. Crescy has a theater in Los Angeles, where he is going about the end of September, and it is quite possible that about this time we will be able to make an announcement of the picture which he has under consideration.

The boys in New York will probably be very much interested in learning that "The Baron" was registered at the Sherman House on the 22nd.

The folks who looped the loop on the Selig special arrived in Chicago tired and dusty, but happy, July 25th. We have had post cards from a number of them while they were en route, and from all reports everybody had a very splendid time.

George Gollos has sold the Sherman Square theater and is now a gentleman of leisure.

Wm. Baker of John Burnham Company is authority for the statement that no further action will be taken at this time toward the completion of the Randolph Film Corporation, which company was to make and release a new serial by Onoto Watana, the well-known authoress.

Bert Adler of New York and the Bronx continues to keep busy down at the Midway Gardens, where he is looking after the details connected with Mrs. Smalley's production in which Pavlowa is the central figure. Bert is getting quite reconciled to the world's greatest summer resort and we have hopes of making him a permanent resident, although he weeps every time he thinks of the Bronx.

We get requests every now and again for information about cities or towns that do not have moving picture theaters at present. We want to take this opportunity of notifying all of these prospective exhibitors that the town of Waynesville, Ill., population 528, has no motion picture theater.

We were sorry to learn that Paul Busch of the Peerless Film Exchange had an attack of ptomaine poisoning last week and was forced to cancel his trip and substitute one to the doctor.

We are in receipt of the following letter from a prospective exhibitor. Anyone interested can get the name of the writer at this office:

Packwood, Ia., July 27, 1915.

Mabel Condon postcards the writer from Avalon Bay, Santa Catalina Island, Cal. She also says something on the post card. Mabel and Horace Greely are both great writers that have points of similarity. Greeley says: "I have three styles of handwriting. One that anyone can read, one that I alone can read, and a third that no one can read." This post card is division three.

Jack Williams has a splendid office and salesroom for theater supplies of all kinds at 18 West Washington street. Jack is one of the old-timers and has built up his business unaided, selling goods at night and by mail to get his capital. He has just been selected as the distributor for a new non-rewind device put out by L. Smith.

E. B. Lockwood and John McGeary have taken space in the Mallers building, under the style of McGeary-Lockwood. This company has completed a 2,000-foot picture for the DeKalb (Ill.) Chronicle and 1,000 feet for the Commercial Club of Benton Harbor, Mich.

Tom Quill of the Goes Lithograph Company motored over to St. Joseph, Mich., in his new Hudson on Saturday last. Tom says he recently closed a $90,000 order for posters and expects to take a vacation during August, now that he has the factory busy with a number of big contracts.

Charlie Worthington, the Fox manager here, spent last week in the Lakeview hospital. He has been having some trouble with his back and awanted to get it all over with at once. He was expected out this week.

W. H. Bell of the W. H. Bell Feature Film Corporation, Chicago, has just returned from a trip through Indiana, where he went to secure bookings on some of the features handled by his company.

Mr. Mittemuch of the Family theater, Davenport, Iowa, one of Motography's family, is remodeling the interior of his house. When completed it will have a fountain in the center 22 feet in circumference, lighted with vari-colored incandescents. The fountain runs continuously, the colored lights being turned on between pictures. A Bartola instrument is one of the features of this house.

Edward Kohl, accompanied by his son, Everard, daugher, Gertrude, and sister-in-law, Agnes Fox, as well as George W. Heinbuch, all of Cleveland, were callers at MOTOGRAPHY'S offices on Monday, July 26, the entire party having visited the Pacific coast aboard the Selig special and being now en route to their homes. Mr. Kohl and his National Theaters Company of Cleveland is known the country over. He owns and operates the Amphion, National and Crown theaters in Cleveland, as well as Luna Park and Forest Park in the same city, and Myers Lake Park at Canton, Ohio. He was the founder of the old United Film Exchange, one of the oldest in Ohio and the last to be absorbed by the General Film Company. Mr. Kohl's first house was established in 1891. Mr. Heinbuch is proprietor of the Superior theater of Cleveland and in attending this year's fifth annual convention of the M. P. E. L. of A. in San Francisco kept up his record, for he proudly declares that he has never missed a national convention and never intends to so long as his health continues. MOTOGRAPHY hopes in the near future to tell its readers more about these gentlemen.

Genial George Cox, one of the powers behind the Advance Motion Picture Company of Chicago, left the city on Wednesday afternoon, July 28, for a two weeks' vacation and thorough rest at the Sacred Heart sanitarium in Milwaukee, this being the first vacation Mr. Cox has enjoyed in more than seven years, and one which he has long looked forward to. Upon his return to Chicago it is expected he will again plunge into his work with renewed vigor, and from present indications the Advance company will be heard from in a big way during the coming months.

NOTES FROM ALL OVER

Another star has been added to the broadening firmament of the motion picture world. His name is "Chang" and the Selig jungle zoo at Los Angeles, Cal., is his home. "Chang," although he is an ourang-outang, works in scenes by himself and works opposite other players.

Miss Edith Reeves, who has just journeyed across the great desert to join the Balboa Company's aggregation of picture players at Long Beach, Cal., is a dainty little woman of the perfect blonde type, prettily sweet-faced and winsome—a talented and experienced actress.

Raymond Jerome Binder, who some years ago was with the Dearborn and Marlowe stock companies and deserted them to enter the business world, takes part in Essanay's "Business Rivals," released on August 3.

The first motion picture projecting machine designed by Nicholas Power, and which saw long and actual service in several of New York's theaters, arrived at the Panama-Pacific International Exposition and was set up in the Power's booth in the Liberal Arts building.

The three states of Indiana, Iowa and Wisconsin have been secured by the W. H. Bell Feature Film Corporation for "Prohibition," the picture that is causing widespread comment in trade circles throughout the country.

Norman MacDonald, former Essanay producer, who this week started to make pictures at the Universal City studios, is making preparations for the production of another of the quiet little pictures of rural life which have become justly popular with the picture-loving public.

Authentic War Pictures.

By far the most interesting pictures of actual happenings in the European war zone are being supplied by the American Correspondent Film Company, Inc., of 220 West 42d street, New York, whose special envoys are risking life and limb to assemble feature moving pictures of the great battles and most noteworthy events of the storm centers of the conflict.

M. B. Claussen, president of the company, announces that "The Battle and Fall of Przemysl," a four-part feature is now ready to be shown.

Notable among the A. C. F. photographers on the firing line are Albert K.

M. B. Claussen.

Dawson, Edward Lyell Fox and Fritz Arno Wagner. Wagner in Belgium, Fox in Poland and Dawson on the Italian-Austrian frontier, make a combination of strength and brilliancy unexcelled. Their articles teem with the fulsome interest of first hand facts and these, rivaling the masterpieces of fiction, together with real life pictures of the fray, are superb descriptions of the world's greatest drama. The fact that they are produced on the spot make A. C. F. Features, both in story and motion picture, most notable contributions to the current records of the war for in every phase they reflect excellent fidelity and superlative quality.

In the production of the Vitagraph superfeature, "The Chalice of Courage," the scenes that Rev. Cyrus Townsend Brady wrote into the story required a full year for completion on the film.

The Federal Film Company have arranged to release one comedy a week on the Associated program, beginning August 16. The franchise was delivered to the Federals on Wednesday, and all arrangements were completed. The first release of the Feds on the Associated program will be "Nothing but Love."

When "Victorine," the Majestic feature in which Dorothy Gish, the Griffith actress, is starred, was being filmed at the Reliance-Majestic studio, Director-General D. W. Griffith ordered Director Paul Powell to hire a circus. Most of the action of "Victorine" takes place in a sideshow.

The American Correspondence Film Company has moved from 30 East Forty-second street to suite 602-6, formerly occupied by the Life Photo Film Company, in the Candler building, at 220 West Forty-second street, New York city. The officers of the company and the personnel of its staff remain the same.

Work upon "The Sable Lorcha," the Horace Hazeltine best seller, in which Tully Marshall and Thomas Jefferson are featured, has just been begun at the Reliance-Majestic studios. Loretta Blake is prominent in the support of Marshall and Jefferson. "The Sable Lorcha," which is to be a multiple-reel feature, is a Chinese mystery story.

Teddy Sampson and Charles Clary, as feature players supported by an exceptional cast, are at work at the Griffith headquarters, the Reliance-Majestic studios, on the two-reel Majestic feature, "Big Jim's Heart." In the support of the two featured players are such effective screen actors as F. A. Turner, Edward Flynn, W. A. Lowery and the Indian player, Eagle Eye.

By courtesy of the United States Navy Department, many motion pictures of life aboard the cruiser Maryland were taken recently, while the ship was in southern California waters. They will figure prominently in the smashing American serial photoplay entitled "Neal of the Navy," which is being made by the Balboa Amusement Producing Company.

Hoyt's "A Black Sheep," featuring Otis Harlan, king of American comedians, supported by an exceptional cast of players, including Grace Darmond, Rita Gould, John Charles and others, has been virtually completed by Director T. N. Heffron at the Selig studios, Chicago.

"Yes, it was a nine-pound girl," said "Silent Bill" Haddock, the well-known motion picture director, with his chest out and a broad smile on his face, "and she entered this life sound and healthy on July 20 and we call her Eleanor May."

Mary Van Buren is known to all regular motion picture enthusiasts because of her excellent work in the Lasky pictures. She is one of the latest acquisitions of the Balboa Company, with which she will play leads.

P. E. Hitchins of Olive Hill, Ky., visited Cincinnati recently in search of equipment for his theater and contracted with the Cincinnati Theater Supply Company to install a Minusa gold fibre screen, made to specific measurements of his theater.

The Onyx Club, having headquarters in Denver, Colo., has just finished its second annual photoplay contest, and announces that Ethel Clayton, the Lubin leading lady, wins the prize with a total vote of 378,235; Marry Fuller being second with 327,645, and Charlie Chaplin third with 325,885.

Last week Director Capellani, who is working on the William A. Brady feature, "The Impostor," for World Film with Jose Collins and Alec B. Francis in the leading roles, took some of his company to Pittsburgh to make some scenes. This week he is at Boston.

"The Pursuing Shadow," the first of Tom Terriss' productions to be released through the Picture Playhouse Film Company, has been booked by Loew's circuit. The first showing of the picture in a Loew theater was at the 59th Street Circle, on July 30, in New York. Picture Playhouse Film Company report a large demand for this production, as it is a highly artistic feature in every way and shows to a high degree the unusually good acting of Mr. Terriss.

World Film Corporation will shortly present the William A. Brady photoplay, "The Ivory Snuff Box," by Frederick Arnold Kummer. Holbrook Blinn plays the lead in the photoplay, which is a powerful detective story. It is Mr. Blinn's second appearance in World Film features, and he has been provided with a strong vehicle for his wonderful dramatic powers.

William Elliott makes his reappearance as a screen star in the title role of "Comrade John" under the banner of the Horkheimer brothers, who own and operate the Balboa studios.

George Ralph has won international fame as an actor, and his playing in "The Yellow Jacket" brought him an offer to appear in Russia when that very artistic play was presented in Moscow. Because of the war conditions, Mr. Ralph is back in his native land, and will be seen in support of Alice Brady in "The Renegade."

The Herald Film Corporation, which has taken New York City and Long Island in the distribution of the Cort Film Corporation's screen production of "The Melting Pot," has also contracted for the New England rights to the picture and will begin booking this week. Washington, Oregon and Idaho were sold last week to.

Complete Record of Current Films

Believing the classification of film pictures by the nature of their subjects to be of greater importance to the exhibitor than classification by maker, Motography has adopted this style in listing current films. Exhibitors are urged to make use of this convenient tabulation in making up their programs. Films will be listed as long in advance of their release dates as possible. Film manufacturers are requested to send us their bulletins as early as possible. Reasonable care is used, and the publishers cannot be responsible for errors.

Brief Stories of the Week's Film Releases

General Program

Hearst-Selig News Pictorial No. 60—Selig—July 24.—Strikers at Standard Oil plant, Bayonne, N. J., fight fierce battle with guards; Governor Spry of Utah reviews Salt Lake City high school cadets at San Diego, California; Kitchener's recruits at Epsom, England, taught to use bayonets; latest fashions by Lucile, Lady Duff-Gordon; thousands greet Liberty Bell at San Francisco; "Chick" Evans of Chicago wins western amateur golf title of Cleveland, Ohio; scenes of the steamer Eastland which capsized in the Chicago river at Chicago, Ill.

Hearst-Selig News Pictorial No. 59—Hearst-Selig—July 29.—Miss Christie MacDonald wins woman's motor boat race at Thousand Islands, N. Y.; Elks march at big gathering in Los Angeles; Schooner Hardy is rammed by steamer Shasta just outside the Golden Gate, California; strike threatens to tie up arms industry where war munitions are being made for European countries at Bridgeport, Connecticut; Director F. L. Brown of the Panama-Pacific Exposition presents Edward A. McManus of the Hearst-Selig News Pictorial with a bronze medal, highest award for moving picture industry given at exposition; first exchange of prisoners between Germany and England at Stratford; old French castle captured by Germans is made headquarters; typhus plays havoc with Serbian forces at Nish, Serbia.

Broncho's Surrender — Essanay—July 30.—G. M. Anderson and Marguerite Clayton featured. The wife leaves with her child for the west and secures work as a school teacher, where Broncho, a fugitive from justice, seeks shelter in her cabin. After sheltering him and he has left, the husband enters and kidnaps the child. Broncho later holds up the stage coach and takes the child, returning it to its mother and then gives himself up and is lead to jail.

Love's Rescue—Biograph—August 2.—Isabel Rea and Frank Newburg featured. shoots his partner and stakes the claim. He returns east with the news of his pal's death. Nell, urged by her mother, promises to marry him. Rand is rescued by gypsies and nursed back to health. Later, at a shore resort, Rand and Doe meet. The latter, astounded to see his old pal alive, steps back over the cliff and is killed. Rand marries Nell.

Her Fairy Prince—Reliance—July 26.—Violet, a lonely little rich girl, discovers Jim, a convict, in her attic playroom. He tells her that he is a fairy prince, whom wicked dwarfs have transformed into a striped zebra. She "changes him back" by giving him clothes. She brings him food and he tells her wonder stories. That night Violet is aroused from sleep by voices in the library. Attorney Vane is trying to bully her father, a judge, into agreeing with his verdict. Violet enters. Vane, springing forward places a revolver at the child's head. "Agree or I fire!" he cries. A long arm from behind snatches Violet to safety and Vane is gripped by the collar and ejected from the house. The judge learns that Vane has unjustly accused Jim. Jim's innocence is established.

The Deacon's Whiskers—Komic—August 1.—Fay disobeys her father, the deacon, and runs off with Edward to go in bathing. Father, siting on the beach with his wife, is informed of Fay's actions by Steve, the suitor of his own preference. The deacon starts to find Edward. The latter, warned of his coming, changes the signs on the outside of the bath houses. The deacon gets into the women's corridor, and seeing a door ajar, peers in. Instantly the door is slammed and he is caught by the whiskers. Here his wife discovers him in a compromising position. Meanwhile Fay and Edward have captured the minister and gone out on a raft. Steve again rushes to inform his would-be-father-in-law, but the deacon and his party are too late to stop the ceremony.

Detective Blinn—(Two Reels)—American—August 2.—Edward Coxen and Winifred Greenwood featured. Detective Blinn, by means of a clever ruse, in a frameup works himself into the graces of a pair of crminals and by patience and diligence becomes their confidant. Jim Howard, a ranchman, falls in love with Ellen Clayton. She shows him a snapshot of Mallard, and tells him he is the man that ruined her father. Jim meets Mallard in a hotel. He imprisons the promoter in an abandoned mine while he goes for Ellen and her father. They identify the swindler. Howard orders Mallard to put down $5,000 or stay in the mine. Mallard agrees to do this. He is freed, and is then presented with the worthless stock which he had sold Clayton. Mallard starts back on an eighty mile walk through the desert.

A Plugged Nickel—Falstaff—August 6—A young business man finds a plugged nickel in his everyday suit. It is thrown out of the window, and later, when in church, he finds it again in his pocket. It is put in the collection plate, but it manages to get back to him. He cannot lose it, as it always comes back, so stops to figure whether he made or lost money. It is laughable to see how the nickel is disposed of and then finds its way back to the business man.

Universal Program

Universal Animated Weekly No. 177.—Universal—July 28.—Water carnival at Hoquiam, Washington; Glass Blowers' Association hold a convention at Columbus, Ohio; Californians give hearty welcome to Champ Clark and Mrs. Champ; the Elks present glittering pageant of floats and costumes at their convention in Los Angeles, Calif.; tragic results follow fierce rioting when thousands of Standard Oil employes attack armed guards at plant in Bayonne, N. J.; Ex-Secretary of State Bryan is escorted through Universal City; New York National Guardsmen display excellent skill during week of war manoeuvres at Fishkill, New York; great Eastland disaster, many lives lost when lake steamer laden with excursionists capsizes in Chicago river at Chicago, Ill.; cartoons by Hy Mayer.

Paternal Love—Laemmle—August 1.—Mrs. Graves, unable to bear the disgrace of her husband's being sentenced to five years for forgery, obtains a divorce. Several years pass. Graves, after his release, is kicked about and hounded. He becomes discouraged. On seeing a wealthy couple leave their house and get into an automobile, he decides to make a haul. Graves is interrupted by a little child in search of a toy. He sees a picture of his wife, and when the child says: "That's my mamma," he hugs the youngster. The mother and her second husband arrive. The child's entreaties save Graves from being turned over to the law. The ex-convict on being recognized by his former wife, points to the child and makes her promise to be silent. He then silently slips out of the window.

It Happened While He Fished—Nestor comedy—August 2.—Jack and his chum are enjoying the fishing. Neal tires, and Jack, left alone, spies a girl wading in the creek. She runs off, but later Jack meets her in the city, and it is not long before the engagement ring is slipped on. Jack, through courtesy, meets Neal's sister and jealousy permeates the atmosphere. Billie returns the ring, and Jack returns to the woods to tell his affliction to the birds. Billie learns of the false alarm, hunts up her dearest, and after some excitement, reconciliation is in order.

The Great Ruby Mystery—(TWO REELS)—GOLD SEAL—AUGUST 3.—Basil Romanoff, a Russian, plans to sell his celebrated ruby to an American, Mr. Van Allen. Ivan Orloff carries the gem to America in the heel of his boot. Heinrich Von Buelow, a German secret service agent, who has spied on the Russian, follows Ivan. Miss Van Allen, a somnambulist, is Ivan's sweetheart. On his arrival he tells her his secret. That night in her sleep she takes the boot and secretes it in her room. Meanwhile Heinrich enters Ivan's room, murders him, and takes the other boot. The girl is watched, and, during one of her night hallucinations reveals the hiding place of the ruby. The detectives allow Heinrich to escape with the wrong boot, which has nothing more valuable than a lump of sugar in the heel.

Her Wonderful Day—IMP—AUGUST 3.—Frances, a young girl living in the slums, reads novels of the lives of more fortunate girls who live in a perpetual garden of roses. Having a holiday, she goes forth in one of the big parks, bent on flowers and romance. An officer sees her trying to pick flowers and she becomes desolate because of the restriction. Jack, a wealthy loafer, sees her and takes her to dine. Her childish purity and innocence affects his hard heart, and he takes her out to his country estate for a day's browse among the flowers. After luncheon he takes her back to town again, and they both part, to lead the life that fate assigned to each.

The Proof—REX—AUGUST 3.—Jones, Drew, and Smith agree that a house cannot be robbed by an amateur. Astorbilt maintains that it can. They send him to tackle a private insane asylum, telling him to bring back a proof of his victory. Astorbilt, unsuspecting, sallies forth. After some curious incidents, the doctor takes him for one of the inmates and he lands in a cell. But why get peeved? Along comes Mollie and helps him to fly the coop. Molly fearing the wrath of the pater, however, goes with him. At the club the boys toast Molly and Astorbilt, and agree that he has won his bet.

In the Claw of the Law—(TWO REELS)—L-KO—AUGUST 4.—Mr. Rawsberry seeing his wife talking with the grocer's boy, decides to get licentious himself. He gets in right with a blonde at lunch, but not so with her pater, who is a good shot with seltzer. Mr. Rawsberry wreaks vengeance by knocking out a few of pa's front lunch-hooks with a brick. Mrs. Rawsberry gets affectionate with a cop and along comes hubby. His chances for the cooler are good. The judge, who is the aforementioned toothless individual, thinks it better to let Mr. Rawsberry off.

My Tomboy Girl—(TWO REELS)—VICTOR—AUGUST 4.—The curate of the boarding school is in love with the madcap. Harry, Rose's real lover, appears on the wall, whistles for Rose, but the principal rudely breaks up their amour. Rose, who cannot control her vivacity, finally gets landed in the cellar by the principal. Rose throws a note out of the window for Harry, but it gets into the hands of the curate, who decides to save Rose and marry her himself. The girls free Rose and put the principal, bound and gagged, in her place. Naturally the curate rushes her to the minister and at his house they find Harry and the girls. A double wedding takes place.

The Mysterious Lady Baffles and Detective Duck POWERS—EPISODE SIX—AUGUST 5.—The capitalist wants his daughter hitched to one of the nobility, and therefore squelches Tom, her lover. Lady Baffles, who is ever keen on family troubles, has her accomplice impersonate a nobleman. The would-be nobleman just suits father, and he orders immediate marriage. Detective Duck advises Tom to elope with Lillian, and gives him a "Smellograph" which even sends messages through steel. The elopers are caught and Tom gets deposited in a vault. He send out his S. O. S. and Duck gets the message. He comes on the scene of woe disguised as a burglar, and Lady Baffles helps him open the safe. Tom dashes out in time to save the situation, for Duck recognizes the imposter. Meanwhile Lady Baffles and the crook blow themselves out of the reach of the law by tampering with the instrument.

"Out of the Flames"—(Two Reels)—Big U—August 5.—Adam Justice, a millionaire, has one daughter, Elaine. He is injured in a factory, and Arnold Becker, a young doctor, comes to his aid. Becker becomes interested in Elaine, or rather, her money, and marries her. Justice becomes bankrupt and the shock kills him. Becker, keenly disappointed, is unable to complete his term at college, and Elaine secretly obtains work in a factory. Leonia, in love with him, persuades him to leave his wife. A fire breaks out in Elaine's factory, and she, injured, is carried home just before Becker has a chance to desert. He hears of his wife's brave struggle to provide for the completion of his education, and a happy reunion ensues.

Little Egypt Malone—Nestor—August 6.—Lee and Eddie, college chums, are in love with each other's sister. Their fathers are business partners. The boys both "broke," send to their fathers for funds with which to return home, but said fathers do not come across, not liking the boys' weak excuses. Not wishing to walk home, they buy the tent and outfit of a former dancer. Lee impersonates the dancing girl, and Eddie acts as "barker." The show is popular with the men, but not so with their wives, who later discover the deception. The boys escape the angry crowd and are forgiven by their parents.

Gene of the Northland—(Two Reels)—Bison—August 7.—Jeanne lives with her brother, Jacques, in the Northwestern country. He is imprisoned for robbery. Several years later, Donald McLean marries her. Jacques escapes from prison, hides in McLean's home. McLean wounds him, but he regains consciousness and staggers off. Jeanne disguised in one of her husband's suits follows her brother. McLean, finding both gone, pursues. Mrs. Cox, a kindly woman, welcomes Jeanne into her home, and Mr. Cox seeing a man in his wife's arms, shoots and wounds her. Jacques, who has become prosperous at trapping, is murdered by a half breed. McLean is suspected, but the half breed makes a dying confession of his guilt in time to save McLean.

Their Bewitched Elopement—Joker—August 7.—The queen of the fairies gets caught in a bear trap, and Tom rescues her. She gives him a whistle which will call her in a time of stress. Tom loves Sally, but then father has to be taken into account. The lovers are forced to separate but Tom sticks around, sees Silas, an old codger, getting affectionate with his beloved, and decides it is time to get Sally to the minister, at all costs. Silas sees the couple eloping, and they are soon hotly pursued. Tom sends out his S. O. S. and the fairy soon rounds up Dad and Silas in the bear trap, from which Dad rather ungracefully gives his consent to the amourous couple.

Around the Corner—Powers—August 7.—Montgomery Stagg, without money, loves Margery Stone. Margery's mother forces her to break an engagement with him in favor of a more showy individual, named Gibson, who takes them to the theater. Stagg, angry, sets out in an adventurous mood, meets a girl in desperate circumstances, and gives up his room to her for the night. She has been wronged by a schemer, who got her to withdraw her money from the bank, and after the elopement left her penniless. Gibson turns out to be the one that has wronged the girl, and Stagg makes him return the money. Stagg ultimately marries the girl that he has helped.

Betty's Bondage—(Two Reels)—Rex—August 8.—Molly is married to a brutal drunkard, Steve Moran; her mother is also espoused to a drink fiend. Martin Dane, a foreman, is interested in Molly's sister. Betty's mind has been biased by two drunkards in the family, and as Dane gets more familiar she runs away to the city to avoid leading the life of a slave. Here she meets Howard, one of her former acquaintances, a theatrical man, who enables her to get a start in the profession. Molly finally recognizes Dane's true worth. Dane visits the city, locates Betty's boarding house and comes face to face with Howard in her room. Howard becomes insulting and Dane throws him out. Betty returns home with Dane and they are married happily.

The Source of Happiness—Laemmle—August 8.—Frederick, the son of Jonathan Rodd, becomes familiar with an adventuress, Olga, who is forcing him to financial ruin. Ruth Margate, who lives on a small farm with her mother, advertises for a lodger and Mr. Rodd goes there. He is impressed with the charm of this girl and tries to get Frederick up to the farm. After Olga tells him he must find some money, or quit his visits, Frederick goes to the farm, and although Olga follows later and tries to win him back, he finally recognizes in Ruth the girl of his choice, and the happy father's wish is consummated.

Milestones of Life—(Four Reels)—Thanhouser—July.—A story of the four seasons of life. In the spring the youth meets the girl of his dreams. In the summer their throth is plighted. In the fall of life, after the married couple have lost their only child, a gulf comes between their lives and the husband leaves the wife to her sorrow. In the winter their paths again cross each other and they become reconciled. For further review, see page 263, this issue. J. C. G.

North American

"Desperate Chances"—(Fifteenth episode of "The Diamond from the Sky")—(Two Reels)—American.—Esther and Marmaduke Symthe recover their consciousness after being hurled down the mountain side in the overturning coach and Esther hides the document relating to the heir of Stanley hall so that Blair Stanley and Luke Lovell will not get it. The diamond is now emeshed in a swamp and frogs are playing around it. John Powell or Arthur Stanley has gone to Los Angeles to board his new private yacht and he is followed by Vivian Marston. For further review, see page 258, this issue.

Paramount

The Fighting Hope—(Five Reels)—Lasky.—Laura Hope Crews and Thomas Meighan featured. Robert Granger is sent to prison for certifying a worthless check, but public opinion blames Temple, the bank president. Anna Granger, sure of her husband's innocence, gets a position as Temple's secretary. She finds out many things about her husband that she would have been happier not knowing. The husband escapes and when he comes to his wife he finds that she is aware of his dishonesty and as an excuse gives the fact that he stole for her sake. Meanwhile the prison authorities, learning of the escaped convict, come after him, and he is shot trying to elude his pursuers. Anna, who has fallen in love with Temple, is then free to marry him.

Pathe

The Righted Wrong—(Three Reels)—Pathe.—The Prince of Lindor dies suddenly. Jim, the head coachman, discovers the will which makes Hesperia, the prince's adopted daughter, his sole heir. Jim promises to keep silent about the will and Captain Lindor, the nephew, receives the entire estate. Hesperia left without resources, seeks Max, a coachman, who was discharged by the prince because he was in love with Hesperia, now a circus performer. Max is suspicious of Lindor. He secures the will and Hesperia is made mistress of the estate. Max and Hesperia marry. For further review, see page 264, this issue.

The Death Cloud—(Episode Seven of "The Romance of Elaine")—(Two Reels)—Del Mar continues to receive supplies in a secret arsenal. Elaine and a tramp are arrested for loitering around the grounds of this arsenal. The tramp helps Elaine to escape and then escapes himself. They meet the United States troops and report the arsenal to the troops. The troops, headed by the tramp, start out to capture this arsenal, but Del Mar and his confederates have seen the troops and by the use of asphyxiated bombs overcome the soldiers. For further review, see page 261, this issue. F. M. E.

The Mesh of the Net—(Three Reels)—Pathe-Balboa.—Halsey Merrick and Bob Taylor, in the secret service, secure jobs on board Captain Royal's yacht. Leone, Royal's wife, is an unwilling passenger, for she knows her husband is a smuggler. Merrick and Leone become friends. The detectives lay their net carefully and though greatly outnumbered they succeed in capturing the smugglers. In the struggle Royal is shot and killed. Later Merrick and Leone are married. There are many exciting moments in this picture.

The Kangaroo at Home—(Split Reel)—Pathe.—The Kangaroo with its many peculiarities makes an interesting subject for these wild-life pictures. The picture is both entertaining and instructive. The animals are photographed under natural conditions. On the same reel with:

Pekalongen.—A town in Java.

The Police-Dog Gets Piffles in Bad—(Split Reel).—Animated cartoon by C. T. Anderson of the Bray Studios. The little dog pesters the butcher for bones. There is a limit to the butcher's patience and his pent-up anger, through an amusing circumstance, is vented upon Piffles, the brave, but bungling cop. There is some real fun in this picture. On the same reel with:

Intimate Study of Birds—Part Three.—The Blackbird, Kingfisher, Thrush, Sedge Warbler, and Wren are shown in their native surroundings.

Whiffles at the Front—(Two Reels)—Pathe.—Whiffles, to please the girl he loves, joins the army. Single-handed he brings to earth an aviator of the enemy. The girl hears of his bravery. Whiffles is wounded. In the hospital he is cared for by a pretty nurse. He immediately falls in love with her. Much to Whiffles' dismay "the girl he left behind" arrives at the hospital to see her hero. He arranges matters to suit himself. The girl is happy with a former sweetheart and Whiffles marries the nurse. The amusing story is well produced and enacted by a fine cast. The two reels are replete with humorous situations.

Universal Special

The Broken Coin—(Two Reels)—Seventh Installment—Universal—August 2.—Kitty gets half the coin, and is cleverly captured almost under the eyes of the others. When she comes to her senses she finds herself imprisoned in a strange room, with the coin gone. Roleau gets on the track of Kitty's abductors, and helps Kitty to free herself, only to be caught again, together with Roleau. Frederick sees King Michael and promises him to get the coin. He returns and fools the weak-minded king by giving him a fake replica of it. Cachio tells Kitty that she is to stay in captivity until she promises to go to America. Kitty picks the lock on a door of her room and comes face to face with two lions. She closes the door, pale with fright, just as one of the beasts springs. Sachio enters with a smile of satisfaction.

The Scarlet Sin.—Broadway Universal Feature—August 2.—Featuring Hobart Bosworth. Eric Norton is persuaded to give up his fashionable city pastorate for the guidance of the men in a rude miners' camp. Cecelia, his wife, is infuriated at his decision. Soon after taking up the new life she absconds with Richard Allen, a wealthy bachelor of her former city acquaintance. Eric warns Richard that his life will answer for betrayal of her trust. After thrashing an insulting miner Eric rises in the estimation of the men. The brute explodes the mine in revenge and is caught in his own trap. He is heroically rescued by the minister. A happy marriage between Eric and his ward, Eda, is now consummated. Two years later Eric hears of Cecelia's suicide in Paris, but after a battle with himself he gives up his idea of vengeance. His house catches on fire and his little daughter is in peril. An unknown woman rushes into the house and brings forth the child. She turns out to be Cecelia. Another woman in Paris had been murdered with Cecelia's coat on—thus the mistake. Eric forgives her, returns to Eda and resolves to keep the discovery quiet. For further review, see page 257, this issue.

The Climbers—(Five Reels)—Lubin—August 2.—Joe Hunter's family all want to climb to social heights. To help them do this, he drains his purse, and when a stupendous reception is being given by his family he shoots himself. Later his mother's aunt supplies the family with ample funds to tide them over the rough parts. Their money is again all lost, after much trouble. Blanche, Joe Hunter's married sister, and her husband, who have fallen apart, are last seen in a final and everlasting farewell. For further review, see page 257, this issue.

Vitagraph Special

The Goddess—(Two Reels)—Vitagraph—Chapter Twelve.—Once outside the stockade, Celestia persuades the miners to cease their attack until they have heard her plan to settle the struggle between capital and labor. Mary Blackstone learns, from her father, Celestia's doctrine, which in reality will bring about an aristocracy of wealth. Jealous of Tommy's affection for the Goddess, she sets out for Bitumen to warn him of this. Mrs. Gunsdorf, also jealous of Celestia, expresses the wish that the Goddess were dead, and Mary replies that the person bearing that news would receive a diamond ring which she wears. The workers are completely won over by Celestia's plan to make of the United States a stock company, and agree to vote only for legislators who will amend the constitution. Tommy remains firm in his opposition of the proposed plan. Celestia starts out on a country-wide tour to stump-speak in favor of Gordon Barclay for president of the United States. For further review, see page 259, this issue.

World

Marrying Money—(Five Reels)—World.—Clara Kimball Young featured in a story of two young penniless lawyers and a will which one of them is supposed to inherit, but doesn't. The other fellow gets the money and the young lawyer gets a pittance. Clara Kimball Young is a wealthy broker's daughter and her father loses all of his money. For further review, see page 260, this issue.

Miscellaneous

The Princess of India—(Five Reels)—Sun Photoplay—The Rajah of Aude offers a handsome reward to the fakir if he succeeds in curing Ivna, the Princess of India, of her strange illness. He is unsuccessful and the rajah condemns him to the beasts. Sir Arthur, an English sportsman, finds the healer tied to a tree in the jungle. He learns of the beautiful princess and seeking adventure he poses as a European physician. The rajah's daughter falls in love with him and in a short time seems cured of her malady. Sir Arthur asks as his reward permission to marry the princess. The rajah gives his consent. For further review see page 260, this issue.

Mutual Announces Revised Program

MANY ATTRACTIVE FEATURES

DEFINITE announcement is made at the offices of the Mutual Film Corporation that its program revision and expansion is now complete and that the revised and increased schedule will be in the hands of the Mutual branch offices within the next ten days. As a result of extended conferences and contract making, President Freuler announces an all feature program, with no advance in film rental price, together with increased variety and a wide range of exceptional subjects.

The following plans have been definitely completed: Two three-reel features with Broadway stars in the leading roles will be released each week. The Knickerbocker Stars, now releasing three reelers on the General program, will release in the future on the Mutual program, using such stage stars as Sir Forbes Robertson, Gertrude Elliott, Alice Brady and Florence Nash. There will be five new comedy releases each week, the first being the new Cub comedies with George Ovey as the star and David Horsley as the producer. To those will be be added a new Beauty comedy release presented by a company personally recruited by President S. S. Hutchinson of the American Film Company, a new Falstaff comedy release made by a new company of players especially chosen by Edwin Thanhouser, and two new comedies featuring English knockabout comedians and directed by one of the most celebrated comedy men in motion pictures. After January first this comedy man will appear personally in special features to be released by the Mutual. The English comedians have been brought over under contract which gives the Mutual their exclusive services on long contracts.

The two-reel pictures on the program have been brought to feature quality and will be known hereafter as Mutual Banner features. Among these there will be each week a new Western drama to be known as the "Mustang" dramas.

The Bostock animal pictures produced by David Horsley will be two reels long and as already announced there will be one two-reel release each week on the regular program. Contracts have been signed with the Gaumont Company for a new split reel release each week, which will be half scenic under the title "Seeing America First" and half cartoon, the cartoonist chosen being Clyde Forsythe, who as "Vic" has made such a success with the "Axel and Flooey" series in the New York Evening World and a syndicate of 200 newspapers throughout the country. Mr. Forsythe will present the "Axel and Flooey" series to lead off this new feature.

In addition to the above many novelties have been arranged for the regular program, and Mutual Master-pictures, a series of feature releases which has met with tremendous artistic and financial success, will be continued in order to present subjects impossible to handle in shorter length pictures.

It is announced that a new series of Master-pictures surpassing the present offerings are about ready for release. The general policy of the Mutual has been broadened to admit of more comedies, more feature pictures and more novelties in order to present a program that would satisfy the undoubted demand among exhibitors and the general public for a balanced program of entertainment.

President Freuler when seen at the Mutual offices said: "Our program schedule is completed and I am gratified at its merit. I do not hesitate to say that it is the best balanced, the highest quality and the most profitable program ever offered to exhibitors.

"The regular Mutual program is in fact a feature program, because the quality of both the long and short subjects is equal to the best feature standard of the present market. I shall have more surprises to announce in a few days. The regular Mutual program as I announced several weeks ago, is the Gibraltar of the motion picture situation. In the Mutual readjustments of this rapidly progressing business we were enabled, because of our established position, to make unusually attractive arrangements and with good pictures and long contracts, we feel confident that the Mutual leadership will not only continue but be strengthened and increased.

"I will not rest on my oars but will continue to improve a program that never has been surpassed. I am a firm believer in the regular program as the greatest profit builder to the largest number of exhibitors, but our activities will include especial attention to the longer Master-picture subjects as the Mutual will be in a position to supply all the needs of the exhibitors, large and small. We never have looked out upon brighter times than now, despite all uncertainties that seem to exist in other directions of the motion picture business."

The Essanay Film Company has recently issued a very artistic little booklet on its V. L. S. E. release, "A Bunch of Keys." This production was scenariozed from Charles Hoyt's popular comedy which was very successful on the stage. The booklet is cleverly gotten up and everyone will be pleased to receive a copy of it.

BIG STARS ON FAMOUS PLAYERS PROGRAM FOR NEXT QUARTER

In accordance with its established policy of making each quarterly constellation of stars and plays on the Paramount program greater in merit and attractive power than the last, the Famous Players Film Company has lavishly selected as vehicles for its favorite group of stars, during September, October and November, a surprising number of celebrated dramatic successes that surpass, in intrinsic value and national reputation, any other series of releases presented by this company within a similar period of time since the inception of the Paramount program, or indeed, since the inauguration of the Famous Players as a producing company.

Mary Pickford, whose fame as the supreme favorite of the screen is unparalleled, will appear in an elaborate photo production of John Luther Long's world-famous opera and play, "Madame Butterfly," to be released in November, and in two typical characterizations, "The Foundling" and "Twisted Paths."

Marguerite Clark, whose association with the screen under the management of the Famous Players has been an uninterrupted series of brilliant triumphs, will be presented in "Molly-Make-Believe," the quaint and captivating romance by Eleanor Hallowell Abbott, and in a pretentious photo-adaptation of Mark Twain's great masterpiece, "The Prince and the Pauper," the first work by this great American humorist to be filmed.

Pauline Frederick, whose great personal triumph in her initial screen characterization, "The Eternal City," induced the Famous Players to obtain exclusive control of her film services, and who August 5 returns to the screen in the emotional drama, "Sold," will be presented in October in a film version of the international dramatic sensation, "Zaza." "The Fatal Card," the great American stage success, will be released in September, jointly starring Hazel Dawn and John Mason, the first time in the entire history of features that two stars of such individual importance were thus presented in one subject.

Hazel Dawn will again appear in November in the romantic classic, "Dorothy Vernon of Haddon Hall."

Marie Doro, who created a national sensation in her first film appearance, in "The Morals of Marcus," and whose re-engagement before the camera has been requested by exhibitors throughout the entire country, will appear in September in a thrilling spectacular romance, "The White Pearl," in which mystery, love and adventure are dramatically interwoven.

In October, Sam Bernard, known to be the highest salaried character comedian on the American stage, will make his debut to the motion picture public in the much-discussed comedy feature, "Poor Schmaltz," a characteristic Bernard vehicle. It is expected that Sam Bernard will in this subject introduce a new type of screen comedy.

Referring to comedy, that popular exponent of film fun, John Barrymore, is represented on the program by "The Incorrigible Dukane," George L. Shedd's melodramatic farce, to be released in September, and "The Three Elks," a play that should equal this inimitable comedian's success in "Are You a Mason?" scheduled for November.

Besides Sam Bernard, the Famous Players introduce two other new stars to Paramount audiences in its autumn program, in the persons of Charles Cherry and Gail Kane, who will be jointly presented in the great dramatic triumph, "The Mummy and the Humming Bird."

BECK NOW HEADS N. Y. EXCHANGE

Few exhibitors, especially those of the great Middle West will need any introduction to A. F. Beck, whom President Freuler has just selected to succeed Alfred Weiss as general manager of the Mutual Film Exchange of New York. Mr. Beck, until joining the Mutual, was general manager of the Universal exchanges in St. Louis, Kansas City and surrounding territory, a position he had held since the formation of that organization. He is a veteran motion picture man, and one of those pioneers who made their mark in the early days of the industry.

Mr. Beck was first identified with motion pictures way back in the "dark tent" days when he was secretary and treasurer of the Greater Cosmopolitan Shows, at that time the biggest carnival company on the road. He was also with the Bostock-Ferrari Carnival Company and several of the "big tops," receiving the training in the same rugged school and at the same time with many of the men who are today foremost in motion picture affairs.

Later, Mr. Beck became identified with George Kleine, when the Biograph was the leading independent. He organized and managed the Central Film Service Company in Indianapolis, Cincinnati and Louisville, handling the productions of the Motion Picture Distributing and Sales Company, until the formation of the Mutual and Universal, and at different times owned and operated the Rex, Fountain and Riverside theaters, all motion picture houses, and also two small film exchanges doing a big business in commercial films in the Indianapolis territory.

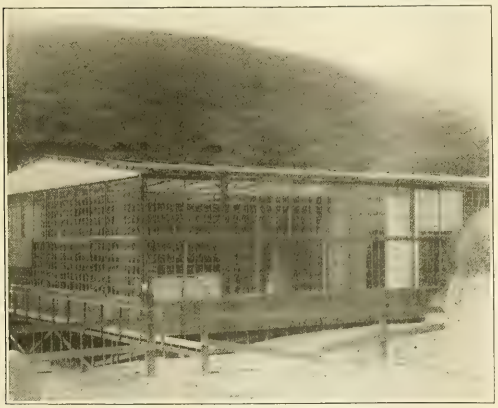
Mr. Beck is thirty-one years old, a college graduate, and has had a thorough business training. He is a believer in the principle that "service" in business is not merely the delivery of goods, but a combination of courtesy, co-operation and the application of common-sense ideas in all dealings with customers. His connection with the Mutual is a guarantee that the increasingly high standard of Mutual service will be maintained.

ROZSIKA DOLLY, FAMOUS DANCER, SECURED BY GRIFFITH

Rozsika Dolly, famous, with her sister, for their original dances on the legitimate and vaudeville stage, has been secured by Mr. Griffith to appear in feature roles in important productions now in preparation. Miss Dolly is a Russian by birth, and arrived in this country eight years ago.

Since then she has been prominently cast in many Broadway successes, and principally the list of the productions in which she has played includes Shubert's "The Midnight Sun," "The Merry Countess" and "The Whirl of the World"; Dillingham's "The Echo," Ziegfeld "Follies" of 1911 and 1913; "Princess Caprice," perhaps better known as "Lieber Augustine," "The Winsome Widow," "The Jardin de Danse" on the New York Roof, and in vaudeville with her sister, headlined as The Dolly Sisters. With Martin Brown they remained at Hammerstein's for a continuous period of eight weeks.

MANY HUGE PRODUCTIONS NOW UNDER WAY AT INCEVILLE

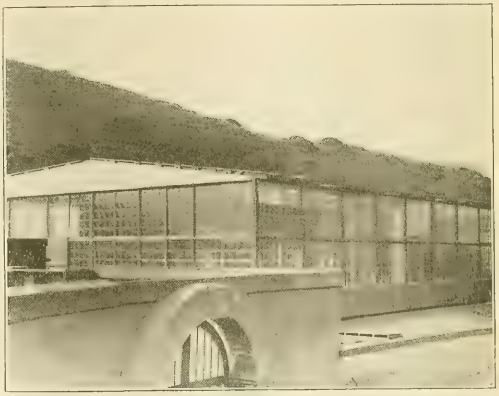


Bessie Barriscale, the charming star of a number of Ince features, has just finished a performance under the direction of Walter Edwards in "The Man Who Found His Honor," with Lewis S. Stone, and is now engaged under the wing of Reginald Barker in "The Golden Claw." This is another of the big American society stories in which Miss Barriscale has scored so heavily, and is believed to offer her even greater opportunities than her previous interpretations.

The current William S. Hart production, in which the great western character actor is appearing, is known under the working title of "Between Men." In this, Hart will depart for a time from his previous characterization—that of a rugged westerner—and don the clothes of a business man. Hart's principal support will be contributed by House Peters, the late Lasky leading man, who is now a member of the Ince forces.

Another powerful modern story now being made under the direction of Charles Swickard is "Whither Goest Thou," starring Orrin Johnson, the estimable Broadway star, who already has completed one picture under the Ince banner. In the cast with Johnson is Rhea Mitchell, the beautiful leading woman, who has achieved such notable triumphs since her affiliation with the N. Y. M. P. Company.

"Waifs" is the title of the story being handled by Director Scott Sidney. This is from the pen of J. G. Hawks and is expected to prove one of the most powerful human interest dramas ever conceived. Its stars are Jane Grey, who has just arrived at Inceville, and William Desmond, former Morosco stock favorite, who is now permanently associated with Ince.



Because of a mishap that befell Willard Mack last week, two directors at the N. Y. M. P. studios are unable to proceed with their work. Mack was working under Richard Stanton's direction in "Aloha Oe." He was carrying Enid Markey down a mountain side, when he slipped and suffered an injury to his back. This has incapacitated him, and while Stanton is awaiting his recovery to finish "Aloha Oe,"

Another view of Inceville's new studio

Edwards is just as anxious, so that he can begin work on "The Corner," in which Mack will appear with George Fawcett, the distinguished Broadway character actor, recently engaged by Ince.

Mary Boland, for many years John Drew's leading woman, and Bruce McRae, one of the best-known and most widely liked leading men of the footlight realm, are two celebrities expected to arrive at the Inceville studios next month. Stories are now being prepared for them by C. Gardner Sullivan and J. G. Hawks of the N. Y. M. P. scenario department, in collaboration with Thomas H. Ince.

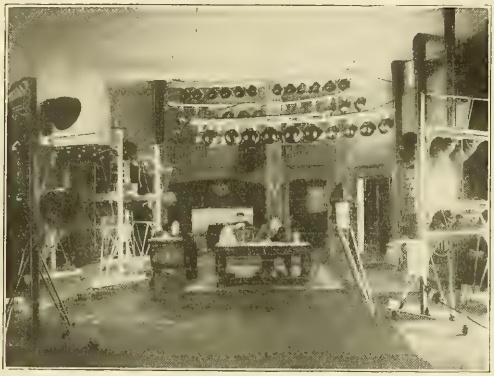
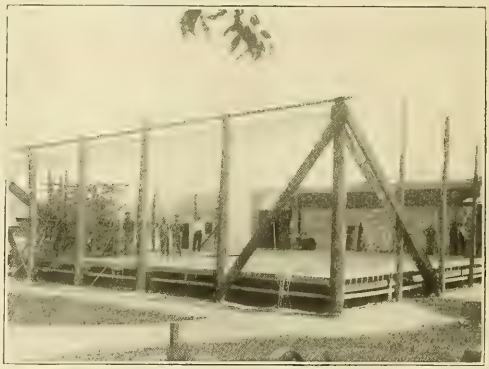
What is believed to be one of the most perfectly equipped glass studios in America has just been completed at Inceville for use in the big features now under way and contemplated by Thomas H. Ince. The stage measures 120 by 120 feet—being therefore nearly as large as the old main stage—and is so conveniently situated that the sun is in a commanding position at all times during the day.



A PRIVATE EXHIBITION OF SARAH BERNHARDT PICTURES

There was a private exhibition on Tuesday, July 28, of the A. M. Gollos pictures of "Madame Sarah Bernhardt at Home." The pictures, beautifully photographed, are very interesting, as they portray the everyday life of one who is probably the most marvelous and well-known actress in the world. The pictures were run at the Illinois theater, "the theater beautiful," in Chicago, at which Griffith's "The Birth of a Nation" is having its successful run. There was a very large attendance and many satisfactory comments were heard on all sides. A very good orchestra rendered appropriate selections throughout the exhibition.



ABOVE THE CLOUDS SCENES SURE TO CAUSE COMMENT WHEN RELEASED

Essanay's corps of photographers has returned to Chicago, after spending six weeks in the Canadian Rockies, taking scenic pictures. Eight thousand feet of exceptionally beautiful scenic pictures were taken and will be released 500 feet at a time, twice a month. They will be coupled with 500 feet of animated cartoons, the Dreamy Dud series drawn by Wallace A. Carlson. The photographers took side trails from Banff, Lake Louise, Field, Glacier, Vancouver and Victoria to the tops of the mountains.

ITS FUTURE ASSURED

FOR three years, fortune led the Wharton Brothers. At first blindly, then with slowly widening gaze, and at last with a full visual and mental realization of their opportunity—to Ithaca, N. Y., the home of learning. Cornell's campus and buildings, the homes of its officers and instructors, fraternity houses of varied architecture and the beautiful spots on which they lodge are wonders valuable for picture stories. The town itself is built up hill and down dale. Its homes are perched here and there. On rocky knolls. In deep depressions. Some one story in front, three in the back. Stepping down and down on rocky ledges. Flower laden gardens and crooked paths following the domain, which seems to be exploring the way to the bottom of the gorge.

The street car lines put to shame any gravity scenic railway ever built. For the trips through lanes of green, over bridges, high above rocky streams, beside waterfalls, in the tops of trees, seemingly—are far more beautiful than man could paint.

Wharton, Inc., took possession of the new studio June 1, where "Elaine" is still getting into scrapes and as persistently getting out of them at her "country home." All the characters of the "Romance" went down to Ithaca and are doing more hair breadth things than ever, for they have the added zest and the inspiration which comes with new surroundings.

Never, had the gods come down and asked the Wharton boys to choose the things they would like for their work, could they have asked for more than they found ready to hand in the spot upon which they have built their plant.

The purple blue water of Lake Cayuga, two miles wide by forty long, is guarded east and west by long lines of hills to its southern-most beach, where lawns and gardens form a cultivated stretch between the water and the forest beyond. Through dense growth runs a little stream, banked with wild flowers and ferns. Centuries have joined the branches above. Lightnings have whitened huge timber monsters, and there are unnumbered possibilities for cane brake hidings and jungle fights.

Situated at the foot of a deep, ice-cold lake, girt with high hills and reflecting a thousand vineyards in its blue waters, Renwick Park possesses every advantage in the way of convenience and excellence of nearby locations. There are forty acres of deep rocky chasms, waterfalls, rushing rapids, inky pools and fascinating eddies; quaint bridges, and buildings that look as though they had been picked up bodily from England's old Chester, France's ancient St. Malo, Germany's quaintest Strassburg, or Wyoming's roughest frontier town of the by-gone days. And everywhere are roses, great trees, wild ferns and then more roses—a spot for a dreamer or a poet, chosen to be the very busy little world of very busy picture makers.

It is hard for one to turn his back on the beauties of nature to inspect the less interesting but more practical buildings which house the Wharton activities; a long studio building of hollow tile; another long building containing workshops; various outbuildings for storage; more shops; a magazine for explosives; boiler house; developing and dark rooms; a miniature theater; bath and boat houses; a long pier and a flock of smaller docks; a wireless telegraph outfit—surely here is a very complete equipment for the making of quality pictures.

A long stretch of concrete pier to the left leads far out into the water to a lighthouse, while to the right is a line of docks and boat houses with all sorts of pleasure craft. This pier and lighthouse, by-the-way, is the spot on which was enacted some of the big scenes of "The Warning," which is now, after two years, playing return dates in many houses.

When the Wharton brothers incorporated, they handled the entire business themselves and wrote their own stories, but the contracts offered temptations and the young men quickly discovered that producing of pictures and doing the executive work connected with it, was too big a job. Then it was that

Theodore Wharton, President

James Gordon, A director

J. W. Buck, Secretary and Treasurer

Leopold Wharton, Vice-president

they secured the interested attention of their brother-in-law J. Whitworth Buck. In February, he severed a life-long connection with mercantile affairs, and resigned from the wholesale dry goods company of Ely & Walker, St. Louis, to take over the general management of Wharton, Inc.

He started to work at once, organizing the executive force and the building of the new studio, plying between the studio in Jersey and Ithaca, with the result that the big serial still continues weekly to run off fresh thrills.

Almost for the first time in its history Ithaca, the town, and Cornell University, are agreed upon the desire to bring the new enterprise to its midst. The college with classic brow has desired art and learning, and the town of course wanted commercial enterprise.

When the Whartons came, both university and commercial interest were satisfied for they had their desires.

The clubs, both social and commercial have sought and welcomed the heads of the film company and the welcome the entire organization has received is something to be proud of.

Wharton, Inc., is now just a year old, but the great growth of the plant and company during the past year prompts the thought that this is truly a very sturdy child and one of great promise. With the fine market which Wharton pictures obtain through the Pathe Exchange and with the high quality which is their boast, the future looks exceptionally bright for Ithaca's only producers.

V-L-S-E RELEASING GOOD COMEDIES

Custom and habit are blinding obstacles in the path of progress, and the men who make great successes are those who view these retarding forces with eyes protected by sound business reasoning.

Some exhibitors, through some mysterious form of psychological calculation, have persuaded themselves that the only class of feature that can be successfully offered as the main attraction must be the so-called "dramatic" subjects, overlooking, apparently, that the public spends money for laughter as well as tears. These exhibitors say that comedies will not draw as well as dramatic subjects, yet there is nothing tangible on which to base their theory.

In this connection, it is interesting to note that the four pioneer manufacturing companies—the Vitagraph, Lubin, Selig and Essanay—in producing features for the V-L-S-E program, have included in their offerings a number of big comedies. These companies, since their inception, have kept in close touch with the public fancy, and the fact that they have produced big comedies may be accepted as proof that there is a public demand for multiple-reel comedies.

The V-L-S-E have met with the most gratifying success in demonstrating to exhibitors the value of long runs and repeat bookings, and are now drawing the attention of the exhibitors to the business possibilities in properly advertising and featuring big comedy picture plays. They say that up until the present time the drawing power of comedy features has not been amply demonstrated, because there has been a dearth of good features of this class. The few worthy multiple-reel comedies that have been produced have met with great success wherever they have been properly presented, and advertised, and this, taken in connection with the fact that the history of theatrical enterprises shows comedies predominating as successes, proves conclusively that the public wants comedies.

In preparing their comedies, the Big Four have gone to great expense in the matter of production and staging, and the securing of good material, and in each case, to make them still more attractive, have featured artists of great popularity on the stage and in the silent dramatic field, to the end that the exhibitors may have a convincing illustration that comedy features are as big attractions as melodramatic and tragic subjects.

During the month of August two comedies will be presented. "A Bunch of Keys," picturized by the Essanay Company, is an adaptation of Charles Hoyt's successful comedy, with June Keith and Johnny Slavin in the leading roles, and "Tillie's Tomato Surprise," with the irresistible Marie Dressler as Tillie, produced by the Lubin Company. With these comedy features, and others to come, the Big Four state that they will establish a precedent in motion picture exhibition and awaken all exhibitors to the financial possibilities in this class of subjects that some exhibitors have overlooked through sheer habit.

STAR OF MOROSCO'S "KILMENY" GIVEN LUNCHEON IN NEW YORK

After the exhibition of "Kilmeny" at the Broadway Theater on Monday morning, July 19, the spectators were the guests of the Oliver Morosco Photoplay Company at a luncheon at the Hotel Hermitage given in honor of Lenore Ulrich who is featured in the production. The role of Kilmeny marks Miss Ulrich's screen debut. Her last big stage success was in "The Bird of Paradise."

Carl H. Pierce, special representative of the Morosco interests, exercised his official capacity as toastmaster by calling on George Mooser, manager of the Morosco offices and "finder" of Miss Ulrich, for a speech. Mr. Mooser's short, apologetic talk was followed by a speech from Leon Langfeld, manager of the Broadway Theater.

Mr. Frawley, Morosco stage director, spoke next, dwelling as did the others, upon Miss Ulrich's exceptional ability and willingness to work without protest among any and all conditions, a not common disposition among stars. Mr. Frawley, who has given much study to the motion picture industry, hopes for the time when pictures will not be turned out on footage, but will be allowed to run their natural length and will not be ground out on a schedule. The last speaker was Fred C. Gunning of the Evening Mail.

LASKY TRANSPLANTING SPAIN TO SUNNY CALIFORNIA STUDIO

What is said to be one of the most elaborate and extensive exterior scenes ever built in America for the purpose of providing a background for a photoplay production, has been completed at the studios of the Lasky Feature Play Company, at Hollywood, Cal. The scene is a replica in every minute particular of the famous Plaza de Toros, Seville, Spain, and it furnishes the setting for some of the important action in the Lasky production of "Carmen," in which Geraldine Farrar, the famous grand opera prima donna, appears as the star.

The "Plaza" was several weeks in building and required a steel frame construction for all the score of buildings which were built. Wood and plaster completed the building material. There was no less than twenty-five tons of plaster used, of which eight tons went into the construction of the gate and arch. The setting shows the intersection of two streets and the houses abutting on the highways have their balconies and porches just as they have in far away Seville.

BRONZE MEDAL AWARDED METRO BY PANAMA-PACIFIC EXPOSITION

The bronze medal awarded the Metro Pictures Corporation by the officials of the Panama-Pacific Exposition at San Francisco on Metro Day, July 15, was a special award for the best motion picture shown during a competition in which manufacturers participated.

Metro's entry was the Quality Pictures production of "The Second in Command," in which Francis X. Bushman and Marguerite Snow are presented for the first time on the Metro program. It was pronounced by the judges and all others present to be the greatest picture since "The Birth of a Nation." The general public attended, and some 70,000 people, it is said, cheered Metro when the award was made.

Competition for the special award was keen to the utmost, and that it was won by the Metro Pictures Corporation is a tribute to the superiority of its output. The Metro Pictures Corporation has aimed from its inception to make the best productions possible. That it has achieved perfection in the art of producing motion pictures, distancing competitors by producing the one photoplay unanimously acclaimed by the judges the best of all those shown, proves that Metro is in a class by itself.

Metro proposes to continue to deserve this unusual mark of esteem and appreciation by continuing its energetic methods in producing pictures that will not only prove satisfactory to the public but that will meet always the demands of the most critical.

The presentation of the award was made a signal honor for Francis X. Bushman, who on behalf of the Metro Pictures Corporation received it. Mr. Bushman was unprepared for the honor conferred upon him and was taken completely by surprise when called upon. He gracefully stepped forward on the platform in the glare of the sun and received the tribute, thanking the president in glowing terms, and at the same time paying a splendid tribute to the Metro Pictures Corporation for its productions and the remarkable list of great stars of the screen and dramatic stage which it has presented before the public and has yet to come.

THANHOUSER WINS BIG WAGER BY MAKING UNIQUE COMEDY FILM

Edwin Thanhouser is $5,000.00 richer today as the result of a spectacular wager which carries more than passing interest for filmdom. It shows that not even Thanhouser knows just how strong he is until the effort becomes imperative.

One of Mr. Thanhouser's warmest admirers is Seton C. ("Cyclone") Pierce, the Minneapolis traction operator. He is a film fan, and knows Mr. Thanhouser since the days of the old Thanhouser Stock Company in Milwaukee. He was visiting New York and looked Thanhouser up as he always does. One evening they were out dining, the company including B. F. Juddel, manager of the Mutual's Minneapolis office and J. B. Reissman of the Dale theater, St. Paul. The discussion turned to comedy and Mr. Thanhouser then broke the news that the Falstaff comedy brand would hereafter release two comedies per week instead of one. Somehow, this brought a turn in the talk which led Mr. Pierce to ask Mr. Thanhouser whether he believed he could make comedy in more than one reel which would equal a certain brand in which is featured a comedian whose name is now a by-word all over the world; furthermore Mr. Pierce volunteered the opinion that the very fact that this comedian is not procurable makes the task of equaling those comedies impossible.

Those at the table looked over at Mr. Thanhouser askance. Thanhouser was thinking hard. He had never before made a two-reel comedy that could be considered in the light of the present-day conception of comedy, particularly the brand Mr. Pierce was referring to. The challenge cut deep to its mark, but in his quiet way, he just sat there, saying nothing. The talk went on, and finally Mr. Pierce, who is a John Gates kind of plunging sportsman, turned to him and said, "Ed, you can win five thousand if you can do it!" Edwin Thanhouser responded without removing his cigar, "All right, Pierce!"

The conditions were quickly arranged. The judges were to be a jury of all those present; besides Messrs. Juddel and Reissman there were Mrs. Juddel, Harry L. Bateman, Mrs. Bateman (friends of Mr. Pierce) and Mr. Pierce's son, Seton, Jr. It was left to Mr. Thanhouser to make any character of two-reel comedy he liked, and the jury was to give its verdict by open verbal vote without leaving the projection room where the picture is submitted. Both Mr. Pierce and Mr. Thanhouser each placed a check for $5,000 in Mr. Juddel's hands as stakeholder.

The result is now history. Mr. Thanhouser won. The comedy he made is "When Hungry Hamlet Fled." It is a farce which consistently avoids slap-stick, making Mr. Thanhouser's feat all the more remarkable because he was practically pitted against the cleverest slap-stick comedy ever made. Frederick Sullivan was the director, and Lorraine Huling, Harry Benham, Claude Cooper and Frances Keyes are in the cast.

Mr. Thanhouser celebrated his good stroke by giving a dinner at the Astor Hotel last Tuesday night. The jury and numerous others were there and the favors were gold fobs bearing the classic comedy mask, which forms part of the Thanhouser trade-mark. Mr. Pierce was certainly voted a game loser.

Mr. Thanhouser has decided to make room for this picture under the Thanhouser brand, because of it being in two reels; it will go out on August 17. The regular comedy brand from New Rochelle, Falstaff, will now be issued twice per week, Mondays and Fridays, instead of only Fridays as heretofore.

BACHRACH JOINS WORLD FILM FORCES

Henry E. Friedman has been assigned to the North Carolina territory by the Washington, D C., office of the World Film Corporation, for it is believed that by having one man in so large a territory better results can be obtained. For this same reason Alan J. Bachrach has been given the state of Virginia, and F. B. Spurrier, assistant manager for this territory, will give special attention to the Maryland business.

Mr. Bachrach is the latest addition to the field forces of the World Film Corporation, for he made his initial visit to the Virginia exhibitors within the past fortnight. Heretofore he has been engaged in the exhibition rather than the placing of motion picture films. During the past six years he has served as a manager for the Brylawski interests.

Through an error in the July 31 issue of Motography, in the story of Mme. Pavlowa and her work at the Chicago Universal studios, the name of Laura Sawyer was mentioned. This should have been Laura Oakley.

"EASTLAND" BENEFIT SHOWS AID FAMILIES OF SUFFERERS

Almost without exception the moving picture theaters of Chicago held benefit performances at certain specified times during the past week, at which either the entire receipts or a large percentage of them was turned over to aid the families of the Eastland victims, and from reports published in the Chicago newspapers a sum totalling more than $2,000 was raised as a result, though only comparatively few theaters had at that time made a report.

A special presentation of "The Birth of a Nation" was held at the Illinois theater which netted over $500. The Strand Theater Company donated the full receipts of the Saturday morning special program at Orchestra Hall, and Alfred Hamburger set aside the receipts of one exhibition at each of his twelve theaters for the aid of the Eastland sufferers.

One of the Chicago newspapers published the following list of returns which include only such theaters as have reported to the paper up to the time of going to press, and serves to indicate the generous response of the theater managers to the philanthropic cause. The list reads as follows:

Alhambra theater, Nineteenth and State streets, J. E. McCauley, manager	$ 19.00

In the Wake of the Selig Special*

BY NEIL G. CAWARD

A fair vista.

Frisco, Jul. 13, 1915.

DEAR JACK:—

You must be just about in the middle of the last show, Jack, and i hope the house is still full. Tell Gerty to count the tikets careful and keep a good rekord of biz. till i get back. i and the Missus is just going to go out to the fair grounds 1 more and then we takes a boat to Oak land where the Selig Speshul is waiting for us.

Believ me, Jack we is having sum trip. My last letter tol you about our stay in Ogden, Utah and you must a thought i was getting to be a Mormon the way i wrote you but i aint. As we left Ogden on the Union P. ry. we went rite acrost the grate Salt Lake on a bridge what is moren 42 miles long and the watter under neath the brige is all salt and they say as how any body can swim in it without sinkin. i dont no about that Jack but believ me im goin to find out when we cum back.

Well Jack when i and the Missus got up next a. m. we was at Reno, Nevada, what is the place all the wimen goes to when they want a divorce, but the Missus didnt get off so we aint got no divorce. Then we cum to a place called Truckee and by golly Jack there was snow on the Mts just a few miles a way tho it was the leventh o Jul. and probably hottern billy B darned in Squdunk. All day we rode in whats called snow sheds tho there wasn't no snow where we was and i dont no why they hav em. looking out thru the kracks in these hear snow sheds you can see sum grate scenery, and way down bout a mile below was Donner lake a glittering in the sonshine.

Making a scene of "Seven Suffering Sisters" on the Zone.

By n by we got out o the snow sheds Jack and cum down the Mts on the other side and there was pam trees and appel orchards and peeches and G raniums etc. i fergot to tell you Jack that this day the wimen orgnized a sister Sciety to this hear ancien Order o Yellow Dogs what i joined. The Sciety the wimen orgnized is called the ex Alted Sroity o Pussy Kats and the offisers is Mrs C. M. Hueblein and Mis Maud B. Price and Mrs J. A. Ermetinger.

About noon we got to Sacra Mento and sum o the folks a board this hear Selig Speshul all most got left when the train pulled out, but the train baked up and got em. Believ me Jack this hear Herb Hoagland is got a regular job keeping track o all the folks on the train and seeing that all hav a good time and dont none of em get left, but hes doin it all O. K. A ways further along we cum to Bekneesha Ferry and the hole train was run on a bote and the bote took it all acrost to the other side and then the train went on a lone, till it cum to Oak land where we all got off and all got a board a bote that took us to San Francisco.

The tower of jewels.

Our party went to the Clift hotel what is a swell dump Jack. Its moren 5 times as big as the Palace in Squedunk and they got running water in every room and lectric lights and bathe tubs and everything. Well Jack after i and the Missus got washed up we went down to the dinning room and by golly it was swell. They got a chinese Girl in pants, Jack, what cums a round to every place and gives you a couple o biskits and a orkestra what plays while you eat and everything.

Well after supper Jack this hear Herb Hoagland hired sum auto mobiles to take us for a ride and we all piled in and was took 1st up on a hill to look at the lectric lights on the fair grounds and it looked like fary land with all the lights and sum fire works what was going on. After being took up the hill they took us down that 1 and up a nother and then thru a tunnel to China town where we went to a T house and had T and sum China kandy. Then the feller what was bally hooing took us to a China man's house and his little girl what was named Rosy she sang for us. The feller said she would only scared but john Selig was a long and i took hold of his hand and then i wasnt scared cause i new this hear Herb Hoagland wudnt let nothing happen to Bill Seligs bro. Well Jack after that we went to a China telefone Xchange and then to a China church, only they wasnt having church and the feller showed us how they had church when they was having it.

Next a. m. Jack everybody got into sum auto mobiles again and was took to the ferry where they put em on a bote and took em around the bay and to the fair grounds. i wanted to see sum folks so i and the Missus didnt go but went to call on Mr. Snell o the Cal. M. P. cO. and he was a dandy feller and tole us all about his cO. Then i went to see Mr. Cory the feller what has charge o the Xhibitors convention and at his offis i met Mr Tugwell what is a juge and Mr Herrington and Mr Pearce and Mr Jeup and a lot o other fellers and they was all just grate to us. At the convenshun hall they had booths all fixed up just like at the county fair and everybody shook hands and wanted to no did i need a new mashine or sum carbons and was i running the kind o fillims they was selling. And Jack 2 of the nicest fellers i met was Kenneth Ohara and Benny Ziedman and they took i and the Missus all over the place and showed us everything. i had a bage pinned on me with my name on it and when i had it on the Missus said i looked like a mail box only i guess she was just jokin.

That nite i and the Missus went to the fair and by golly Jack you wudn't believ me if i tole you a bout it so i wate till i get home and show you sum o the postel kards i bote and then you'll no its so. At nite when its all lit up it looks just like fary land.

Well Tues. a. m. the convenshun opened so i had to go there and they had speeches by this hear Mr Cory what was so nice to us and Mr Pearce and Mr Herrington and Mr Jeup and Mr Beach and 1 feller that spoke was Mr Bloser from Shecawgo what is with the Selig Speshul party. Mr Binder o the Nat. Board o Censorship was there and talked and tho he is a censor he don't think as how fillims should be censored at all. Herb Hoagland hired some auto mobiles and took us all for a ride a round the city and its a grate city Jack only all hills and they took us to 1 place where we saw the Pac. Ocean and Jack it looks just like lake Mishigan in Shecawgo. Well Jack im going to male this letter to you and then i and the Missus is going to the fair again. We gotta hurry cause we gotta be at the bote dock at 11 o'clock. i wisht we was going to stay longer cause their goin to have some good speeches to the convenshun to morrow, but we gotta go along. im sending you some postel cards with this and Jack don't forget to order some more carbons and a nother roll o tikets. i rite you again from Santa Cruz. both i and the Missus is well and happy and hopes you is the same.

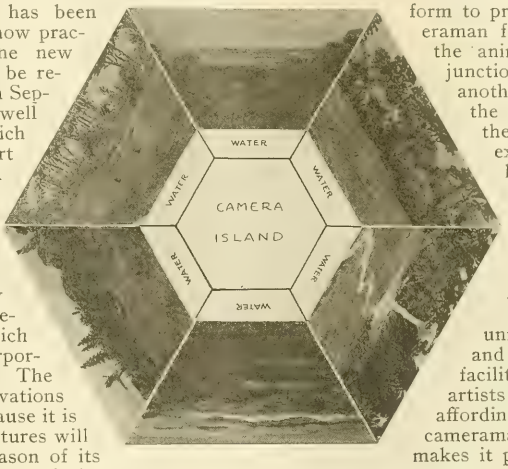
BOBBY CONNELLY CAST FOR FIVE PICTURES AT ONE TIME

Bobby Connelly, six years old, the littlest big man of the Vitagraph stock company, recently enjoyed the distinction of seeing his name on the "board" as appearing in five different productions. While some of the parts were "bits," they were all necessary to the action of the story. As each and every one of the screen plays were being produced at the same time, a council of the various directors was necessary to arrange a schedule of scenes in which the little Vitagraph star appeared that would not conflict with rapid production of the stories. A list of the pictures includes "The Writing on the Wall," produced by Tefft Johnson; "Old Good for Nuthin'," directed by George Ridgewell; "The Patriot," which is being produced by Theodore Marston; "The Tigress," for which Lorimer Johnston is responsible, and "To Cherish and Protect," produced under the direction of William Humphrey.

Before the five pictures were completed, little Bobby was given the manuscripts for seven new stories that will continue the famous "Sonny Jim" series and bring to life in the Vitagraph films, Sonny Jim, Daddy Jim, Mother Dear and Sonny's wonderful dog.

VITAGRAPH'S SCENARIO LESSONS



Newspapers through the country generally should be interested in a series of lessons on how to write photoplays which the Vitagraph Company is arranging with several hundred newspapers to carry as a daily feature, starting during September. The lessons were written by Miss Margaret Bertsch, the scenario editor of the company, who is said to receive the highest salary ever paid for this class of work. She has taken up every branch of photoplay writing in an effort to procure a more salable and a better grade film story.

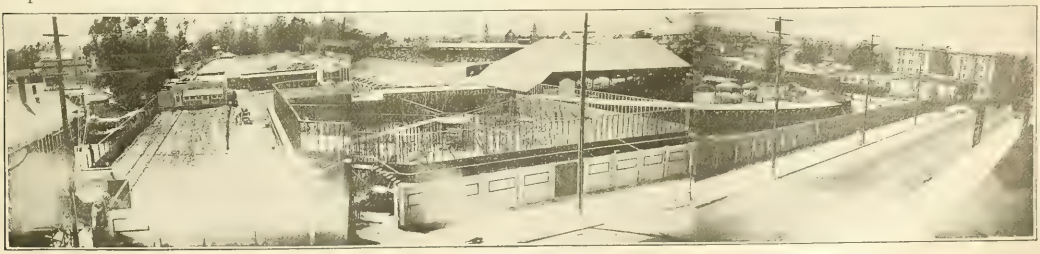
Many Novelties in Studio Construction

HORSLEY PLANT UNIQUE

COINCIDENT with the alliance of David Horsley with the Mutual Film Corporation, under the terms of which all productions of the Centaur Film Company and the Bostock Jungle and Film Company, are to be released under the "Winged Clock," comes news that the mammoth new plant which Mr. Horsley has been building in Los Angeles is now practically complete. Here the new animal pictures, which will be released through the Mutual in September, will be produced, as well as many of the comedies, which will form no unimportant part of the Horsley contribution to the Mutual program.

The new plant, which covers a space of five acres in all located at Main and Washington streets, Los Angeles, contains many unique and entirely novel devices and appliances, which never before have been incorporated in studio construction. The most important of the innovations is the "arena," so called because it is there that all the animal pictures will be taken and which, by reason of its originality and construction and design, may be rated as among the most important of Mr. Horsley's numerous inventions.

Among the other devices and appliances installed in the Los Angeles studios, all of which were worked out by Mr. Horsley, are twelve modern dressing rooms which have a combination of 144 bungalow fronts of different design for exterior settings; a property room measuring 70x140 feet, spanned by sixteen massive steel trusses, the roofing and diffusers of which are operated by shaft gearings; and a stage large enough to permit six companies to work at the same time without interfering with each other.



Specially notable among the many new devices incorporated in the Los Angeles plant is the "arena," where, by means of a unique arrangement in the plan of construction, the wild beasts of the jungle can perform on the same stage with the human actors without the slightest danger to the latter.

The diagram shows the "arena" is hexagonal in shape. It measures 144 x 144 feet in area and is surrounded by walls twenty feet in height. In the center, at the apex of the six triangles, is a concrete platform on which the camera is mounted. Around the platform, or "island," is a moat six feet wide and four feet deep, which is constantly filled with water. Iron bars, a dozen feet high, surround the platform to protect the director and cameraman from any sudden attack by the animal or animals. At each junction of the different triangles, another row of bars extends from the "island" across the moat to the wall behind. These bars extend only a few inches below the water, when crossing the moat, so that all a performer has to do to escape a threatened attack is to dive into the water and come out in the adjoining section of the "arena."

The advantages of this unique construction are many and obvious. Not only does it facilitate the escape of the human artists in time of peril, as well as affording complete protection for the cameraman and director, but it also makes it possible for the stage hands to remove one scene and erect another without interfering with the direction of the production, thus minimizing the delays which hitherto have been a serious factor in the manufacture of animal pictures.

Interesting and novel are the dressing rooms proper, twelve in number, including the office of the chief director. These rooms, like the "arena," and other modern devices and appliances employed in the studio, were designed and worked out by Mr. Horsley. The fronts of these dressing rooms have been built to represent bungalow fronts. They are all of different design, no two doors or windows alike, and have a combination of 144 fronts of different design for exterior work.

The property room, one of the largest and most modern on the Pacific coast, measures 70x140 feet. It is spanned by sixteen massive steel girders which carry the diffusers and canvas roof, which are operated by means of geared shafting. The laboratory, laid out by Mr. Horsley, is equipped with all the modern improvements, and contains two large fireproof vaults for the storing of the film. In the same building are the private offices of the administrative forces, the negative, printing, winding, developing, washing, drying, assembling and patching rooms, as well as the offices of the scenario department.

The first of the Horsley animal pictures, according to present plans, will be released through the Mutual early in September, while the initial comedy is scheduled for the latter part of August.

UNIQUE ADVERTISING MATTER

Among the enormous amount of advertising material prepared by the Vitagraph Company for the exploitation of its far-famed photoplay in chapters, "The Goddess," no single piece of advertising matter stands out and carries such weight as a one-sheet lithograph, on one side of which are exceptional reproductions of Anita Stewart, Earle Williams, Ralph Ince and Gouvernor Morris, with signed articles by each of the four celebrities, and on the reverse side, a signed letter to the exhibitors by A. E. Smith and J. Stuart Blackton. This letter is the largest in point of size (28x42 inches) ever sent out by a motion picture company as a message to the exhibitor and to help advertise a picture. The letter tells the what, why and how of "The Goddess," and exhibitors all over the country have caught the idea of its value by hanging it so the lithograph side will attract the attention to the coming of "The Goddess" and the letter be an ever-present reminder that the gentlemen responsible for "The Goddess" are ever ready to aid them Vitagraphically. Numerous letters that swell the daily mail at the Flatbush plant are from exhibitors who extoll the unique attractiveness of this one-sheet and its exceptional double value to them.

KATHLYN WILLIAMS AGAIN SEEN IN SELIG JUNGLE ZOO RELEASE

"The Clause in the Constitution," a Selig Diamond Special in three reels, will be released in regular service on Thursday, August 19. This unusual production is said to uphold the Selig Diamond Special standard with a strong story, an all-star cast of players, beautiful photography and a succession of gripping climaxes.

On Thursday, August 26, "The Strange Case of Talmai Lind," a Selig Diamond Special in three reels, will be released in regular service. This Selig Diamond Special is particularly noteworthy for the reason that Kathlyn Williams, one of the world's most popular motion picture actresses, not only stars in this production but was the authoress of the plot.

Exhibitors and their patrons will be delighted to welcome Miss Williams back to a Jungle-Zoo Wild Animal Pictureplay. In "The Strange Case of Talmai Lind," Miss Williams again toys with the wild beasts of the jungle in her own fearless way. She enters the den of an African lioness at the risk of her life, in order to provide thrills for the audiences. There is an appealing love story running through the plot which also possesses that unusual ending so much to be desired. Miss Williams is supported by a carefully selected company of players. "The Strange Case of Talmai Lind" is certain to be popular for both the plot and the action is declared to be strictly out of the ordinary.

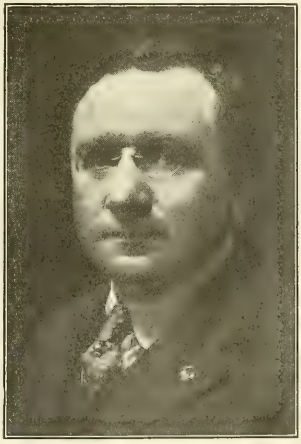
TOM TERRISS WORKING ON "A WOMAN OF THE WORLD"

Tom Terriss, who has just returned from the West Indies, where he has been very busy making several big features, has just commenced work in his new studio at Yonkers. The feature he is now at work upon is an adaptation of the successful English play, "A Woman of the World," in which Elaine Terriss will be featured. The juvenile role, playing opposite to Elaine Terriss, will be enacted by Adrian Jacobi, a celebrated Italian motion picture actor who has done some splendid work for the Pasquali Itala and other well-known Italian firms, and who will make his first appearance upon the American stage. Also will appear Alfred Hemming, a well-known English Dickensonian character actor who has been a member of Mr. Terriss' English company for many years, together with Rutherford Herman, Leighton Stark, Luella Knox and Edwin Hoyt, a well-known actor who has appeared with Richard Mansfield, E. S. Sothern and other well-known stars.

VETERAN ACTOR BURTON'S DEBUT AS PHOTOPLAYER FOR MOROSCO

John W. Burton, who for the past ten years has been under the management of Oliver Morosco, celebrated his fortieth professional anniversary by making his first appearance in motion pictures for the Oliver Morosco Photoplay Company.

Mr. Burton has been prominently connected with the American stage since 1875 and has lived in the period of the "traveling star," when it was the custom for stage stars to travel without road organizations of their own, being supported by the individual stock companies in each city. As a member of the famous Ben De Bar Stock Company of St. Louis, he played with such celebrities as Edwin Booth, the elder Sothern, Charles Fechter, the great romantic actor; John L. Toole, the English actor; Frank Mayo, Joseph Jefferson and Madame Modjeska.



After supporting Lenore Ulrich the last two seasons in "The Bird of Paradise," Mr. Burton first appears on the screen in "Kilmeny," the same production in which the popular little star also makes her motion picture debut.

FIRST ISSUE OF NATIONAL NEWS WEEKLY TO BE RELEASED AUGUST 9

An event of interest to the film world will be the release on August 9 of the first issue of the National News Weekly. This associated newspaper film is to reproduce on the screen the news items which appear in the twenty-five publications which at present comprise the chain. Special emphasis will be laid on the events which occur in each of the cities, thereby localizing the interest. The launching of this new form of news weekly is due to an idea conceived by H. P. Wayman, president of the National News Weekly. Mr. Wayman has had a great deal of experience as a newspaper man, as a producer and as an exhibitor. While in the latter branch of the industry he realized that the news pictorials being shown at his house (the Triangle theater in Chicago) were vitally lacking in local interest. His experience as a journalist had taught him that news increases in value as it approaches the daily existence of those who read it. Realizing this fact, Mr. Wayman conceived the idea of a news film of and for Chicago, his home city. His plan was enthusiastically adopted by a prominent Chicago paper, and the films were shown with great success in over 200 Chicago theaters. This undertaking served to give Mr. Wayman an idea of the possibilities in the movement, and he resolved to expand upon his original idea and make his service nation-wide by taking it to other cities—to establish, in other words, an Associated Newspaper Film. This plan has taken form in the National News Weekly, which on August 9 will inaugurate a news pictorial unique in the moving picture world. In the twenty-five cities in which papers are now under contract, an expert camera man will work under the personal direction of the managing editor of the daily. This insures an accurate and most timely review of local events. No fire, wreck, accident, parade, sporting event, or other happening of interest will be permitted to escape the vigilant eye of the camera. Each city will thus be able to visualize her news. She will also be shown, on the same film, the pick of the pictures obtained in the other twenty-four cities in the chain. The films are to be distributed by the World Film Corporation. The facilities of this corporation, with over twenty-five branches, assure for the National News Weekly a service unique in the trade. On August 9 the World Film Corporation will begin its releases. Each week in each of the twenty-three cities in which the "World" operates exchanges there will be released 1,000 feet of strictly news events, 500 feet of which will be devoted to local events in the cities in the chain. This new form of news service will therefore provide a most comprehensive review of national events—a bird's-eye view, so to speak, of those happenings throughout the nation to which news value is attached. The standing of the publications which are to support the new enterprise and the scope of the service may be obtained from the following partial list: Chicago Evening Post, Atlanta Constitution, Milwaukee Journal, Cincinnati Enquirer, Philadelphia Public Ledger, Washington Times, New Orleans Times-Picayune, Cleveland Leader, Buffalo Enquirer, Minneapolis Journal, Omaha Bee, Detroit Times, St. Louis Times, Dallas News, Baltimore News, Pittsburgh Dispatch.

JESSIE A. STAGG IN "YOUTH"

Jessie A. Stagg, of the Art Students' League, who has exhibited in the Academy, will have a prominent part in the Vitagraph Company's forthcoming photoplay, "Youth," now in course of production under the direction of Capt. Harry Lambart. Miss Stagg will do the modeling of the statues for a studio where most of the action of the picture takes place. Realism in the use of some fifteen thousand dollars' worth of statuary, finished and unfinished, will be used in the embellishment of the studio setting. A number of interesting scenes will also be filmed, showing the gardens and exterior of an old English country house that Director Lambart discovered in Lakewood, N. J. The cast selected to present the leading characters in "Youth," which when completed will be a Broadway Star feature, includes Antonio Moreno, Mlle. Valkyrien (Baroness Dewitz), Donald Hall and Frankie Mann.

ESSANAY'S MANY COMPANIES SECURE VARIETY OF EXTERIORS

Essanay has made a specialty this summer of taking a large number of outdoor scenes. In this way it has been able both to secure realistic settings and artistic backgrounds for its pictures. Five separate companies have been established at different places throughout the country to take these scenes. A new summer studio has just been established at Lake Zurich, Ill., an unusually picturesque spot. The first photoplay to be taken at this outdoor studio is "Rule Sixty-Three," the play written by P. G. Wodehouse, the well-known magazine writer. Other summer studios have been established at "The Pines" and at "Starved Rock," Ill., while another company is touring through the East to take scenes along the Atlantic coast. The pictures taken in the Tennessee mountains have been completed and the studio relinquished after four months' work.

Helping Celebrate Donlin Day

BY CHARLES R. CONDON

WINSTED, Conn., saw moving picture players in real life for the first time about the middle of July when Albert S. LeVino, secretary and treasurer of the Arrow Film Corporation, escorted a company of fifteen through the Berkshires to the little New England town, where the exterior scenes for the Arrow's first production, "Right Off the Bat," were to be taken. The story, of which Mr. LeVino is the author, features Mike Donlin, the former Giant outfielder, voted the most popular man in baseball.

LeVino's first work, after seeing that his people were comfortably fixed at the hotel, was to win over the town officials and prominent citizens and get on good terms with Main street's one newspaper. The result of his missionary work is best illustrated by the fact that the chief of police, the other policeman, and some of the little manufacturing town's foremost business men, among whom were a millionaire and the presidents and cashiers of a couple of the banks, played volunteer extra parts in some of the scenes.

Winsted is old, conservative and proper, but it does not despise publicity for commercial reasons, and moreover, it took a distinct liking to the picture players; therefore LeVino and his director, Hugh Reticker, were privileged to pick their locations wherever they saw them. If factory work or street traffic interfered with the company's operations, the intruding factions suspended action.

The townspeople's admiration and friendship for Mike Donlin, too, must be accredited in part for this hospitality. Before Donlin had been in town two days all knew him, whom they had previously known only through the newspapers, to be jolly, a hard worker, and an all-around "regular" fellow. An enthusiastic follower of the company's doings informed one of the

But to forget for a moment the conditions which made the filming of "Right Off the Bat" possible and pleasant—Donlin Day, advertised from Springfield to New Haven as the day on which one could not only enjoy a cracking good baseball game between the Winsted and Meriden teams, but could also see moving pictures actually being made on the field, turned out to be ideal in every way. The sun, evidently ashamed of having been supplanted by rain on the four previous days, beamed forth big and joyous. So did the countenances of LeVino and Reticker and Cameramen Henry Bredeson and C. W. Van Ranst. W. E. Shallenberger, president of the Arrow Film Corporation, who, with Mrs. Shallenberger, Mr. Van Ranst and two trade paper representatives autoed up from New York for the occasion, also appreciated the sun's victory and smiled in unison.

The field gates opened at 1 o'clock, and from then until 1:30 the people from Winsted and its neighboring towns streamed through the gates, determined to see the first turn of the camera crank. Those who knew said that the grand stand and bleachers on July 24 held more people than ever before in the history of the grounds. Shortly before 1:30, the time set for the beginning of things, Mike Donlin and the members of the Winsted and Meriden teams, who were his guests at dinner at the hotel, started for the field, the members of the nines as anxious to take part in the pictures as the spectators were to see them.

From 1:30 until 3:20 the ballplayers pitched, batted, fielded, and submitted to close-ups before the camera. Others of the cast which, besides Mike Donlin, includes Claire Mersereau, Rita Ross Donlin, Charles Mather, George Henry, Fan Bourke, Mabel Wright, Thornton Friel, George Sullivan, J. Arthur O'Brien, Frank Frayne, Jr., Frances Walton and Mrs. William Taylor, were seated on the players' bench and in the grand stand and were the subjects of the camera's scrutiny every now and then.

One of the picture's big scenes is of Mike's winning the game by a spectacular dash from third base to the home plate, followed by a thrilling slide to safety. This registered on the film, the game proper began. Mike Donlin played right field on the Winsted nine, and got everything that came into his territory. Every time he came up to bat he was greeted like the great Casey. But Mike did not strike out; therefore the applause and "'at a boy, Mike," increased instead of diminished as in Casey's case. But like the latter, had Mike ever struck out, an idol would have been smashed. Van Ranst had his camera trained on the players, and here and there took parts of the game.

The finished picture should be refreshing and full of the unusual—because the action in its scenes is. The story is of a youth who falls in love with his employer's daughter, is kidnaped just before the factory's big game, and, through his sweetheart's efforts, arrives in time to lead the team to victory, winning the game and the girl. A Giant scout happens to be present at the game and secures Mike for McGraw. John J. McGraw of the New York Giants will take a small part in the picture.

Although baseball figures prominently in the big scenes, "Right Off the Bat" is not strictly a baseball story. It contains nothing pertaining to the inside workings of a baseball club, nor is there anything technical in it. Telephones, automobiles and pistols, almost necessities in present day dramas, play no part in this picture. It is a play that anyone, whether interested in baseball or not, will be able to understand and enjoy.

SELIG'S "THE ROSARY" WINS HIGH PRAISE FROM N.Y. THEATER MANAGER

A. E. Hamilton, president of the Hamilton Amusement Company, proprietors of the big Hamilton theater in Yonkers, N. Y., is now an ardent booster for V-L-S-E, owing to the unprecedented crowds that were attracted to his theater by "The Rosary." Mr. Hamilton says that this feature is the best drawing card he has ever booked.

"The Rosary" was first shown at the Hamilton theater on July 12 and 13. The first night the former house record was equaled and the attendance on the second day broke all house records. Mr. Hamilton, in a letter to Mr. Partridge, New York branch manager, says that on this occasion he could not begin to get all the people in the theater and that even the car lines in front of the house were blocked at 9:30 o'clock in the evening by people waiting for the second show.

On July 20 Mr. Hamilton re-booked this feature. At the very first showing the house was crowded and people were standing in line waiting for the second show.

Speaking of this feature and the V-L-S-E program in general, Mr. Hamilton says: "I want to congratulate you for having such a drawing card on the V-L-S-E program, and hope you will have more that will prove equally good. . . . It got me the cash, and along in September, or the early part of October, I will give you a re-booking for another two days, and I am sure I can do equally well at the third showing, in the cooler weather, as I have done in the earlier showings."

Adam Kessel, Jr., C. O. Baumann and Charles Kessel left Los Angeles on July 27. After a few days in San Francisco they will return to New York City, where the distributing plans of the newly organized Triangle Film Corporation will be carried out under their supervision. During their stay in Los Angeles they have been the guests of Mack Sennett, managing director of the Keystone Film Company and an officer of the Triangle Corporation.

Through error, the advertisement of this week's Lubin releases contains "A Midnight Mix-Up," to be released August 17. Instead, the release for that date is a split reel, "The Dead Letter," a comedy, and "Persistent Dalton," a cartoon comedy.

One of Iowa's Prettiest Theaters

THE PLAZA OF WATERLOO

ONE of Iowa's most beautiful theaters is the Plaza, located at Waterloo, and owned and managed by A. G. Bryant.

Reading the signs of the times in the photoplay world and following the policy of the leaders in production of silent drama, Mr. Bryant spared no expense in building and equipping his theater. Everything is of the best, both in materials and workmanship. The ideas embodied in the construction and equipment are the latest. But over all, modern ideas expensive materials and thorough workmanship, is the mark of perfect taste.

Mr. Bryant ascribes most of the credit for the beauty of the Plaza to Mortimer Cleveland, the architect. Together they visited many of the newest motion picture theaters in the larger cities and studied the trend of theater construction for the houses devoted exclusively to motion pictures. The task of combining the new ideas in a way both practical and beautiful was Mr. Cleveland's, and the opinion of visitors to the Plaza is that he has met unqualified success in its accomplishment.

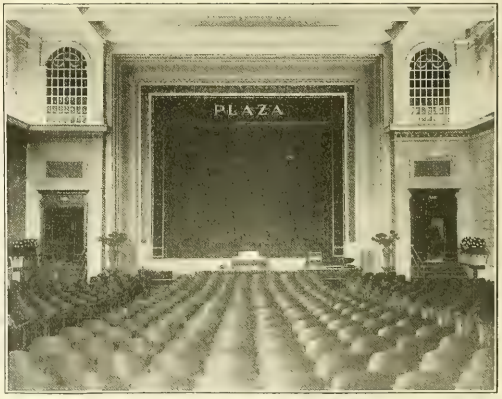
In no detail does the theater appear gaudy. It appeals to the person of discriminating tastes and soothes in its absence of jarring mixtures of styles and its lack of flashy adornment.

In entering the Plaza, the amusement seeker is first struck by the color scheme followed in the lobby. Warm tints of ivory and brown in the walls harmonize with the red tile of the floor, while the ceiling is beamed and decorated with a rich Egyptian design. On the right is the ticket window. There, as elsewhere in the theater, the latest devices are installed to contribute to the expediency of ticket selling.



The foyer is reached through six glass paneled doors. To the right and left are the aisles leading into the auditorium. On one side are retiring rooms and on the other a door opens into the office of the manager. From the foyer, also, there are stairways which lead to the two loges, furnished with comfortable chairs and designed especially for theater parties. These loges will take the place of boxes which have been adjudged impractical in theaters devoted to motion pictures and are conspicuous by their absence at the Plaza.

Lobby of the Plaza Theater, Waterloo, Ia.

Perhaps more care was given by Mr. Cleveland to the decoration of the auditorium than to any part of the work and the result is an interior that is said to be the equal of any in the country in both theaters devoted to the legitimate and the film drama. The side walls are finished to resemble garden walls, to a line two-thirds of the distance to the ceiling. Surmounting this is a series of panels each with a different landscape. These panels, eleven in number, were executed in the Italian style by F. H. Lundahl, of Davenport.

The note of deep green which is carried throughout the decorations of the house is more noticeable at the front of the auditorium, where the curtain is green as are the drapings about the proscenium arch. On either side are exits above which are the organ lofts.

Fundamental Principles

TRANSFORMED BY FEATHERSTONE

LOCAL CENSORSHIP

REMEMBER also that this nation and its institutions are founded on something bigger and broader than personal privilege. There is a spirit of justice and righteousness abroad in the land, and it exists for the very purpose of curbing any abuses of the blessings of liberty which make us so much better off than the dwellers in other lands. Freedom may be a precious privilege, but it has its price which must be paid in full, otherwise our enjoyment of it will surely be curtailed. The price to be paid is simply that we assume and discharge the obligations that freedom imposes, and these include the guaranty that in the exercise of our freedom, we refrain from doing anything that abridges the freedom of others.

In the last analysis this is seen to have a much deeper meaning than shallow thinkers have been wont to give to it. Real freedom is seen to be the right to expand and progress along the most direct and promising route, and the most harmful abuse of freedom is to interfere with expansion and progress.

Here we are again, fact to face with the pictures, for just in proportion as they are potent to inspire and cheer, so have they power to blast.

SURE CURE FOR CENSORSHIP

Before resuming consideration of the physical principles upon which the picture industry is based, we will try to formulate some useful conclusions as to the real causes behind the present agitation for and against censorship of the pictures. We shall also try to point out a logical remedy for troublesome criticism, in the hope that those most vitally interested may unite to make censorship unnecessary.

It is natural that those in the business should be jealous of their privileges, especially when some outsider undertakes to regulate those privileges, and as usual makes a bungle of it.

MISUNDERSTANDINGS

The whole trouble is the result of misunderstandings which arise from a difference of viewpoints. The average censor and the average producer, as well as the exhibitor, are all agreed that the public should be given a full money's worth of entertainment, and that every show should be intensely interesting, whether directly instructive or not. They also agree that it is better to show truth than error, but it has proven exceedingly difficult to determine just what is true and what is not.

"Truth" is very much like food which ordinarily is wholesome, whereas "knowledge" may be likened to all foods, good, bad and indifferent. Even good food must be partaken of moderately, and preceded by an appetite and followed by proper digestion, or it may cause more harm than good. Then there are some good foods which some people cannot and should not eat at all. This does not refer to foods which are essentially poison, but to differences in people.

With mental food, and especially motion pictures, the people get it into their minds without any reference to whether they want it or need it or can digest it. It is simply thrown at them and they couldn't dodge if they wanted to, and of course they never do.

OUR OMNIVEROUS OPTICS

Their eyes eat up with equal avidity the well-turned romance and the raw suggestions, the delicate situations and the coarse humor. One has no chance at all to become a connoisseur while being stuffed indiscriminately with an unpremeditated mixture of everything from soup to nuts.

Perhaps the censor is a vegetarian and would like to cut meat out of the bill of fare. This would not cause much of a difficulty, because most people want meat and would get it in spite of the censor. More likely his objections would be confined to overseasoned and indigestible foods, and such other things as are positively unwholesome. Here is a real difficulty, and if those who dish up the victuals and feed them to the half-starved public do not have a little care, the people may be compelled to look to the censor for protection.

Before any definite progress can be made toward eliminating the censor from the motion picture industry several things must be done.

First we must know the conditions, including the principles involved, and the rights of everybody concerned. Then we must know where we stand in relation to the other factors in interest, so that all moves may be made consistently and effectively.

VESTED RIGHTS.

At the very start you are likely to receive a jolt when you are informed that, no matter how much you have at stake, even though your investment may run into the millions, and you are otherwise primed for keen disappointment, you simply haven't got any rights at all, unless you refrain from violating in the slightest degree the far greater right of the people to have their entertainment just 100 per cent decent.

Most of you, moreover, have already made money out of all proportion to the energy and capital invested, and where did the money come from? It has come in the most liberal and grateful fashion and almost directly from the people. Never, in fact, have the people respondid so enthusiastically to the offerings of a new industry, and lest you forget it in a greedy scramble for more, please be reminded that according to the law of equivalents, whatever has been taken from the people in excess of what has been earned by the producers and exhibitors, still belongs to the people. By all standards of ethics and equity you hold the "unearned increment" in trust for them, and should you prove false to your trust and fail to return to them a full equivalent in wholehearted, clean-handed service, they are going to get it out of you somehow, if they have to put a bone-head censor in every town.

It is precisely this sense of trusteeship, of responsibility, of recognized duty, if you will, that is going to put the motion picture industry on bed-rock. It has had a merry, dizzy time on the shifting sands of easy money, but conditions are changing very rapidly, and the hydra-headed censor is only one of the signs of the times.

What is more, you simply can't get out of the responsibility if you should want to. You have bit off a great big chunk, and now you have to chew it. You have jumped right in the great ethical ocean, alongside the school and the church, and you are so numerous that your swimming is making some commotion. Now you will have to show class, or get out, or drown. Otherwise the censor will get you.

THE INDUSTRY IS YOUNG.

One tremendous advantage enjoyed by this industry is its youth. It has no precedents to hamper its growth. No musty customs, no narrow dogmas, no political affiliations, no ancient organization to set a limit to worthy achievements. In short there is practically nothing to the industry but opportunity, as is amply proven every day by the ease with which a newcomer can equip a studio, and begin "producing"(?). The established producers find that about all they have to show for their investment is experience and reputation, outside of the few millions in studios, etc., practically all of which have been paid for out of profits.

In fact it is opportunity that has been capitalized by all the promoters in the game. Opportunity for what? Opportunity to supply a mind-hungry and heart-hungry people, a hundred million sure-pay customers, with the best the market affords, at so much a meal, cash in advance. Viewed as a business, the game is so direct and simple that it is no wonder it has attracted many investors and so-called business men of ultra-commercial type, who know more about rebates than responsibilities, and who never will be able to train their sordid aspirations to see anything higher than dividends.

Let such keep out of the producing end of the business, for they will do less harm if they are only running an exchange or exhibiting pictures which have been made and approved by others with sane ideas and wholesome ideals. As long as the making of money is the sole end and aim of any type or class, that type and class has got to be kept out of that part of the industry which determines what shall be sent down the line to be served up to the people. The next best thing is to put such restrictions on their activities that they can do no harm. Otherwise you must get along with the censor the best you can.

PERSONAL PRIVILEGE.

It is an old story that people only partly familiar with the spirit of American institutions are apt to mistake freedom for license to do about anything they please, but it is rather surprising to read about American producers and exhibitors objecting to censorship on the ground that it interferes with their plans to make money, just as if the censor had it in for them, and was bound to take away some precious personal privilege guaranteed by the constitution.

As stated above, the rights of the people come first, and whatever rights the producer and exhibitor may have are conveyed by the people who pay for the whole show, and it doesn't make any difference how much bigger the dividends might be if all criticism could be done away with.

THE PRICE OF FREEDOM.

Personal privilege is one of the blessings which freedom bestows, but like everything else it must be paid for. The price is that we assume and discharge the obligations that freedom imposes, and these include the guarantee that in the exercise of our freedom we must refrain from doing anything that may abridge the freedom of others.

Real freedom is the untrammeled right to expand and progress along the most direct and promising route, and the most harmful abuse of freedom is to interfere with expansion and progress. Of course it is difficult to make any hard and fast rules to govern what pictures might or might not be injurious, but it is not nearly so hard as many would have us believe, to weed out the really harmful ones.

Regardless of what our philosophy or religion or other preconceived notions may be, it may be assumed that there are things which at the present time the average audience should not be permitted to see. You may have outgrown Puritanism and all narrow ideas of personal liberty, but if your are a twentieth century American there are many things that you do not want to have forced into the minds of the members of your family.

It may be all right to view a murder if it can be shown with proper setting and sufficient explanation and elucidation of the whys and wherefores and the consequences, but that is a very different thing from forcing into the minds and souls of immature observers either the bare fact and hideous details of a brutal murder, or, what is worse, the successful, not to say glorified culmination of a burglary or murder plot.

If the pictures are not to be curbed, then they must be faultlessly managed. Of themselves they may be good or bad. In proportion as they are potent to inspire and cheer, so have they power to blast.

They can build up and they can destroy. They are like literature in that they deal with thoughts and ideals, only they deal much more directly and more powerfully. Their many-pointed shafts of light go straight to the hearts of the eager and the hungry; they are mingled of love and hate, of wit and pathos, of travel and adventure, of strife and achievement.

Here surely is enough for hungry souls, without adding the poisons of indecency and degradation. And when it comes to the manner of serving, many a true and wholesome story can be shorn of its helpfulness and made positively harmful by inelegant or inartistic presentation.

Who, then, is to decide what is fit and what is not? The right answer is, unfortunately, a wish rather than a statement of fact. It is that the producers themselves shall continue to completion the magnificent work of self-censorship which most of them have carried on from the start, and that they may unite to drive from the industry the unscrupulous and unprincipled before the latter shall have brought on a reaction of ultra-strict and unwise local censorship.

Let there be no self-satisfaction or mutual congratulation as long as it is possible for a single producer to so much as start a single such print on its long journey of destruction, for before it has made its return it will have visited enough places to inoculate the entire country, not only with its particular kind of disease, but with a loathing, on the part of self-respecting and right-thinking people, that will affect the entire industry.

Remember, lastly, that we are new comers and our record is in the making. We have not the long established reputation of the stage to carry us over any isolated violations of the rules of propriety. It has been a wonderful record so far. May it become and remain spotless.

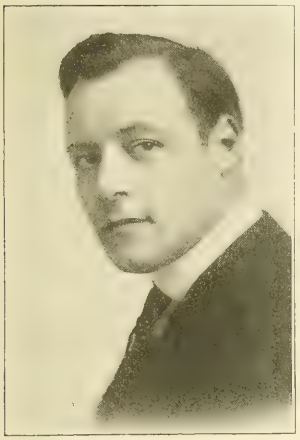
YOUNG MAJESTIC STARS ARE DISTRIBUTING STAGE PROPERTY



In "Providence—and the Twins," a Majestic production, paper dolls play a prominent part, as also do twins. The twins and the paper dolls are intimately associated through a paper bag containing one thousand dollars, which is in danger of being stolen. The twins take the money and substitute their paper dolls.

When "Providence—and the Twins" was filmed, two children new to the screen art of acting, yet of theatrical families and possessed of unusual natural ability, were assigned to play the twins. They were Beulah Burns and Ninon Fovieri. Before the twins were set to work a number of scenes in which the adults alone appear were worked over. The paper dolls, which had been especially prepared for photographic purposes, were safe in a corner of the room on a table. Finally, everything was in readiness for the twin scenes, when Director Siegmann discovered that not only the twins, but also the paper dolls, were missing. A search by his aides disclosed that the twins were leaning far out of a window in a remote corner of the building and had passed their paper dolls to several tattered little children without.

HAROLD LOCKWOOD

It was a big day for Harold Lockwood, American leading man, who has won signal success by his portrayals of the young Yankee millionaire in "The Lure of the Mask," and as Harold Hazard in "The Secretary of Frivolous Affairs," Mutual Masterpictures produced by the American Film Manufacturing Company, when he returned to his Brooklyn home with his college diploma, ribbon and all, carefully stored away in his suit case. And it was a big day for his proud father, too, for he had already decided upon his son's future. Harold was to enter upon a career in an exporting house with which Lockwood, Sr., was connected. But the father had decided without consulting his son, as subsequent developments demonstrated to the satisfaction of both.

Harold Lockwood.

Always a close student of the stage, young Lockwood had determined to enroll himself in the ranks of the players. Therefore, he was not the least disheartened when a manager offered him a place in the back row of the chorus of a traveling company. Lockwood eagerly accepted, for he knew that before long he would work himself to the front row and then into a part of his own. At the close of the season, he was an experienced player and the following year accepted engagements under the Frohman and Shubert managements. Then he tried the two-a-day, and, after a successful tour, returned to New York, where he met Edwin S. Porter, then part owner of the Rex Company, who persuaded Lockwood to try his hand at motion picture work. Lockwood made a success of it from the very start, and later left the Rex for the Nestor, for whom he played dramatic leads for several years. Then followed engagements with the New York Motion Picture Corporation, the Selig Polyscope Company and the Famous Players. The American studios next claimed him, and he has been there ever since.

The Minusa Cine Products Company, manufacturers of the Minusa screen, have gotten out a clever little pamphlet which is called "The Minusa Minstrel."

some bricks fell from the crater of it leaving a hole and necessitating repairs by an expert. A man was brought from Chicago, and when he had made fast his scaffolding on the dizzy height Harris Gordon and John Lehnberg climbed up to do a scene from a Thanhouser release, "The Revenge of the Steeple-Jack." In the course of the action there is a scuffle and to the horror of Director Sullivan and Mignon Anderson, waiting below, Lehnberg was seen to trip and fall. Gordon was paralyzed with fright and reached for him desperately, but it was unnecessary, for the falling man's foot caught on a plank and only his great strength in using it for leverage enabled him to pull himself back to safety. He sustained severely wrenched ligaments.

It is this story, by Lloyd Lonergan, which was featured for a week in serial illustrations in the New York Evening World.

ARTISTIC HOUSE ORGAN

Motography is in receipt of a copy of the house organ of the Majestic theater at Grand Junction, Colo., called The Movie Fan, and it is a bit surprising to note the interesting little sheet which the Majestic manager is able to publish weekly. It is prepared in newspaper form, with the standard newspaper heading, and contains stories and items of real interest, announcing the plays soon to appear at the Majestic, and the players who enact the principal roles in them. It seems safe to say the playgoers of Grand Junction are unusually fortunate in having a publication of this kind in their midst, which keeps them constantly informed regarding coming attractions, and the favorites of the screen whom they are to see. Motography wishes to congratulate the management upon the newsy character of the sheet, and to wish it every success.

COLONIAL AND STUDEBAKER THEATERS SECURED BY TRIANGLE

The Triangle Film Corporation which inaugurates its new service of de luxe multiple reel features from such producers as D. W. Griffith, Thomas H. Ince and Mack Sennett in the best and largest theaters of the country at $2.00 prices early in September, last week secured booking arrangements with the firm of Jones, Linick & Schaefer, by which the Triangle productions will appear exclusively in the Colonial and Studebaker theaters of Chicago.

"The Birth of a Nation," which is now nearing the beginning of its fourth month in Chicago, will be transferred from the Illinois theater, where it is at present running, to the Colonial on Sunday, August 22, the present Paramount policy of the Colonial being terminated August 16, thus permitting a brief interval in which to renovate and redecorate the theater. Norman Fields, at present manager of the Colonial theater, will continue in charge of the house, and the same $2.00 prices will prevail as during the run at the Illinois.

The Metro pictures running at the Studebaker will give way to the new Griffith-Ince-Sennett productions on September 15, and from that date onward the Triangle Film Corporation will use the big Michigan avenue house for the debut of its attractions, though Louis J. Jones will remain as manager of the Studebaker and both the Studebaker and the Colonial will continue to be known as Jones, Linick & Schaefer houses.

VISITED SAN DIEGO FAIR

Edward (Komic) Dillon and his famous company of Komic funmakers are back at the Hollywood studios again, after a vacation trip to the exposition at San Diego, Cal., where, according to all concerned, borrowing an expression from a celebrated explorer, ex-president and foe of mollycoddles, they had a "bully" time. Headed by Director Dillon and the popular Fay Tincher, the party—nine strong—saw everything worth seeing in San Diego, rid themselves of their surplus cash, and then took train for Hollywood. There they are now engaged in the filming of several new comedies that promise to be bigger laugh getters than any of their predecessors.

General Manager Gasnier of Pathe has just returned from a short vacation which he spent in company with twenty-five fellow members of the Pump Club, a social organization of well known Jersey City politicians. The party went in motor cars from Jersey City to Lake George.

Com. J. Stuart Blackton Lends His Fleet

BOATS TO ACT AS AUXILIARY COAST DEFENSE

FOLLOWING the motor boat races which are to be held the second week in August, Commodore J. Stuart Blackton, owner of a fleet of the fastest motor boats in the world, has arranged to have the craft placed in dry dock and work will immediately be started to armor them. It is the intention of Commodore Blackton to have his fleet act as an auxiliary coast defense in connection with the peace through preparedness movement. The present war in Europe has shown that the only method of overcoming submarine warfare is by having armored motor boats, which are so fast that they can outsail torpedoes and are able to outmaneuver, attack and sink submarines, and in other ways make it possible for peaceful shipping to operate. Commodore Blackton is noted for the fact that he aided in designing his present craft, and the movement on his part is regarded as significant.

J. Stuart Blackton

Acting with Commodore Blackton is Hudson Maxim, the inventor of high explosives, who is also on Thomas A. Edison's board in connection with an increased navy. It would require only a very few boats of this kind to keep the entire coast front free from submarines. It is possible to operate these with crews of from three to five men. Commodore Blackton has decided to submit his present plans to the United States Navy Board.

"These boats can be built very rapidly and are one of the most feasible means of rapidly ending our present state of unpreparedness and inadequate defenses," asserted Commodore Blackton, in discussing this matter. "I have studied the situation very carefully, and from my own experience with motor boats I would say that almost any one of my present craft could successfully operate against any number of U boats such as now infest the waters about the British Isles. This move on my part is not directed against any particular country, but is solely to prevent a foreign country from invading this country. It is merely a defensive move, and not an offensive.

"I have discussed this matter with many of the foremost naval authorities and they are thoroughly agreed with me that this is the best move that possibly can be made."

Further Preparations Made for Carnival

JOE HUMPHREYS MADE MASTER OF CEREMONIES

THE New York Motion Picture Exhibitors' League has placed Joe Humphreys in charge of the ceremonies for the big carnival and field day to be held at Brighton Beach, August 21. Joe Humphreys is an ideal master of ceremonies and is recognized the country over as an expert in not only the running of such an event but he can produce ideas for comical stunts, contests and races, faster than they can be absorbed. He has officiated at most of the large events of this character which have been held hereabouts during the past ten years and has become an expert in athletic matters generally. He is now busy gathering in the prominent photoplayers, and discovering their latent powers in preparation for their entry in the various contests.

The various committees in charge of the many details of the big event are hard at work and leaving no stone unturned in order to make the affair a record breaker. Interest in its success is by no means confined to greater New York. Already many letters are coming in from other parts expressing best wishes, etc. William Sweeney, vice-president of the Chicago Exhibitors' League, writes that a delegation of Chicago exhibitors are preparing to come for the Field Day gathering and J. P. Masters, proprietor of five theaters, in Kentucky, will be on hand with a representation of exhibitors. An effort is being made to bring Charlie Chaplin here for the day and Samuel Trigger, general chairman, says he will go to California if necessary, and bring Charlie back with him.

The League wants again to call attention to the fact that this carnival is of interest and concern to the trade generally and on its success depend the funds so much needed to combat the proposed drastic censorship laws and other laws adverse to the best interest of the trade. The children's admission law and the standee question need revision and the question of film transportation requires earnest attention.

The photoplayers are exhibiting great interest in the carnival and are already lining up for entry in the various events: Edith Storey of the Vitagraph Company has issued a challenge to any other lady photoplayer for a horse back race and a challenge comes from King Baggot for the running broad jump. When at Christian Brothers College in St. Louis, King Baggot was some jumper. Guy Coombs, leading man of the Kalem Company was at one time instructor in swordsmanship in Washington, D. C., and he offers to meet any moving picture actor in a broad sword combat. He has also made entry for the hundred yard dash. Anita Stewart and Earle Williams of the Vitagraph Company will judge the public dancing contest and will take part in the dancing contest among photoplayers. Arthur Ashley, the well known Vitagraph and Thanhouser player, is the first name entered in the automobile race.

A splendid program is in the process of making and the League wishes to extend invitation to all photoplayers to come forward and make entry for some sort of contest.

Send communications to Motion Picture Exhibitors' League, 110 West 40th street, New York City.

All the professional scenario writers are requested to submit scenarios for a 600-foot comedy. A prize, to be determined later, will be given to the writers of the six best stories. Each story should be written so that it will have several scenes in which the carnival crowd at Brighton Beach will be used. They should also be limited to not more than two or three interior scenes, but may have as many exteriors as needed.

These stories will be acted by professionals before the grand stand. There will be six directors at work at one time at different points along the track. Incidentally there will be a prize stage setting contest for the scenery handlers. At the blow of the whistle six sets of scenery experts from six separate motion picture studios will start unloading furniture vans containing complete stage settings and will put them together on the track which is as flat as a floor. The judges will decide this contest according to speed.

The directors will then begin their work, but their work will not be judged until evening. By that time the pictures will have been developed and printed. The titles, which are to be made in advance, will then be inserted. In the evening these competitive productions will be exhibited in the ball room between dances, and the judges will be the audience. A handsome prize will be awarded to the winning director.

Motion pictures of the Eastland steamship disaster in Chicago, which first were presented in Minneapolis by the Northwest Weekly, caused a clash between the acting mayor of Minneapolis and the police, and friction between St. Paul censors, the municipal administration and certain daily newspapers.

SAMUEL LONG, KALEM'S PRESIDENT, CLAIMED BY DEATH LAST WEEK

Death suddenly claimed Samuel Long, president of the Kalem Company, 235 W. Twenty-third street, New York City, at his home in the Clarendon apartments, Eighty-sixth street and Riverside Drive, New York, on Wednesday, July 28, thus removing from the moving picture industry one of its most influential leaders. Mr. Long's demise was directly traceable to an attack of typhoid fever which developed suddenly about July 4, though death itself is said to be due to a blood clot which formed in his lungs and which caused him to grow steadily weaker. Up to the day before his death he was in remarkably good spirits and those in charge of the case felt reasonably certain he would recover, as he was but forty years of age and possessed of remarkable vitality. Mr. Long was a southerner by birth and received his early education in Baltimore, his favorite studies being chemistry and mechanical engineering, in both of which fields he was noted. The American Mutoscope and Biograph Company claimed his services in 1897, when he moved to New York City, and a year later he became superintendent of the Biograph factory in Hoboken, New Jersey, remaining with the concern for about ten years, and being directly responsible for many of the technical improvements made.

Samuel Long.

He became a director of the General Film Company upon its formation and for a time acted as treasurer of that organization. Upon the organization of the Kalem Company in 1907, Mr. Long was elected to the office of president of the concern, which post he held at the time of his death, though his chief interest lay in the mechanical, rather than the marketing and executive ends of the industry. The deceased was admired and respected by all of his associates and is said to have been without an enemy in the entire industry. He possessed many sterling traits of character that caused him to be held in high esteem by his associates and his passing will be deeply felt by the whole industry.

He is survived by a widow and two brothers. When the funeral was held from the Clarendon apartments on Friday afternoon, July 30, the honorary pall-bearers were: J. J. Kennedy of the General Film Company; H. N. Marvin of the Patents Company; W. N. Selig and J. A. Berst of the Selig Polyscope Company; J. Stuart Blackton, W. T. Rock and A. E. Smith of the Vitagraph Company; Siegmund Lubin of the Lubin Company and George K. Spoor of the Essanay Company. Officials of Kalem Company were the active pallbearers. The body was laid to rest in Woodlawn Cemetery, New York City.

"HUMAN CARGOES" PROMISES AN ABUNDANCE OF THRILLS

A public which has been educated to expect unusual motion picture drama from the mind and hand of the producer and author of "Traffic in Souls" and "Ireland a Nation" will look forward with extraordinary interest for Walter McNamara's next production, "Human Cargoes." This latest offering, which is now being made for the Equitable Motion Pictures Corporation, to be released through the World Film Corporation, is being staged at the Equitable's studio in Flushing. The cast is headed by Robert T. Haines, the distinguished actor, whose work in association with Walker Whiteside, Viola Allen, Blanche Bates, Grace George and Mrs. Fiske has won him national recognition. Mr. Haines is supported by Miss Bess Sankey, Miss Isabelle MacGregor, Mrs. Laura Macklan, Mrs. Blanche Davenport, Mrs. Vernon, Miss Hill, Thomas Morrisary, Willis Granger, C. E. Kimball, F. M. McQuirk and William Evans. "Human Cargoes" is a political story. The three principals, Bill Nadden, the son of a laboring man; Mary Miles, the daughter of a city editor, and Victor Brown, the son of a wealthy and unscrupulous politician, are shown first in their early lives, and then as grown young people. Bill, splendid and ambitious, displeases the political ward boss, who plans his destruction. Both young men find themselves in love with the city editor's daughter. In the end the politician's son suffers the very destruction which his father had planned for Bill, and the son of the masses wins the girl he loves. "Human Cargoes" will be more than thrilling picture drama. Its illustration of the ultimate triumph of right over evil will make it as worth while as the other of Mr. McNamara's productions.

CALIFORNIA M. P. TO PRODUCE SIX DRAMAS PER YEAR HEREAFTER

Following immediately upon the production of "Salvation Nell," which has just been completed and is scheduled for release Sept. 1, the California Motion Picture Corporation settled upon a definite policy of issuing six master productions during the coming twelve months, each to be based upon an already famous story of unusual strength and popularity and filmed on the same elaborate scale as "Salvation Nell."

An official of the corporation discussed the plan as follows in a recent interview: "We feel certain that in 'Salvation Nell' we have nearly reached the acme of producing perfection and have consequently set it as a standard below which none of our future pictures are to fall. We have formulated our policy upon a quality rather than a quantity basis. We contemplate giving on an average of at least eight weeks to each of our future features. This will allow us ample time for careful and studied direction and the most minute attention to the all important item of detail.

"The time has clearly come, we believe, when each individual production must stand on its own merit, and the trade mark of either producing or releasing company will not be enough of itself to insure success. The market has been flooded with pictures, the producers of which have seemed to have no desire beyond that of getting out something just good enough to 'get by' with, and to get it out as soon as possible.

"This has been going on too long now, and it does not take a Daniel to see the handwriting on the wall. Our policy henceforward is to produce pictures carefully and without deliberation, our intention being to set a standard, rather than to try to live up to one already promulgated by some one else in the industry."

MANY MOTIOGRAPHS SOLD AS RESULT OF CONVENTION DISPLAY

The Enterprise Optical Manufacturing Company, of Chicago, makers of the Motiograph, had quite an elaborate display of their 1916 Model Motiograph at the National Convention of the M. P. E. L. of A., held at San Francisco, as you will note by the photograph. Their western representative, Edward H. Kemp, had complete charge of the booth and decorations, the booth being draped in black velvet and the lettering done in gold.

The Motograph booth at San Francisco convention

Mr. Kemp reports that all machines consigned to him were sold during the convention and orders taken for a number of others to be shipped direct from the factory. The interest shown by the film manufacturers and exhibitors more than fulfilled his hopes and he was given the privilege of running the official film.

Since the close of the convention the factory states that it has received quite a number of wires to ship machines to film manufacturers, which was due to the exhibit at the convention and especially to the projection which the Motiograph produced in the miniature theater on the convention floor. The factory is now working overtime and hopes to fill orders on this new model machine promptly.

NEW STYLE OF THEATER CHAIR ENABLES EVERY CHILD TO SEE

One of the most recent developments in the motion picture industry is a new chair, the design of Raymond D. Weakley of St. Louis. Theater men are all acquainted with the way in which children make universal nuisances out of themselves by bobbing around from place to place in the effort to see what is going on on the screen, in this way obstructing the view of the people on both sides as well as those behind.

Mr. Weakley's chair will do away with this annoyance of the theater going public and will give the child the square deal to which his entrance fee entitles him. Here follows a description of the Weakly Universal chair which we commend to our readers.

The "Universal chair" differs very little in design and construction from the present opera chair in use for adults. The front two-thirds of the seat portion is bolted to an independent pair of seat rest castings, that are hinged to the forward ends of the regular seat rest castings, as shown in the illustration—the forward part of the adult seat is pulled forward and upward until it stops, then the entire seat is moved toward the back of the chair where it locks automatically in the new position.

This simple movement converts the adult seat, which is 17 inches deep and 15 inches above the floor, to a child's seat 11 inches deep and 24 inches above the floor. The back and seat of the chair is in the same direct proportion to that of the child as the regular opera chair back and seat is in proportion to the adult.

The Universal chair demonstrated. Note the child in the second row who is seated in the normal type of chair and the one in the front row on the Universal chair.

A foot rest is provided in the form of a bar of wood that automatically comes into position when raising the seat. The child in this form of seat is perfectly fitted and seated the same as in our public schools. By pressing the release wire through the hole the seat is released and returns to the position of an adult's chair.

The "Universal chair" puts the children's eyes on the same level as their parents' and in addition to giving the children a square deal, eliminates the nuisance of parents holding children upon their laps, which fact will make the theater installing these "Universal chairs" popular with the family.

The simple method of operating the Universal chair

There is nothing complicated about the construction and the children can raise it into place in the darkened theater or lower it again with ease. Theaters having the regular opera chair in use may change the seat portion of their chairs at little added expense into the "Universal" seat.

The group picture shows how comfortably the boy at 7 is seated upon the "Universal chair," while the girl of 10 years on the regular chair is stretching her neck to see.

Generally the children sit on the arm rest with their feet on the veneer seat. This position of the children is injurious to their nerves and health and results in general dissatisfaction all around.

As about 40% of the theater attendance is children, this form of seat will popularize the moving picture industry as it is designed for the mixed audience.

MARIE CAHILL STARRED IN BROADWAY UNIVERSAL FEATURE

Marie Cahill, known internationally as a queen of comedy, is the star in "Judy Forgot," a Broadway Universal feature. Miss Cahill has had an interesting career. Born in Brooklyn of American parents, she had unusual advantages in becoming the great success which she is today. At an early age her father, realizing the latent talent in the child, sent her to a school where she learned the rudiments of classic and esthetic dancing. This Miss Cahill considers the best beginning towards any career, and still following the advice of a wise parent, Miss Cahill studied languages, arts and the sciences until she was out of her teens. It was after having seen a performance with the well-known Mary Anderson that the future comic opera queen decided to adopt the stage as her life work. Her rise was rapid, and when she married her manager, Daniel V. Arthur, success and stardom followed.

Marie Cahill

Miss Cahill has always been identified with an original brand of comedy entirely her own. It has been her endeavor to "get this over" on the screen in "Judy Forgot," the Broadway Universal feature which is being released on the regular universal program. This play, written by Avery Hopwood, is chock full of humorous situations, which have been cleverly developed for the screen. The famous "wink" which makes all the trouble for Judy and all the fun for the audience, is in full evidence, and so is Miss Cahill's originality and versatility.

Melville Stewart has been engaged to appear in Richard Harding Davis' "The Galloper," to be produced by Donald Mackenzie for Pathe. Melville Stewart has probably created and sung more leading roles in Broadway musical successes than any other man one can readily call to mind.

The Dog in the Manger

MANY in the motion picture industry have found much in the statements recently made by eastern theatrical managers relative to the appearance of their most popular stars in the silent drama, to remind them of the story of the dog who took up a position in the cow's manger, and though he could not himself eat the hay, succeeded in preventing the cow from doing so.

The proud managers of the legitimate, upon discovering that the moving picture magnates could offer sums in excess of that which they were prepared to offer for the services of certain stars, have rushed into print with the declaration that the films are injuring the drawing power and popularity of their stars, and that in the future contracts will be drawn which will prohibit the stage star from entering the picture studios even during the vacation period.

Evidently the managers of the big legitimate attractions have not given the matter careful thought or they must instantly have realized that the Broadway star who has been appearing only in the $2 theaters of the country, by entering the ranks of the motion picture players has increased rather than decreased his popularity; for now he is appearing before as many thousands nightly as he appeared before hundreds when appearing in person on the legitimate stage. In other words his name and face is now known in every village and hamlet the country over, whereas before he was known and appreciated only in the larger cities, and only by a limited number of theatergoers in even those cities.

J. Stuart Blackton of the Vitagraph Company recently summed the matter up in the following succinct fashion:

"How many people in towns of 25,000, 50,000, 75,000, and even 100,000 are familiar with the so-called Broadway stars? Yet every one of them could identify on the street any of the moving picture players. They know them, they are in intimate touch with them, they know their characteristics, their likes, their dislikes, there is very little that escapes them.

"The stand taken by some of the theatrical managers that they will not maintain their contracts with stars who appear in moving pictures will not affect the progress of the one form of amusement that has so far outstripped the others that this last cry is merely a dying gasp on the part of the managers who maintain a position that for years has been a burden and has been more of a restraint than it has been a help. I do not like to charge the theatrical managers with bad faith, but I do say that in attempting to restrain the stars from appearing in the moving pictures they are not only standing in their own way, but are attempting to deprive the public of what legitimately is theirs."

Discussing the same question Samuel Goldfish, executive head of the Lasky Feature Play Company, declared:

"The fact of the matter is, that through the medium of the photoplay, the fame of stars has increased a thousand-fold; persons who never heard of them in great sections of the country—and world, as far as that goes—are now intimate with their art. Ten years ago the legitimate managers objected to their stars entering vaudeville, because, they said, it lessened their value. Now the vaudeville managers are joining the legitimate solons in the cry against the photoplay. In conclusion, I can only ask why managers should object to their players entering a field which they themselves are making every effort to invade?"

So great an actor as Robert Mantell, who within the past fortnight deserted the legitimate stage for the screen, has gone on record as follows: "Within the past two years there have been plenty of good dramatic plays that opened and then closed immediately, which would have run indefinitely ten years ago. The stage has stood still while the motion picture has gone on. The pictures are now occupying the center of the world's stage. They have come to be so great and are so good and so cheap that we of the $2 lot have either to retire or to go in with them. Ten years ago I would have despised even the thought of going into motion pictures, but today they have become so artistic, have increased the value of artistry to such an extent, that I can hardly wait to begin my work on the screen."

Frankly, Mr. Mantell seems to have summed it all up in his expression: "The stage has stood still while the pictures have gone on." For this condition the theatrical managers have only themselves to blame, as they will doubtlss realize sooner or later, and then instead of berating the films and threatening their stars with cancelled contracts in case they appear in the celluloid drama, they will take steps to procure the best stars of the film drama—stars whose popularity is world wide on account of the medium in which they have appeared, for the purpose of featuring them in person on the legitimate stage.

AN IMPERTINENT NUISANCE

NO less a journal than the Saturday Evening Post has recently taken up the cudgel against censorship of motion picture films, and the editorial which the Post published has been read the country over, undoubtedly giving many reformers, uplift workers, and others of that ilk new food for thought. The matter is so pointedly worded that MOTOGRAPHY takes pleasure in reproducing the editorial for the benefit of such of its readers as may have missed that particular issue of the Post. It reads as follows:

"The instinct to look after your neighbor's morals —however unsuccessful you may be in looking after your own—is ineradicable in human nature. If printing were a new art—invented, say, in the nineteenth century—it would undoubtedly be under a comprehensive censorship. There would be a college of censors in the postal department to scrutinize every printed sheet that went through the mails. There would be state censors, whose political activities had been of such nature as to inspire the governor with great faith in their general discretion.

"New York, Chicago and other large cities would have local boards, probably affiliated with the police departments and very zealous in seeing that the minds of the young were not corrupted by printed words which tended to raise doubts of the police department's intelligence and integrity. Recent issues of Chicago newspapers containing information that policemen had been indicted for grafting would have appeared with the corrupting columns carefully blacked over in the Russian manner.

Just a Moment Please

Last week our difficulty lay in filling the space at the end of this column.

But this week it seems to be the top that bothers us.

However with this as a start.

We may be able to reach the middle at least.

And after that it'll be easy sledding.

Elizabeth Lonergan, of the famous Lonergan family of New Rochelle, has called our attention to the fact that a theater in her burg that long boasted a banner reading "Movies as They Should Be," is now bearing an additional legend reading "Closed For the Summer." At that a lot of exhibitors can be found who will believe the New Rochelle manager has the right dope.

SPEAKING OF VACATIONS

From a little note we received from friend Charley in Noo Yawk we were inclined to believe that he envied us our recent trip to Calif., but after reading the account of his outing with LeVino at Winsted, Conn., we are inclined to believe we haven't much on him.

Don't it beat all the way your friends shift about? Barely two weeks ago Don Meaney, then assistant director-general of Universal Film Manufacturing Company's studios at Universal City, Calif., entertained us, and now we understand he is general manager of the Quality Film Company's studios in Los Angeles. Good luck, Don.

Another old pal of ours, Paul Kuhn, who was vacationing at Santa Barbara when we went away, is now we understand in Noo Yawk looking after the Mutual advertising. Hooray for you, Paul.

And little Bert Adler, who was bossing the Smalleys and Madame Pavlowa around the Universal's temporary Chicago studio, as we departed, and whom we promised to look up when we returned, we are told has went away and left us. Call of the bright lights too much to resist, Bert?

Go on, fellers, and good luck go with you. Maybe some of these days we'll hunt up a new job, too.

WELL, WELL, WELL

Vitagraph, the press agent alleges, is soon to produce "Green Stockings." Wonder if that means they're going to make a Kinemacolor production, or do you suppose they'll hand tint 'em?

Anyway it's going to open up an infinite number of new possibilities for the boob exhibitor to attract some attention by billing the picture in conjunction with some other feature attraction whose name, when coupled with that of "Green Stockings," will make the public sit up and take notice.

Suppose for instance he also announces Rex's "One on Mother."

Or American's "Wait and See."

And there are still worse ones.

OUR BURG

Carl Laemmle spent a few Hrs in Our Burg as a guest of the Smalleys, while en route to Noo Yawk last wk.

Several benefit shows was given in the village opry houses last wk the receipts being turned over to the families of Eastland victims.

J. A. Berst, Bill Selig and Geo. Spoor was to Noo Yawk last wk. to attend the funeral of Sam. Long.

F. O. Nielson is to home once more after a biz. visit to the effete E.

Paul Bush is out making a round of the tank towns in the vicinity of Our Burg.

Harry Aitken was lamped on Main St. one day last wk., as busy as two men.

The heavy rains of the past wk. has interfered with the operation of Joe Finn's speeder.

Just as we thought, this brings us.

To the bottom.
Of the line.
At last.

"A Bunch of Keys"

Reviewed by John C. Garrett

THE Essanay Company has chosen for its next V. L. S. E. release a five-reel production of Hoyt's comedy, "A Bunch of Keys." This comedy full of genuine humor and comic situations is to be released on August 9. June Keith is cast as the heroine and John Slavin and William Burress are the other two leads. These three stars were famous as mirth provokers on the speaking stage and are ably supported in this production, which surpasses the famous stage success, by a well chosen cast.

The majority of the scenes are laid in a hotel, in a small country town and with the aid of splendid photography and complete interior settings the scenes are very realistic.

The three Keys girls, Rose and May, who are prim and put on all the airs of country belles, and Teddy, who is the youngest sister and full of mischief, quarrel over a will left by their uncle. He has left the town hotel to them and each one of the girls claims it as her own. Teddy to settle matters writes to Littleton Snaggs, the lawyer who has the will, asking him to come to the town and set matters right.

Lawyer Snaggs receives the letter and after placing it in his pocket goes to call on Matilda Jenkins. While he is there he overhears a messenger tell her that all of her money has been lost, and losing no time Snaggs jumps over the back fence, dropping Teddy's letter, and boards the first train. Matilda, finding Snaggs gone, follows after him. She finds the letter he had dropped and as this tells of his destination, she starts after him in an automobile.

Snaggs arrives at the home of the Keys, and there after disclosing his identity he is warmly greeted by all three of the girls. Just as they are discussing the will, an automobile rushes madly up to the porch and Matilda steps out and immediately throws her arms around poor Snaggs. The lawyer finally persuades the town constable that Matilda is a "nut" and she is carried off to jail.

Snaggs now plans to win the hand of one of the girls and thus get the hotel property. He tells them that their uncle left the property to the one that shall be declared the homeliest by the first drummer that stops at the hotel. They all refuse to enter the contract. Snaggs makes love to Teddy, trying to get her to consent to pose as the ugliest of the daughters.

Grimes, Teddy's suitor, suspects that there is a clause in the will which Snaggs has not read, and so induces the girls to try and get hold of the will, which Snaggs has hidden in the hotel safe. At last Rose and May hit upon a scheme. They get their suitors to disguise themselves and register at the hotel and they dress as foreign women and also register.

Teddy in the meantime dresses as a drummer and comes to the hotel, where she manages to fool old Snaggs. He falls into her trap and bribes her to pick out "Teddy" as the homeliest daughter.

Matilda Jenkins manages to escape and comes directly to the hotel. She makes things warm for Snaggs and while he is trying to get away from her Grimes manages to extract the will from the safe and when the girls see it they find a clause which says that the girls can divide the property equally if they wish to. Matilda drags Snaggs away with her. The "bunch of Keys" and their suitors are left to take possession of the hotel.

"Tides of Time"

MARY NASH, well known both in pictures and on the stage, is starred in the Knickerbocker Star feature release of August 4, "The Tides of Time," a three-part drama based on Poe's famous poem, "Conqueror Worm." Miss Nash portrays a character seen in the five ages of woman, from youth to second-childhood.

The main theme is the visualization of a dream inspired by Poe's poem. In this the man who idolizes gold sees how short-lived is his power and the bitterness which awaits him should he continue his life of avarice. The story is well produced. The wrecking of the boat during the storm is a realistic and thrilling piece of work.

Harmon MacGregor as Edmund Stark and T. Morse Koupal as Leland Grey have important parts and render Miss Nash able support. John Reinhard, Fritz Orlamond, Geo. T. Clark, James Levering and Madge Orlamond complete the cast.

The laborers at Edmond Stark's factory demand better wages. The capitalist refuses to meet their request and the men determine to burn down the plant. Mary, the mother of one of the men, pleads with Stark, but he is relentless. Then showing him a copy of "Conqueror Worm," she asks him what part he is playing in the drama of life. After Mary leaves, Stark, in a dream, reviews his past life.

The son of a wealthy manufacturer he meets Mary when they were both at the age of twenty. At his club he wagers that he will sail aboard the next outgoing steamer with Mary. Believing he intends to marry her the girl elopes with him. The steamer is wrecked in a storm. They are both saved. Stark shows his true intentions. Mary makes her way home and later marries Leland Grey.

Some years later Leland is employed in the factory owned by Stark. He is killed while doing work which his employer has expressly ordered him to do. Finally he sees himself in his second childhood, dying friendless and uncared for; his money is of no avail. And then in eternity he is Upon awakening he begs Mary, who has returned with the workmen, to lead him from his life of unhappiness to her lift of humanity.

"The Exile of 'Bar-K' Ranch"

Reviewed by Neil G. Caward

THE melodramatic love story "The Exile of 'Bar-K' Ranch" will be the American feature release of the Mutual program for Monday, August 9. The story features Vivian Rich and Roy Stewart, Miss Rich appearing as the daughter of Jack Donald, a rancher, and Mr. Stewart as Dave Burton, another rancher and a friend of Burt Towne, who is Milly's sweetheart.

Other popular American favorites such as Jack Richardson, Louise Lester and Walter Spencer appear in the production, which is beautifully photographed and staged amid ranch scenes that are realistic in every particular.

Burt Towne saves the life of Dave Burton when the latter is attacked by Tex, a drunken Mexican, and Dave promises Burt that if the time ever comes when he can assist him he will feel duty bound to do anything in his power for the man who saved his life, little thinking that the time will come when Burt will demand the supreme sacrifice of him. Burt, who loves Milly Donald, the daughter of old Jack Donald, is unable to marry her because she feels it her duty to remain at home to care for her mother, who is an invalid. Later, when the mother dies, Burt again asks Milly's hand in marriage, but this time it is her father who insists that her duty should compel her to remain at home.

Burt is much disappointed at the postponement of his marriage, but finally Milly whispers a secret in his ear that assures Burt that the wedding will have to take place almost immediately. Exultantly he rides off to procure a marriage license, but is seen by Tex, who has never forgiven him for interfering in his quarrel with Dave Burton, and Tex, taking advantage of the opportunity offered him, waylays and kills Burt, though ere Burt dies, he is strong enough to scribble a message to his friend Dave on the outside of the envelope containing the marriage license, writing: "Come and make good with Milly for me, as I cannot."

Burt's riderless horse reaches Milly's cottage, and the girl is frantic when she discovers spots of blood on the saddle. After a talk with her father the latter rides off in search of Burt, and finds the boy dead on the road. When Milly's father returns and learns her secret he drives her from his house, declaring that her sister must never hear her name again.

Though Dave is already engaged to another girl, he resolves to make the sacrifice for Burt when the message is delivered to him, and sets out to find Milly. At her home the angry father explains why his daughter has been driven away, and Dave again sets out to seek her.

Two weeks later he finds the homeless wanderer resting beside the road, and not knowing that she is Milly, the girl he is seeking, he takes her into the shelter of his humble home.

There it is discovered she is about to give birth to a child, and Burt arranges with a neighbor to care for her during her illness. Though Milly and her baby survive the ordeal and apparently find happiness in Dave's company, the busybody gossips of the neighborhood reprove Dave for his friend-

Next day the sheriff turns over to Dave a few possessions left by Burt. In the package Dave finds the marriage

Dave at once offers his hand in marriage to Milly, for long since this time he has discovered that he did not really love the other girl to whom he was engaged.
